I will say to the Senator that I do not think there is any serious question as to the advisability of passing a bill of this kind because the committee considered this matter at the last session of the Congress and we have been considering it for a long period, and this is the deliberate judgment of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. AIKEN. I may say that it was the aim of the Hoover Commission to establish a line of workable authority in each department, from the head of the department down through the department itself, in order that each department might have authority to conduct its own operations, and then in turn be held responsible for the result. It was not expected that the recommendations would be followed to the last detail. The studies were necessarily general in nature, and even members of the Commission itself reserve the right to change their minds about details later on as evidence might develop. I would say that in general the bill does follow the recommendations of the Hoover Commission, although not in every detail.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. The purpose he has outlined was to give authority to the department, and then hold the department responsible. The Secretary of State can be held responsible, but a half dozen subordinates who are vested with statutory powers cannot be held responsible.

Mr. AIKEN. We must hold him responsible for the work of his subordinates.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I certainly welcome this bill, the first one which carries out, at any rate, in some respects, the recommendations of the Hoover Commission. I hope, however, that other reorganization proposals will not follow the committee in this respect. The Hoover Commission recommended the elimination of the consular and the legal advisers and the addition of two additional Under Secretaries of State. The committee added the two additional officers recommended by the Hoover Commission, but the committee also retained the two officers the Hoover Commission wished to eliminate. Now, if we accept the committee's recommendations in that spirit, hereafter there will not be brought about any economy from the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

However, I say I welcome the fact that this is the only move, so far as I know, toward the adoption of the very important recommendations made by that Commission.

I should like to ask the distinguished acting majority leader whether he contemplates bringing up the reorganization bill now on the calendar, which is necessary if we are going to give the President power to submit reorganization plans to carry out the provisions of the Hoover Commission? Has the Senator any plan about bringing up that bill? It seems to me that if we are going to get started with reorganization matters that bill probably ought to have priority over almost every other bill on the calendar today.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, it is easy to say that one bill should have priority over others when one does not have the exact responsibility. But it is our purpose to bring up the reorganization bill. Undoubtedly the policy committee will discuss that next Tuesday. However, we have already agreed that the extension of the reciprocal trade agreements program will be taken up after we have finished with the District of Columbia tax measure. There are many bills on the calendar which probably should have priority, but they may all be of equal priority. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that certainly it is the intention of the leadership to bring up the reorganization bill as soon as possible, but I believe we will have to wait at least until the reciprocal trade agreements program is out of the way, although I can give no assurance that it will immediately follow that.

Mr. TAFT. I recognize the time limit on that bill, but it seems to me there is nothing more important in our present fiscal situation than the reorganization of the Government, to secure some economy in connection with the very large expenses we face. If we are going to get results this year we shall have to start pretty soon, because we will have to pass the bill, and the House will have to pass it. I do not know but that the House has a similar bill on its calendar to be passed. Then the President has the reorganization plans to submit. There is a deadline on those reorganization plans. I think they have to be submitted 60 days before Congress contemplates its adjournment. So, if we are going to do anything with the report of the Hoover Commission, there is a real pressure on us to proceed with the reorganization bill.

Mr. MYERS. I might say to the Senator that the House has already passed a reorganization bill. The President himself at a press conference this week indicated the necessity of enacting such legislation, and I know that the President is anxious that the Senate shall act at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, first I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio that the bill to repeal the tax on margarine should certainly take precedence over any reorganization bill. Certainly that should not be further delayed. But in regard to the bill under consideration I shall not object. I think it is an excellent bill. In fact any bill designed to improve the quality of the State Department is one of the most needed bills on the calendar.

Mr. President, some time ago, in fact, very recently, the Senate passed an authorization for the extension of the ECA. I just read a few moments ago in this afternoon's Star an account of a report on the ECA by the United Nations Commission in Europe. This study has been under consideration for 9 months. This Commission has representation from countries from both sides of the iron curtain, in other words from countries on the west and the east, including ourselves.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to a part of the article and make clear in the RECORD my position as to the ECA and in what respect it is, I think, threatening to become a colossal failure. I read from an Associated Press report from Geneva, Switzerland, as follows:

A United Nations commission contended today that the European recovery program is hurting Europe's economy more than it helps.

The assertion marked a survey report of the UN Economic Commission for Europe.

In 100,000 words the Commission said European nations, striving for an economic come-back, are tripping over their own isolationism, and that the ERP is aggravating the situation.

The Marshall plan, through ERP, pours in money with the avowed intention of helping to integrate European economy; European nations themselves adopt plans to integrate it, but the observable trends are away from integration, the Commission reported.

For lack of such integration, it continued, national economy is disintegrating all over the continent. Prospects for the future are unfavorable, despite a remarkable improvement in industrial production in 1948, it added.

I am not reading all the report. I skip several paragraphs and read as follows:

The report said European industry has recovered with remarkable speed and will soon be as highly developed as if the war had never occurred. But, in spite of this recovery, it held the general economic outlook is poor because of a persistent dollar shortage and the almost total absence of integration of the economic plans of the various European nations.

The point I want to make, Mr. President, is that I endeavored this year and I endeavored last year to induce the ECA and the State Department to try to get the European nations to integrate their political and economic systems. Now here is a report from a United Nations Commission which, if there can be an impartial commission—it is; certainly it ought to be in this field—directly supports the theory I have advanced that unless they get the integration we will have wasted our money.

I think this is extremely important. Everyone knows how much this program is costing. The attitude of the State Department has been that we cannot be concerned with integration, especially political or economic, and they advise the Senate not to accept amendments which would authorize and direct the ECA administration to promote the integration and coordination of these countries. The result in my opinion is going to be exactly as this report indicates it is today, that instead of integrating these countries, it is building up and reinforcing the traditional nationalism in each country, which is bound to be a failure and will result in what this article goes on to say is, that there is no prospect of Europe recovering from the dollar shortage. It says in so many words in another part of the article that there can be no hope really that Europe will be self-sustaining after the ECA ends in 1952, but that they will indefinitely be dependent upon our supplying them with dollars either by way of gifts or by way of loans.

Mr. FULBRIGHT subsequently said: Mr. President, the point I was about to make was that this article emphasizes the point that, in spite of the very optimistic reports that were made by the ECA, and especially the State Department—the Secretary of State in particular—that this program was to end in 1952, and that this country would be relieved from the necessity of supplying anywhere from three to five billion dollars a year to balance the dollar deficits of the European countries, that is in no way probable, the way this program is being administered. It confirms the report of the participating countries, made as an interim report about last December.

I think there is no longer any doubt in responsible circles that there is no real likelihood of a balance of payments to this country by 1952.

The basic defect, according to the report of the United Nations Commission, which, as I said, spent 9 months analyzing the European economic situation, is the lack of integration of those countries, in other words, the failure to remove the barriers which exist among the several countries on the continent of western Europe. I think it is absolutely the worst possible policy, in view of these facts, for our Government, especially the State Department, to pursue the course it is now promising. I realize that it is not the Senate's primary responsibility to formulate this policy. Under our Constitution and our traditions the Executive ought to take the initiative in formulating this sort of policy, and then advise and consult us; but in the absence of any initiative on the part of the State Department I think the Senate ought to give the Department a little advice as to what is so obviously necessary in carrying out this program. I think it is an extremely serious matter, because if the next 2 or 3 years go by and we end up in 1952 in the condition which this article indicates, which I firmly believe will be the case, except for having bought a short period of peace we shall, on the whole, have wasted our money.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire article, a part of which I have read, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks for the information of the Senate. I hope the Members of the Senate will give it careful consideration.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ERP HURTING EUROPE, UN GROUP CHARGES—NATIONS TRIPPING OVER OWN ISOLATIONISM, SURVEY REPORT SAYS

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND, May 6.—A United Nations commission contended today that the European recovery program is hurting Europe's economy more than it helps.

The assertion marked a survey report of the UN Economic Commission for Europe. Nations from both sides of the iron curtain constitute the commission, created in 1947 by the UN Economic and Social Council to coordinate emergency organizations working to rehabilitate Europe.

In 100,000 words the Commission said European nations, striving for an economic come-back, are tripping over their own isolationism, and that the ERP is aggravating the situation.

INTEGRATION FAILING, REPORT SAYS

The Marshall plan, through ERP, pours in money with the avowed intention of helping to integrate European economy. European nations themselves adopt plans to integrate it, but the observable trends are away from integration, the Commission reported.

For lack of such integration, it continued, national economy is disintegrating all over the Continent. Prospects for the future are unfavorable, despite a remarkable improvement in industrial production in 1948, it added.

The Commission said a long-term program of American capital investment, much like the way Britain financed economic development overseas in the nineteenth century, is the only solution it can see. Increased trade between the iron-curtain countries of eastern Europe and western European areas also would be helpful, it said.

Eastern European countries, the report said, because of American restrictions on imports to them, are the only ones in Europe having a favorable trade balance with the United States.

DOLLAR SHORTAGE BLAMED

Europe will remain dependent on American capital for many years, the survey report said.

The report said European industry has recovered with remarkable speed and will soon be as highly developed as if the war had never occurred. But, in spite of this recovery, it held the general economic outlook is poor because of a persistent dollar shortage and the almost total absence of integration of the economic plans of the various European nations.

The dollar shortage remains Europe's major economic problem, the survey concluded. It reported, however, the complementary problem of an American dollar surplus has as grave implications for the United States.

To solve the double problem, the survey said, the United States probably will have to "continue for many years to assist the outside world through investment loans in much the same way as Britain financed capital development to the rest of the world throughout the nineteenth century."

The most desirable course would seem to be for the United States to schedule a major program of capital investment abroad for specific development projects staggered over a period of time."

ALL PHASES OF ECONOMY REVIEWED

The survey reviewed all aspects of Europe's economic life during 1948 and the prospects for the future.

The survey made these observations:

1. Industrial production in Europe rose by 16 percent and agricultural production by 12 percent during 1948.

2. In the Soviet Union, industrial production rose by 27 percent and the grain harvest returned to the prewar level.

3. The productivity of labor rose about 9 percent.

4. There was substantial improvement in the rate of capital formation, and the volume of investment exceeded the 1938 level by one-third.

5. Overseas exports increased by 30 percent, while imports were reduced by 7 percent.

6. There was a gradual return to conditions of monetary stability.

7. A major contribution to the increase in European production was a spectacular recovery in the western zones of Germany, where output reached 64 percent of the prewar level at the close of 1948.

8. With the exception of Italy, Hungary, Belgium, and Germany, unemployment remained very low.

9. If high levels of employment are maintained, increases in production may continue for some years and the productivity of European workers will continue to rise.

POVERTY IS PROBLEM

Despite continuing progress, the probable improvements in the next 10 years are unlikely to bring about a solution of "the basic problem of Europe—the severe poverty in which the majority of the European peoples live," the survey declared. It went on:

"The resources that are likely to be devoted to capital investment within Europe are far from adequate to secure any really substantial improvement in living standards, or to narrow the 'tremendous gap' between industrial output per man in Europe and in the United States.

"The problem of the overseas balance of payments remains the most threatening aspect of Europe's economic situation."

The essence of the economic crisis between the United States and Europe lies in the fact that the United States is simultaneously the most highly developed industrial country of the world, the world's largest surplus area and Europe's largest supplier of primary products.

The survey has been in preparation during the past 9 months by the economic commission's research division. It was under the direction of the Hungarian-born British economist, Nicholas Kaldor. It is to form one of the principal subjects for discussion at the fourth session of the commission, due to open here next week.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I am very much interested in the Senator's remarks. I am wondering if we can find in them any suggestion as to what course he thinks would be the wise one to follow. He will remember that when the recommendations came from the Foreign Relations Committee in relation to authorizations, it was the consensus of all the members of the committee that the authorization then was based upon information which had come to the committee as of November last year. We had come to the conclusion that between November and June or July, when the appropriations would be made, there would be a number of imponderables which would come into being, and which would give direction as to the amount which we felt should be appropriated.

I wonder whether this is one of the imponderables to which we have been looking forward. If it is, in what way would the Senator consider that the Appropriations Committee should consider it and act?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I think it is primarily the duty of the State Department to consider this kind of policy. But because the only proposed legislation we had before us pertaining to this problem was the ECA authorization bill, it was the only means by which I could attempt to induce the ECA and the Department of State to consider the absolute necessity for the reformation of the political and economic pattern of Europe.

In considering that authorization, I do not see how we can add such restrictions to an appropriation bill. But in the absence of any sign that the State Department recognize the significance of this matter, I think our committee should discuss it with them and should advise them.

I may say to the Senator from Wisconsin that if I correctly interpret what he said in the committee, he is generally in agreement with my views with respect to the importance of the federation of Europe. I think he was one of the Senators who realized the importance of it, and I think the committee should do so.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am grateful to my oleomargarine opponent for his very fine ideas on this subject. I wish to say that I understood from his statement that the Commission has made certain findings to the effect that, as a result of our aid, there is not the complete coordination which we hoped would develop in Europe. On the other hand, I do not understand from what the Senator read that there was a conclusion that the contribution made had not resulted in economic rejuvenation, so to speak.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is very clear that they think economic progress is also being made. In the article it is said that they are tripping over their own economic isolationism, and that their economic progress is bogging down.

It is clear that they do not expect Europe to be free from dependency on our support for many years. In fact, it is likely that our support will be practically a permanent proposition. They say they look forward to the necessity of our following the same policy that Great Britain followed in the last century in the advancement of loans in large amounts to all these countries for an indefinite period. The matter is both political and economic.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I shall read the article with interest.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, there was also an article in the morning Post, entitled, "Dependent Europe Expected for Years." That article is a different version of the other article to which I have referred, which appears in the afternoon edition of today's Star. The Star article is a much more complete account than the article appearing in the Post.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Arkansas has already consumed more than 5 minutes, which is the limit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the Senator can speak for only 5 minutes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If the Senator prefers, I shall take time on the next bill.

Mr. REED. I am interested in a number of small bills on the calendar. I do not believe that this is the proper place to make a speech. Let us dispose of bills on the calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may we proceed with the bill in which I am interested?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of Senate bill 1704.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the Department of State, in addition to the Secretary of State, an Under Secretary of State and 10 Assistant Secretaries of State. The Secretary of State may designate two Assistant Secretaries to serve as Deputy Under Secretaries.

SEC. 2. The officers referred to in section 1 of this act shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Counselor of the Department of State and the Legal Adviser, who are required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall rank equally with the Assistant Secretaries of State. Officers enumerated in section 1 holding office at the time the provisions of this act become effective shall not be required to be reappointed by reason of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of State, or such person or persons designated by him, notwithstanding the provisions of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 999) or any other law, except where authority is vested in the President of the United States, shall, under the authority of the President, administer, coordinate, and direct the Foreign Service of the United States. Any provisions in the Foreign Service Act of 1946, or in any other law, vesting authority in the "Assistant Secretary of State for Administration," the "Assistant Secretary of State in Charge of the Administration of the Department," the "Director General," the "Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service," or any other reference with respect thereto, are hereby amended to vest such authority in the Secretary of State.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State may promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the functions now or hereafter vested in the Secretary of State or the Department of State, and he may delegate authority to perform any of such functions to officers and employees under his direction and supervision.

SEC. 5. The following statutes or parts of statutes are hereby repealed:

Section 200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended and amplified by the acts authorizing the establishment of additional Assistant Secretaries of State, including section 22 of the act of May 24, 1924 (ch. 182, and the act of December 8, 1944, R. S. 200; 43 Stat. 146; 58 Stat. 798; 5 U. S. C. 152, as amended by Public Law 767, Eightieth Congress).

Section 202 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1000) and any other reference in such act to the "Deputy Director General."

Section 1041 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 1032).

MORATORIUM IN APPLICATION OF CERTAIN ANTITRUST LAWS—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1008) to provide a 2-year moratorium with respect to the application of certain antitrust laws to individual good-faith delivered-price systems and freight-absorption practices was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GURNEY. I object, at the request of the Senator who filed the minority views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I did not understand the nature of the last objection. What was the objection of the Senator from South Dakota? I did not hear because of some confusion.

Mr. GURNEY. I merely objected on behalf of the Senator who filed the minority views.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Was the Senator himself objecting? Who was objecting?

Mr. GURNEY. The senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I did not understand who was objecting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

DIVERSIFICATION OF TIN-RECOVERY FACILITIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1433) amending Public Law 125, Eightieth Congress, approved June 28, 1947, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment on page 2, after line 16, to insert "which determination or estimate shall be deemed conclusive)," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Law 125, Eightieth Congress, approved June 28, 1947, as amended, is hereby further amended by changing "SEC. 3" to "SEC. 4" and inserting a new SEC. 3 reading as follows:

"SEC. 3. In order to promote the conservation of the tin ore reserves of the Western Hemisphere and to increase their availability for the tin requirements of the United States through diversification of tin-recovery facilities in the United States, the powers exercised by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or its successor and continued in effect by the provisions of section 2 hereof shall include authority to offer for sale from time to time and to sell to the highest bidder for the recovery in the United States of grade A pig tin, any tin concentrates or other tin-bearing materials heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and containing not more than 25 percent of tin; and to contract to buy up to an equivalent amount of such pig tin for future delivery, not to exceed 4 months from date of delivery of such concentrates or tin-bearing material to the processor, at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's selling price for such grade on the date of such contract: Provided, That the minimum price at which any such concentrates or tin-bearing materials are so sold shall represent no less return to the Government, as determined or estimated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (which determination or estimate shall be deemed conclusive), than would result through the Government itself transporting and treating such concentrates or tin-bearing materials in any Government-owned or controlled facility and transporting and selling the pig tin recovered therefrom."

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of Calendar 285, Senate bill 1433?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] reported the bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, was the Senator referring to Calendar 289?

Mr. WILEY. No; Calendar 285, Senate bill 1433.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I can also explain Calendar 288, House bill 2023.

Mr. President, under the existing law no private company can purchase tin ores for the refining of tin. We have in this country one tin smelter which is located in Texas. Under contract with the Bolivian tin producers the Government purchases all tin ores which are used in that refinery, which is the only tin refinery in the country.

The purpose of the bill is purely permissive, to give to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—in other words, the Government; it is handled through the RFC—permission to sell these ores to private concerns. The objective of the bill is to build up, if we can, the techniques for the refining of tin ore. There is a company, the Vulcan Detinning Co., whose principal business is detinning, recovering tin from tin cans, and handling scrap tin. That company would like to try to develop a private tin smelter on a profitable basis. There is a provision in the bill which protects the Government from selling at a greater loss to a private concern than that which it now sustains in the operation of the refinery in Texas.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation approved the bill. It stated that it could see no harm in it, and believed that it might develop a tin refining industry in this country. I think the Senator is familiar with the fact that prior to the war we had no tin refining. It was all done either in Malaya, England, or Holland.

The committee believes that this would not only give private enterprise an opportunity to participate in the refining of tin, but would develop additional sources, other than the one in Texas, and thereby contribute to national defense.

One or two other companies have evidenced an interest if tin ore can be made available, which they cannot now buy at all, because the law will not permit it. They might also attempt to develop modern and more efficient methods of refining tin.

I cannot imagine what an objection to the bill could be based upon. No one who appeared before the committee objected. Everyone who appeared, both from the Government and from industry, was in favor of it.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I may say that I have no objection. I merely wanted an explanation.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I was very curious to know why an objection would be made. I have no idea why anyone would object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, have I 5 minutes to speak now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has already spoken on this bill.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDEN PROJECT, WYOMING

The bill (S. 55) to authorize completion of construction and development of the Eden project, Wyoming, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I shall not object, but, reserving the right to object, do I have 5 minutes now in which I can proceed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can speak on the bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Must the speech be germane to the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no rule requiring it to be germane.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I presume I can proceed for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent that my remarks at this point be connected up with the remarks which I started a few minutes ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(Mr. FULBRIGHT addressed the Senate. His remarks were ordered to be transposed, as indicated.)

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, we are now ready to consider Calendar 286, Senate bill 55; are we not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may we have a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this measure, which authorizes the completion of the Eden Valley project, deals with the last of the Great Plains projects which were undertaken in 1940. They were interrupted by reason of the war. Later the War Production Board was able to allow several of them to proceed. Three were left: The Eden Valley project, in Wyoming; the Mancos project, in Colorado; and the Angostura project, in South Dakota.

During the last session the Mancos project was reauthorized. It is necessary to reauthorize these projects.

The feeling of the committee in reporting the bill was that the Government owes a certain moral obligation to the settlers upon this project, and thus should authorize the completion of the project.

It involves something less than 20,000 acres of land, of which 9,000 are privately owned, all of it being in small tracts. About 10,000 acres of public land are involved. The public land was ceded to the State of Wyoming under the old Carey Act or law, many years ago. That law provided that public land would be assigned to the State in the arid-land areas in which water companies were established to provide irrigation; and then the State was authorized to convey the land to settlers, who agreed under contract to buy the water from the private irrigation companies.

In this project, as in practically every other such Carey Act project, the private works were not adequate to do the job. In 1940 the Federal Government undertook to complete the project, to build the dam and the canals.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, what is involved? How much is proposed to be authorized?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The bill authorizes approximately $4,500,000 of which $1,500,000 will be repayable by the settlers themselves on the reclamation charges, and about $373,000 on the agricultural phases of the work; and the balance, when the power projects are built in the Upper Colorado Basin, will be allocated to such projects.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator has already answered the question I would have asked, when he stated that this was apparently what we called a WPA project.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. WPA labor was to engage in that work.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. So it must be reauthorized, now, under the Bureau of Reclamation; is that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well; that is all I wish to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection of the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with amendments on page 1, line 11, after the word "Provided", to strike out:

That the total reimbursable costs of the irrigation features of the project as fixed in the finding of feasibility approved by the President on September 18, 1940, shall be $1,500,000 for the project of 20,000 irrigable acres, with proportional adjustment based on the actual irrigable area as determined and announced by the Secretary of the Interior upon completion of the project, which amount shall be reimbursable in not to exceed 60 years: And provided further, That provision for the recovery of the reimbursable construction costs of the irrigation features of the project and the operation and maintenance thereof shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior.

And to insert:

That of the construction costs of the irrigation features of the project not less than $1,500,000 for the project of 20,000 irrigable acres, or a proportionate part thereof based on the actual irrigable area as determined and announced by the Secretary of the Interior upon completion of the project, shall be reimbursable by the water users in not to exceed 60 years, and provision for the recovery thereof and for payment of the operation and maintenance costs of the irrigation features of the project shall be made by a contract or contracts satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That construction costs of the irrigation features of the project which are not hereby made reimbursable by the water users shall be set aside in a special account against which net revenues derived from the sale of power generated at the hydroelectric plants of the Colorado River storage project in the upper basin shall be charged when such plants are constructed.

And on page 3, in line 11, after the word "however", to strike out:

That all expenditures in the development and settlement of the project lands may be excluded from the costs in determining the amounts required to be reimbursed, to the extent the Secretary of Agriculture determines it necessary to keep reimbursable costs with the ability of the water users to repay.

And to insert:

That the total reimbursable cost of the land development and settlement features of the project shall be not less than $373,000 for the project of 20,000 irrigable acres with proportionate adjustment, if necessary, based on the actual irrigable area as determined upon completion of the project.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to complete the construction, including any necessary preconstruction surveys and investigations, of the irrigation features of the Eden project, Wyoming, as approved by the President on September 18, 1940 (S. Doc. 18, 77th Cong., 1st sess. (1941), p. 29), with such modification in physical features as the Secretary of the Interior may find will result in greater engineering and economic feasibility: Provided, That of the construction costs of the irrigation features of the project not less than $1,500,000 for the project of 20,000 irrigable acres, or a proportionate part thereof based on the actual irrigable area as determined and announced by the Secretary of the Interior upon completion of the project, shall be reimbursable by the water users in not to exceed 60 years, and provision for the recovery thereof and for payment of the operation and maintenance costs of the irrigation features of the project shall be made by a contract or contracts satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That construction costs of the irrigation features of the project which are not hereby made reimbursable by the water users shall be set aside in a special account against which net revenues derived from the sale of power generated at the hydroelectric plants of the Colorado River storage project in the upper basin shall be charged when such plants are constructed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to complete the land development and settlement features of the project in accordance with the general plan approved by the President on September 18, 1940, including the acquisition of such lands, or interests in lands, as may be necessary, and the extension of technical advice and assistance to settlers in matters of farm practice, soil conservation, and efficient land use: Provided, however, That the total reimbursable cost of the land development and settlement features of the project shall be not less than $373,000 for the project of 20,000 irrigable acres with proportionate adjustment, if necessary, based on the actual irrigable area as determined upon completion of the project.

SEC. 3. To carry out the purposes of this act, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture are hereby authorized to allot any moneys available from appropriations heretofore made to the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture, respectively, for "water conservation and utility projects" and "water conservation and utilization projects," and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture, respectively, such sums of money as may be necessary to complete the project.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next measure on the calendar will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 2023) to regulate oleomargarine, to repeal certain taxes relating to oleomargarine, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THYE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3083) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments and funds available for the Export-Import Bank and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill will be passed over.

STANDARDS OF ELECTRICAL AND PHOTOMETRIC MEASUREMENTS

The bill (S. 441) to redefine the units and establish the standards of electrical and photometric measurements was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I wonder whether we might have an explanation of the need of the statutory definition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, if the clerk will read section 6, I am certain the bill will be fully understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read section 6.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. The unit of electrical capacitance shall be the farad, which is the capacitance of a capacitor that is charged to a potential of 1 volt by 1 coulomb of electricity.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I am still at a loss to understand the need of a statutory definition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The necessity of this bill is to bring the language of our statutes up to the progress which science has made. The bill has been drafted to keep the basic definitions of the act of 1894, but to eliminate the alternative definitions specifying devices, which are incorrect and are not now necessary. The later sections of the bill establish in scientific terms definitions of the units of light, now in common use throughout the world, largely as the result of work done at the National Bureau of Standards, but which have been specifically established by Federal statutes. As I have said, it is simply to bring our current statutes up to date in the use of scientific terms.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 441) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date this act is approved the legal units of electrical and photometric measurement in the United States of America shall be those defined and established as provided in the following sections:

SEC. 2. The unit of electrical resistance shall be the ohm, which is equal to one thousand million units of resistance of the centimeter-gram-second system of electromagnetic units.

SEC. 3. The unit of electric current shall be the ampere, which is one-tenth of the unit of current of the centimeter-gram-second system of electromagnetic units.

SEC. 4. The unit of electromotive force and of electric potential shall be the volt, which is the electromotive force that, steadily applied to a conductor whose resistance is one ohm, will produce a current of one ampere.

SEC. 5. The unit of electric quantity shall be the coulomb, which is the quantity of electricity transferred by a current of one ampere in one second.

SEC. 6. The unit of electrical capacitance shall be the farad, which is the capacitance of a capacitor that is charged to a potential of one volt by one coulomb of electricity.

SEC. 7. The unit of electrical inductance shall be the henry, which is the inductance in a circuit such that an electromotive force of one volt is induced in the circuit by variation of an inducing current at the rate of one ampere per second.

SEC. 8. The unit of power shall be the watt, which is equal to ten million units of power in the centimeter-gram-second system, and which is the power required to cause an unvarying current of one ampere to flow between points differing in potential by one volt.

SEC. 9. The units of energy shall be (a) the joule, which is equivalent to the energy supplied by a power of one watt operating for one second, and (b) the kilowatt-hour, which is equivalent to the energy supplied by a power of one thousand watts operating for one hour.

SEC. 10. The unit of intensity of light shall be the candle, which is one-sixtieth of the intensity of one square centimeter of a perfect radiator, known as a "black body," when operated at the temperature of freezing platinum.

SEC. 11. The unit of flux of light shall be the lumen, which is the flux in a unit of solid angle from a source of which the intensity is one candle.

SEC. 12. It shall be the duty of the National Bureau of Standards to establish the values of the primary electric and photometric units in absolute measure, and the legal values for these units shall be those represented by, or derived from, national reference standards maintained by the National Bureau of Standards.

SEC. 13. The act of July 12, 1894 (Public Law Numbered 105, Fifty-third Congress), entitled "An act to define and establish the units of electrical measure", is hereby repealed.

SALE OF RESETTLEMENT PROJECTS KNOWN AS GREENBELT, MD., GREENDALE, WIS., AND GREENHILLS, OHIO

The bill (H. R. 2440) to authorize the Public Housing Commissioner to sell the suburban resettlement projects known as Greenbelt, Md.; Greendale, Wis.; and Greenhills, Ohio, without regard to provisions of law requiring competitive bidding or public advertising, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, this is a bill to permit the Housing Administration to sell to veterans' groups organized on a nonprofit or mutual basis, and to limited dividend corporations, on the basis of independent appraisal without competitive sales, the so-called three "Green Towns" outside, respectively, the cities of Milwaukee, Wis., Washington, D. C., and Cincinnati, Ohio. The Housing Commissioner has the power to require competitive sales to private bidders, but the bill permits him to dispose of the properties in an alternative way.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I may say I sincerely hope the Senator from Kansas will not object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I have no objection whatever.

Mr. WHERRY. I have gone over it myself very carefully. I have had many communications about it. I am in total sympathy with the purposes of the bill. I hope it will be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3709, as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or any other provision of law, the Public Housing Commissioner is hereby authorized, by means of negotiated sale or sales and without competitive bidding or public advertising, to sell and convey, at fair market value as determined by him on the basis of an appraisal made by an independent real-estate expert selected by the Commissioner and subject to such terms and conditions as he may determine to be in the best public interest, to such purchaser or purchasers as he deems to be responsible, all right, title, and interest of the United States in or to all or any part of the suburban resettlement projects known as Greenbelt, Md.; Greendale, Wis.; and Greenhills, Ohio (including improved and unimproved lands, war housing constructed on lands of or adjacent to said suburban resettlement projects, and personal property used in connection with said projects or housing): Provided, however, That the Public Housing Commissioner shall, during such period as he deems to be reasonable, give a first preference in such negotiated sale or sales to veteran groups organized on a nonprofit basis (provided that any such group shall accept as a member or its organization, on the same terms, subject to the same conditions, and with the same privileges and responsibilities, required of, and extended to other members of the group, any tenant occupying a dwelling unit at any time during such period, starting on the date of the announcement by the Public Housing Commissioner of the terms of the negotiated agreement hereunder with such group, as the Commissioner shall deem appropriate), and may sell to such groups at fair market value (as determined by him on the basis stated above) or at cost (as determined by him, including the apportioned cost of structures, lands, appurtenances, and personal property transferred, together with the apportioned share of the cost of all utilities and other facilities provided for and common to the project of which any property being sold is a part), whichever is lower, except, however, that in the event two or more such groups desire to purchase any such project they shall be required to submit sealed bids therefor and the award shall be made on the basis of the highest acceptable monetary return to the Government: And provided further, That evidence is furnished to the Commissioner, satisfactory to him, that the compensation paid or to be paid for organizing such groups, for negotiating the purchase of such property and for financing such purchase is fair in relation to the purchase price and reasonable on the basis of time effectively devoted to such services on a professional or similar basis: And provided further, That in the event of a sale other than for cash, the Commissioner shall require a down payment of at least 10 percent of the total purchase price, the balance to be amortized over a period of not more than 25 years, the unpaid balance to bear interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum and the payment of any unpaid balance to be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust against the properties sold. The Commissioner is authorized, as a condition of any such sale, to transfer, or to require the transfer or an agreement for the transfer of, streets, roads, public buildings, federally owned utilities, playgrounds, swimming pools, and parks, including adequate open land surrounding or adjacent to each project, to the appropriate non-Federal governmental agency, at such times, to such an extent, and upon such terms and conditions as he shall determine to be in the public interest.

SEC. 2. As used in this act, (1) the term "veteran" means any person who shall have served in the active military or naval service of the United States at any time on or after September 16, 1940, and prior to July 26, 1947, and who shall have been discharged or released from active service under conditions other than dishonorable, and (2) the term "groups organized on a nonprofit basis" shall include but not be limited to, mutual ownership or cooperative housing associations or limited dividend corporations which by the terms of their charters and bylaws have limited their rate of return to a rate no higher than the Public Housing Commissioner deems reasonable and necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the additional amendments reported from the committee by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] to the committee amendment.

The first amendment was, on page 4, line 22, to strike out "or" and insert in lieu thereof "of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 25, after the word "unit" to insert "in such project."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, beginning with the comma before the word "starting" in line 1, to strike out through the comma after the word "group" in line 3; and on page 5, line 4, after the word "appropriate" to insert a comma and the following: "starting on the effective date of this act, and who shall be a tenant therein at the time of making application for such membership."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 6, to strike out "such sale" and to insert in lieu thereof "sale hereunder."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have an amendment to the amendment on the desk, which I should like to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 4, in line 20, after the word "veteran" it is proposed to insert "or resident."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be amended to include the necessary changes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the force of the amendment offered by the Senator?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It takes care of the cooperatives which have been organized to take over some of these houses.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, it extends the opportunity of buying to residents in addition to veterans.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It extends the privilege so as to take in cooperatives, most of which are veterans' cooperatives, already in existence.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from Colorado, has he included on page 6 a definition of groups organized on a nonprofit basis?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes, I have included that, but I think it is necessary to make the insertion at the point where I made it, in order fully to comply with the provision to which the Senator refers.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, may we have the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado restated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, votes by which the amendment was agreed to and ordered to be engrossed and the bill passed are reconsidered, and the clerk will state the amendment as requested by the Senator from Illinois.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, in line 20, after the word "veteran," it is proposed to insert the words "or resident."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill as amended——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would suggest that the bill be put over to the end of the calendar, so that I may be able to discuss the matter with the Senator from Colorado. His amendment appears to constitute a very serious change, in that it seems to make the cooperatives residents, and to put them on equal terms with veterans' organizations. I should like to have a chance of checking into the matter in further detail before I agree to it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard. The bill will go over.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, then, House bill 2440, will go to the foot of the calendar, and will come up again at the conclusion of the regular call of the calendar today. Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is what the Senator from Illinois requested, that the bill go over temporarily.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that the Senate return to the consideration of Calendar No. 292, House bill 2440.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw the amendment which I offered to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Without objection, the bill will be considered as having gone through the various parliamentary stages and passed.

PUBLICATION OF ECONOMIC INDICATORS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 55) to print the monthly publication entitled "Economic Indicators" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Joint Committee on the Economic Report be authorized to issue a monthly publication entitled "Economic Indicators," and that a sufficient quantity be printed to furnish one copy to each Member of Congress; the Secretary and the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate; the Clerk, Sergeant at Arms, and Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives; two copies to the libraries of the Senate and House, and the Congressional Library; 700 copies to the Joint Committee on the Economic Report; and the required number of copies to the Superintendent of Documents for distribution to depository libraries; and that the Superintendent of Documents be authorized to have copies printed for sale to the public.

BENEFITS FOR ANNUITANTS UNDER RETIREMENT ACT—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 878) to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, it will be recalled that last year we adopted an amendment to the Retirement Act, increasing payments to annuitants in the sum of $300, or 25 percent, whichever was less. At that time we also gave to annuitants who had already retired the right to waive this increase and give to their wives after they die the right to draw an annuity, but not in any case in excess of $600. In that same bill we provided that if any person retiring after April 1, 1948, desired to make the wife an annuitant, 10 percent could be deducted from the amount being drawn at the time. The question has come up in this manner, in regard to this particular clause: Those who retired prior to April 1, 1948, as the Retirement Commission will confirm, did not have sufficient time to decide whether they should waive the increase and take advantage of the benefit to their wives. This bill extends to them that right, and it also offsets the increase in living costs which has occurred since these persons paid their money into the fund, with the right to have this little, measly $300 increase, or 25 percent, whichever is the lesser of the two. When they paid their money into the Treasury, it was worth something; but, as the Senator from Delaware knows, the amount which they received in addition to that was to offset the increase in living costs. If we are to help a person who is drawing a salary of $1,000, and increase that amount 25 percent, it would amount to $1,250. With $1,250 a person is hardly able to take care of his family.

It will be noted that the committee has unanimously reported the bill. The Commission has stated off the record that it thinks it is fair.

I should like, also, to call to the Senator's attention the fact that there is almost $4,000,000,000 in the retirement fund today. It is drawing 4 percent interest. Personally, I do not believe this bill would in any way jeopardize that fund.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the Senator.

I should like to read from page 3 of the report of the committee:

It is estimated that to provide for such guaranty would immediately increase the liabilities of the civil service retirement and disability fund by $157,000,000.

The report goes on to state that if the bill should be passed it would require an authorization and appropriation of $157,000,000 to take care of the costs; otherwise it would mean a raid on the retirement fund which, in reality, belongs not to Congress, but to all the Government employees together.

Furthermore, the Senator from South Carolina made a slight error when he said the Commission recommended it, because I now read another sentence, which is as follows:

In view of the cost involved, the Commission is constrained to recommend adverse action.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT OF MAY 29, 1930

The bill (S. 1459) to amend section 6 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by adding at the end of the first paragraph thereof the following: "Such time limitation may also be waived in the case of an officer or employee whose disabling condition is essentially chronic, deteriorative, or progressive in nature and can reasonably be assumed to have existed at date of separation, but the application in such case must be filed with the Civil Service Commission within 1 year after the date of separation; in the case of any such person heretofore separated from service, application may be filed within 6 months after the effective date of this act."

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The resolution (S. Con. Res. 34) favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens, was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress favors the suspension of deportation in the case of each alien hereinafter named, in which case the Attorney General has suspended deportation for more than 6 months:

DISCONTINUANCE OF DIVISIONS OF THE COURT IN THE DISTRICT OF KANSAS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 259) to discontinue divisions of the court in the district of Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, in line 7, following the word "Wichita," and before the word "and", it is proposed to insert "Dodge City."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 96 of title 28 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 96. Kansas constitutes one judicial district.

"Court shall be held at Kansas City, Leavenworth, Salina, Topeka, Hutchinson, Wichita, Dodge City, and Fort Scott."

JOHN C. NUNES

The bill (H. R. 2605) for the relief of John C. Nunes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR C. JONES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 275) for the relief of Arthur C. Jones, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$7,500" and to insert "$4,881.36."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, cut of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur C. Jones, of Dover, N. H., the sum of $4,881.36, plus the sum of $987.60 for medical expenses, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for compensation for personal injuries sustained by him on July 28, 1942, while serving as a laborer at the United States naval shipyard, Portsmouth, N. H., and the subsequent aggravation of such injuries which resulted in the amputation of both feet: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PLACED AT FOOT OF THE CALENDAR

The bill (S. 584) for the relief of Rudolf A. V. Raff was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I ask that this bill go to the foot of the Calendar until the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is ready to explain it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go to the foot of the calendar.

THEODORE PAPACHRISTOPOULOS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2360) for the relief of Theodore Papachristopoulos, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 3, strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Theodore Papachristopoulos shall be considered to be the natural-born son of his stepfather, Roland Stanger, a citizen of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF SCENIC ROUTES

The bill (S. 353) to protect scenic routes along and tributary to Aspen Basin Road, and contiguous scenic area, within the Santa Fe National Forest, N. Mex., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter mining locations made under mining laws of the United States within the following-described lands within the Santa Fe National Forest, Santa Fe, N. Mex.: Sections 1, 2, 3, the northeast quarter of section 11 and the north half of section 12, in surveyed township 17 north, range 10 east; sections 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 36, and that portion of section 25, outside the boundaries of the Gabaldon Grant in surveyed township 18 north, range 10 east; 3,840 acres, more or less, in unsurveyed township 18 north, range 11 east, expected to be legally described, when surveyed, as sections 7, 8, 18, 19, and 30, the northeast quarter of section 17, the west half of section 17 and the west half of section 20, township 18 north, range 11 east, New Mexico principal meridian, shall confer on the locator the right to occupy and use so much of the surface of the land covered by the location as may be reasonbly necessary to carry on prospecting, mining, and beneficiation of ores including the taking of mineral deposits and timber required by or in the mining and ore-reducing operations, and no permit shall be required or charge made for such use or occupany: Provided, however, That the cutting and removal of timber, except where clearing is necessary in connection with mining operations or to provide space for buildings or structures used in connection with mining operations, shall be conducted in accordance with the rules for timber cutting on adjoining national-forest land, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining and prospecting shall be allowed except under the national-forest rules and regulations, nor shall the locator prevent or obstruct other occupancy of the surface or use of surface resources under authority of national-forest regulations, or permits issued thereunder, if such occupancy or use is not in conflict with mineral development.

SEC. 2. That hereafter all patents issued under the United States mining laws affecting lands within the above-described area shall convey title to the mineral deposits within the claim, together with the right to cut and remove so much of the mature timber therefrom as may be needed in extracting and removing and beneficiation of the mineral deposits, if the timber is cut under sound principles of forest management as defined by the national-forest rules and regulations, but each patent shall reserve to the United States all title in or to the surface of the lands and products thereof, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining or prospecting shall be allowed except under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. That valid mining claims within the said lands, existing on the date of the enactment of this act, and thereafter maintained in compliance with the law under which they were initiated and the laws of the State of New Mexico, may be perfected under this act, or under the laws under which they were initiated, as the claimant may desire.

PROTECTION OF SCENIC VALUES ALONG OAK CREEK CANYON

The bill (S. 812) to protect scenic values along Oak Creek Canyon and certain tributaries thereof within the Coconino National Forest, Ariz., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter mining locations made under the mining laws of the United States within the following-described lands within the Coconino National Forest, Coconino County, Ariz.: Sections 14, 15, 19, 20, 22, 27, 28, 29, 34, of township 19 north, range 6 east; and sections 4, 5, 8, 9, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 33, and 34 of township 18 north, range 6 east; and sections 1, 2, 3, 4, southeast quarter of section 8, sections 9, 10, 11, and 12 of township 17 north, range 6 east; Gila and Salt River base and meridian, shall confer on the locator the right to occupy and use so much of the surface of the land covered by the location as may be reasonably necessary to carry on prospecting, mining, and beneficiation of ores, including the taking of mineral deposits and timber required by or in the mining and ore-reducing operations, and no permit shall be required or charge made for such use or occupancy: Provided, however, That the cutting and removal of timber, except where clearing is necessary in connection with mining operations or to provide space for buildings or structures used in connection with mining operations, shall be conducted in accordance with the rules for timber cutting on adjoining national-forest land, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining and prospecting shall be allowed except under the national-forest rules and regulations, nor shall the locator prevent or obstruct other occupancy of the surface or use of surface resources under authority of national-forest regulations, or permits issued thereunder, if such occupancy or use is not in conflict with mineral development.

SEC. 2. That hereafter all patents issued under the United States mining laws affecting lands within the above-described area shall convey title to the mineral deposits within the claim, together with the right to cut and remove so much of the mature timber therefrom as may be needed in extracting and removing and beneficiation of the mineral deposits, if the timber is cut under sound principles of forest management as defined by the national-forest rules and regulations, but each patent shall reserve to the United States all title in or to the surface of the lands and products thereof, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining or prospecting shall be allowed except under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. That valid mining claims within the said lands, existing on the date of the enactment of this act, and thereafter maintained in compliance with the law under which they were initiated and the laws of the State of Arizona, may be perfected under this act, or under the laws under which they were initiated, as the claimant may desire.

ISSUANCE OF PATENT IN FEE TO HOWARD C. HECKENLIVELY

The bill (H. R. 1029) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Howard C. Heckenlively was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF PATENT IN FEE TO FRANCIS HOWE

The bill (H. R. 1030) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Francis Howe was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF PATENT IN FEE TO PHENA M. ANDERSON

The bill (H. R. 1109) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Phena M. Anderson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF PATENT IN FEE TO LESLIE PAUL SCHROEDER

The bill (H. R. 1281) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Leslie Paul Schroeder was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CREATION OF POSITIONS UNDER NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The bill (H. R. 20) to amend the act of August 1, 1947, as amended, to authorize the creation of 10 professional and scientific positions in the headquarters and research stations of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask, since Senate bill 498 deals with high-salaried positions in the Government service, what were the reasons which the committee has for increasing compensation for scientists from $10,000 to $15,000? Why should that subject be incorporated in a separate piece of legislation?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in the Eightieth Congress a bill was passed for the Army, Navy, and Air Force providing for 45 scientists at the same pay received in the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics does all the basic research for the Army, Navy, and Air Force on basic designs for aircraft. This is entirely a national defense matter. There are already employed in the Government service approximately 15 scientists receiving the same pay. The Government is in competition with private industry in that connection.

I think, if the Senator would look over the committee report, he would agree that this bill is absolutely necessary in order that the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics may have the services of properly qualified scientists. There are approximately 2,200 scientific and professional positions. This bill provides for the top salary they can receive. The pay bill starts out with $5,000 and goes up. This bill would permit the top scientists in the Government service to receive as much as $15,000, which would still be below the amount authorized by the top-pay bill. I feel that there should be a distinction between the ordinary employees and these top scientists who are absolutely necessary for national defense.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I think the Senator for his explanation. At my request, because of the absence of one of our colleagues, would the distinguished Senator from Louisiana have any objection to this bill going to the foot of the Calendar?

Mr. LONG. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go to the foot of the calendar, and the clerk will call the next order of business.

QUOTAS FOR 1950 CROP OF CORN, WHEAT, COTTON, RICE, AND TOBACCO

The bill (S. 732) providing for the taking of action in 1949 with respect to quotas for the 1950 crops of corn, wheat, cotton, rice, and tobacco was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 201 (b), 201 (c), 201 (d), 201 (e), 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, and 208 of the Agricultural Act of 1948 shall be effective for the purpose of taking any action with respect to the 1950 and subsequent crops upon the enactment of this act. If the time within which any such action is required to be taken shall have elapsed prior to the enactment of this act, such action shall be taken within 30 days after the enactment of this act.

MARYLAND AND THE CIGAR-LEAF TYPES OF TOBACCO

The bill (S. 715) to amend the Agriculture Act of 1948 was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 (a) of title I of the Agricultural Act of 1948 (Public Law 897, 80th Cong.) is amended by inserting, following the date "June 30, 1950," a parenthetical clause reading as follows: "(September 30, 1950, in the case of Maryland and the cigar-leaf types of tobacco)."

FILBERTS

The bill (S. 1089) to amend section 8c of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, relating to marketing agreements and orders, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to issue orders under such section with respect to filberts, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsections (2) and (6) of section 8c of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended (7 U. S. C. 608c (2) and (6)), are amended by inserting "filberts," after the word "including" in the phrase "including pecans and walnuts."

MEMBERSHIP IN THE NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION

The bill (S. 1640) to amend section 4 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L. 962; 16 U. S. C. 513), relating to membership of the National Forest Reservation Commission, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L. 962; 16 U. S. C. 513), is hereby amended by deleting the comma appearing immediately after the term "Secretary of War" and inserting after the mentioned term the words "or as an alternate, the Chief of Engineers of the Army,".

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 33) suspending legislative budget pending further study was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, by request, I ask that the concurrent resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the concurrent resolution will be passed over.

AWARDS OF PENSIONS AND COMPENSATIONS PAYABLE BY THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 811) to adjust the effective date of certain awards and pensions and compensations payable by the Veterans' Administration, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments on page 1, line 9, after the word "death" to insert "or attainment of a specified age"; on page 2, line 8, after the word "of" insert "age or" and on line 9, after the word "pension", to insert "increased pension"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law which prescribes the effective date of awards of pensions and compensation, in the case of any claimant for pension or compensation under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, who is receiving a current pension or compensation on the date of the enactment of this act, whose claim arose with respect to the disability or death or attainment of a specified age of a member or former member of the armed forces on and after December 7, 1941, and who was unable to file such claim by reason of being interned by a country with which the United States was at war or was otherwise prevented from filing such claim by action of such country, the award of pension or compensation shall be adjusted so as to be effective as of the day the claim would have been allowed had it been filed within 1 year of the death, discharge from the armed forces, or the occurrence of age or any disability or increased disability giving rise to a claim for pension, increased pension, compensation, or increased compensation: Provided, That claims for the benefits of this act shall be filed within 1 year from the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I object, and ask that this bill go over for the purpose of further study.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection, because the bill merely protects veterans who were captured and were confined in foreign prisons, and were unable therefore to present their cases. I am sure the Senator would not object to giving those men the protection all other veterans have. It does not add any new names to the roll, because these men are on the roll. It merely gives them the benefit of the lapse of time, because, being imprisoned, they were not able to take advantage of their rights. It is a very just bill, and I am sure the Senator will not object.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I merely wanted to know more about the bill, and I thought there should be time for further study. In the light of the Senator's explanation, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

RUDOLF A. V. RAFF

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to Calendar No. 300, Senate bill 584, for the relief of Rudolf A. V. Raff, which I believe went to the foot of the calendar, on request of the Senator from New Jersey, until the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary could return and give an explanation.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. That is correct.

Mr. MYERS. I do not see the chairman of the committee on the floor, but I shall be glad to give the Senator an explanation of the bill.

Rudolf Raff is a Canadian citizen. He was born in Austria in 1908, and, being an Austrian, he therefore comes under the Austrian quota. He is one of the few chemists skilled in the science of polymerization, particularly in the plastics field dealing with styrene and resorcinol. Of great strategic value in wartime, these two products are finding greatly increased use throughout our domestic economy. Koppers is specializing in their manufacture, and urgently needs Raff's services. The acquisition of those services will give impetus to the program and permit the employment of additional American workers.

Raff is the husband of a Canadian-born woman and the father of two children, who also were born in the Dominion. Being quota-exempt, their admission into the United States will involve no difficulty.

It is my understanding that the Visa Division of the State Department conducted a preliminary investigation of Dr. Raff, with the proper security agencies of our Government, and that clearance has been obtained for him.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the Senator, and I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 584) for the relief of Rudolf A. V. Raff, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws notwithstanding the provisions of section 12 of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, Rudolf A. V. Raff, a naturalized citizen of Canada, shall be deemed to have been born in Canada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CREATION OF POSITIONS UNDER NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar which went over.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 20) to amend the act of August 1, 1947, as amended, to authorize the creation of 10 professional and scientific positions in the headquarters and research stations of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is interested in this measure, and I see him coming onto the floor of the Senate at this time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I may explain to the Senator from Maine that House bill 20 is vital to the national defense. He will notice this statement in the report on page 2:

The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics has sole responsibility in the Federal Government for the performance of basic research in the field of aeronautics.

This is the group which provides all the basic data on which the Army, Navy, and Air Force design aircraft, guided missiles, and things of that sort. In the Army, the Navy, and Air Force there are 13 positions the salaries of which are the same as those called for. In the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics there are comparable scientists, and whereas the Army, Navy, and Air Force can pay them $15,000 for the same work, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, which provides the basic data for these three branches of the armed forces, is not able to go above $10,000. It has to compete with private industry to get this type of scientist. There are about 2,200 scientists and professional people working in the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and it is demoralizing to the whole staff that no one can draw more than $10,000.

I feel that if the Senator will study the report he will find that it will cost the Government only about $30,000 a year, and it is really vital for national defense.

Mr. BALDWIN rose.

Mr. LONG. This is a substitute for the bill introduced by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator from Louisiana about that. This is the House version of the bill we had before our committee, is it not?

Mr. LONG. The Senator is correct, and the House bill was reported instead of the bill of the Senator from Connecticut, for the sole reason that House bill 20 was identical, and had already been passed by the House.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, is it true that after having hearings on the bill the committee came to the unanimous conclusion that it was to the best interest of the Government to have the bill passed, and also that Louis Johnson, the Secretary of National Defense, wrote a strong recommendation that the bill become law?

Mr. LONG. That is true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BREWSTER. Reserving the right to object—and I certainly have a very high respect for Louis Johnson—my attention was attracted to the name "National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics," as that subject has primarily been in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I wondered how it came under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Mr. LONG. Since it involves a pay increase, it would come under the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, just as all pay bills do.

Mr. BREWSTER. Are all increases of salaries referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service?

Mr. LONG. The top-pay bill was referred to that committee, and the classification bill, which involved pay, was referred to that committee, and so far as I know, any bill increasing any salary goes to that committee.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, does the Senator from Louisiana recall that proposed legislation was presented to the Congress providing for positions of the kind covered by the bill in the different branches of the armed services?

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will refer to the committee report, he will notice on page 3, about the center of the page, the statement that under the law passed by the Eightieth Congress the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force each have 13 positions with salaries the same as those we propose for the NACA. The Army, the Navy, and the Air Force pay scientists as much as $15,000, and the NACA does identically the same type of work, requiring the same kinds of scientists, yet their scientists are limited to $10,000.

Mr. BALDWIN. Is it the recollection of the Senator from Louisiana, as it is the recollection of the Senator from Connecticut, that the National Advisory Council on Aeronautics appeared before the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and asked specifically for this particular type of legislation, in view of the fact that there was provision for these positions in the three branches of the armed services? Does not the Senator remember that?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator, furthermore, that as a member of that committee I personally requested that consideration of the bill be continued so we might have an additional hearing on it, in order that I could be thoroughly convinced that what the bill proposes is necessary. Personally there is no doubt in my mind that it is demoralizing to the entire service that so great a number of scientific and professional positions should have a top limit of $10,000 a year, a sum beyond which they cannot earn. Private industry can pay any amount it deems necessary in order to secure the best scientists and professional people. Yet we find that the Government is not able to pay more than $10,000 for individuals whose services are absolutely necessary to it, and whose services are worth more than $10,000 a year. The Army and the Navy, when employing such individuals for needed services, pay as much as $15,000 or more a year.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Maine a question, but I wish to preface my question by saying it is the recollection of the Senator from Connecticut that the reason this matter came before our particular committee was because it came up at a time when we were considering a reclassification of the salaries in the Federal service, particularly the salaries in the higher brackets. It is my recollection that the National Advisory Council on Aeronautics came before our committee recommending that they be given an opportunity, in connection with the new bill we were then considering, to create these positions, and at least they convinced the Senator from Connecticut that they were entitled to that consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to have further opportunity to examine the general problem involved, because of its bearing upon aeronautical research. We have before our committee now a proposal to build a $4,000,000 laboratory in Washington. I should like to have an opportunity for myself and the members of the committee to make further study of the measure, so I ask that it go over, but I do not wish to indicate thereby that I have any determined objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the measure will be passed over.

That completes the calendar.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the bill which is now the unfinished business before the Senate, House bill 3704, the District of Columbia sales-tax measure?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

CANCELLATION AND RELEASE OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN PORT OF SEATTLE AND THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair lay before the Senate House Joint Resolution 91, which is a measure identical with Senate Joint Resolution 32, which was passed by the Senate on April 11, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the House joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair lays before the Senate House Joint Resolution 91, which will be read by title.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) to authorize the cancellation and release of an agreement dated December 31, 1921, entered into between the port of Seattle and the United States of America, represented by the United States Shipping Board acting through the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator from Washington if I correctly understood him to say that the language of the House joint resolution is identical with the language of the Senate joint resolution passed 2 weeks ago?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes; the language is identical in both measures.

Mr. WHERRY. And the Senator from Washington asks that the House joint resolution be passed?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes; to take care of the parliamentary situation which now exists.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

REA BORROWERS IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a list of the rural electrification cooperatives in South Carolina, and the information furnished me by the United States Department of Agriculture as of April 28, 1949, showing the loans made to them, totaling $38,458,000, and showing that of this date the cooperatives have some 88,382 members. I may add that the agricultural appropriation bill, which has been passed by the House, increased appropriations for the REA, and increased appropriations for power development. The Senate will shortly take up that bill. I look forward to the time when all the lines may be completed. I may say that 65 percent of our lines are now receiving power from central stations.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FEDERAL FISCAL SITUATION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, all I shall say at this time will be in the nature of an analysis of the cause and effect of the Federal fiscal situation in the present and foreseeable future which may be projected on a receipt and expenditure basis from the President's budget estimates. It may be summarized as follows:

Fiscal year ending June 30, 1949:
Income	$39,500,000,000
Expenditures	40,300,000,000
Deficit	800,000,000
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1950:
Income	40,900,000,000
Expenditures	44,300,000,000
Deficit	3,400,000,000
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1951:
Income	40,900,000,000
Expenditures	47,400,000,000
Deficit	6,500,000,000

(All the figures above are exclusive of refunds.)

NOTE

It is important to note parenthetically that these estimates do not include either expenditure or revenue figures incident to the social-security programs which are tied to pay-roll taxes and operate through trust funds outside the regular general fund budget. These trust fund operations which, as a rule, do not show up in the regular Federal budget are becoming increasingly significant in Federal finances and in assessments on individuals. They would be tremendous if the proposed socialized medicine program were adopted.

EXPENDITURES

When we recast the general fund expenditure figures from the bare outline I have given, we find it is conceded that on June 30 we shall wind up fiscal year 1949 in the red. Analysis reveals that 1949 expenditures are being pushed above $40,000,000,000 largely by the obligations of multiyear programs, projects, and policies. A conservative projection of these continuing commitments in combination with new ones which are pending makes it certain that Federal expenditures in the coming fiscal year 1950 will approach $45,000,000,000, and that in fiscal year 1951, beginning a year hence, they will total between $45,000,000,000 and $50,000,000,000.

REVENUE

The revenue figures I have given in the projection are based on present Federal tax rates applied to economic conditions as they were in January when the President submitted his budget message and his last economic report. To evaluate the revenue side of this projection, it is necessary to keep two things in mind:

First. When the President began laying his new legislative program before Congress last January, he frankly admitted that it assumed continuation of inflated prosperity at or near the postwar peak, and on this basis he estimated his program would require a 13½-percent increase in income taxes, a 59-percent increase in pay-roll taxes, and a 15-percent increase in postal rates.

Second. Whether taxes are increased or not, we must take into consideration that now—four eventful months since the administration's program and budget were submitted—it is the general consensus that sources of Federal revenue are seeking lower levels, and this consensus is supported by all the official calculations which have been made of the economic developments in the first calendar quarter of 1949.

I emphasize that in projecting these deficits my estimates are based upon the continuation of the present high level of prosperity. If it declines, the anticipated deficits will be greatly increased.

DEFICIT

If the legislative program laid down by the President for the coming fiscal year is adopted in substantial measure, if taxes are not increased, and if Federal revenue sources continue to decline, my deficit estimates must be revised upward.

PROGRAM

Actually most of the administration's new program is still pending in Congress. None of the appropriation bills for fiscal year 1950 has been passed. With more than half the regular session gone, the effort now will be to jam this highly controversial program pell-mell through the closing crush of the session wind-up. If we were to take the program in full, we would be called upon in a period of extremely sensitive economic uncertainty to exceed all previous peacetime spending records, lay an additional levy of $2,000,000,000 in pay-roll taxes (which will greatly increase in future years) increase postage rates to bring in an additional quarter of a billion, and enact the $4,000,000,000 in proposed new general-fund taxes on income for the next fiscal year (with more new taxes for fiscal year 1951) or, in effect, to authorize a deficit of $3,000,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 in the coming fiscal year, with prospects of an even greater deficit in fiscal year 1951.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Has the Senator any objection to an increase in postal rates?

Mr. BYRD. That is a subject to which I have not given consideration. I am not a member of the committee. I think there should be some reasonable increase in postage rates, but my attention has been called to certain proposed increases which seem to me to be very excessive. However, I am not really in a position to make a statement on the subject, because I have not studied the bill. I believe, however, that there should be some reasonable increase.

Mr. LONG. Does it not seem to the Senator that the charges for postal service should be brought into line with what it actually costs the Government to render the service?

Mr. BYRD. I think on general principles that is true. Some concerns may be completely put out of business by the rates proposed. I think the Senator is a member of the committee which is considering the question.

SUGGESTION

Under the circumstances, I sincerely suggest the wisdom of avoiding all unnecessary elements of economic disturbance inherent in the social excesses pending in legislation now before Congress and the fiscal excesses proposed in the President's budget for the fiscal year 1950.

Those who sincerely believe federalized social programs can be continuously extended within the framework of our private enterprise system and democratic form of government would serve their cause best in the present economic uneasiness by awaiting assurance that their proposals will not impair our financial stability or the fiscal integrity of the Government.

I invite their support in an effort to strip the pending program and budget to the most urgent essentials which cannot be postponed, for without concerted action now fiscal year 1951 will be critical.

IMPACT

The full impact of continuing commitments made under the $40,000,000,000 budget of the current year and the nearly $45,000,000,000 budget of the coming year will strike in fiscal year 1951 when c. o. d. delivery will begin on the huge military contracts, and promises to pay on long-term civilian obligations like housing and education will hit their stride.

We must recognize the fact that appropriation bills do not disclose the expenditures. An appropriation may not be spent for several years after it is made. The figures which I am giving the Senate today are based upon a receipts-and-expenditures basis within each current year.

In the same fiscal year 1951 we shall feel also the full impact of whatever happens to tax sources in this year and next. If there is a recession in business, it will not be felt severely until the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1950, known as fiscal year 1951. That year will be the year, I predict, of serious crisis in the fiscal situation of our Government.

According to tax experts the principal revenue factor is personal income—the aggregate of all our individual income. In the first 2 months this year it was down from the last calendar quarter in 1948. For the first time since this inflation began, there was a recession in January in the aggregate of personal incomes amounting to $600,000,000. In February that recession continued, and became $2,000,000,000. While the report has not yet been made for March—I think it will be made the first of next week—it is my understanding that it will show a continued recession in personal incomes which is very disturbing, because for the first time since this inflation occurred, we have started to go down hill. While personal income was still above last year's average and the level of the corresponding date a year ago, it may be significant that the trend last year was up. This year it is down. Wholesale prices — another business gage — are down. Unemployment, as measured by veterans and unemployment insurance payments, is increasing.

GRAVITY

The gravity of the fiscal situation confronting us is emphasized by experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation who estimate that even a 10-percent recession in the aggregate personal income would result in a loss of $5,000,000,000 in tax revenue. Should this occur, it must be added to the estimates of deficits which I have previously given, because I have estimated the revenue on the basis of a continuation of the level when the President prepared the budget last November or December. We did not think of ourselves as being in a depression at the end of World War II, but in 1945 our personal income was 20 percent less than it was in 1948. If our aggregate individual income should drop 20 percent this year, Federal tax revenue in fiscal year 1951 would drop $10,000,000,000, and create one of the most serious financial crises this Nation has ever known.

THE CRISIS

For 16 years, as a United States Senator, I have studied the Federal budget minutely, and I have observed the Government's trend to more and more paternalism, regimentation, and centralization, with all of the extravagant characteristics of that course. I have studied the latest advices from the economic analysts of the Commerce Department, from the experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue, and from the fiscal officers of the Treasury Department and the Budget Bureau. I have the latest employment reports from the Bureau of the Census and the Department of Labor. I have canvassed the views of industrial experts, businessmen, and farmers.

Enactment of the pending program and budget—with or without the President's proposals for additional taxes—must be regarded with grave anxiety; for, in this event, I am convinced that in the coming year we shall extend our fiscal and economic stability to extremes where it may be unable to withstand additional pressures which are unavoidable in fiscal year 1951.

When our fiscal and economic stability weakens there is certain to be a demoralizing domestic crisis which could be disastrous to our private enterprise system and, therefore, to our form of government.

PROSPECTS

To me the fiscal picture of our Government is bleak. The prospects are fraught with the gravest public consequences. The crisis is virtually upon us.

A year from now the Senate will be struggling with the question of what to do with respect to the great deficit which will confront us, as to what appropriations must be reduced, and as to what new taxes must be imposed. Remember that taxes imposed on a declining business level may accelerate a mere recession in business to a first class depression.

We have only three courses open. The first is a drastic reduction in spending. The second is a substantial increase in taxes. The third is large-scale deficit financing.

DEFICITS

The third course is unthinkable to me. Under current circumstances its adoption would shatter public confidence in Federal securities at a time when the debt is a quarter of a trillion dollars. Citizens who own bonds would ask themselves, if the Government cannot balance its budget in this period of prosperity, and in time of peace, will it ever be balanced again? If Congress embarks again on deliberate deficit financing, I, for one, seriously doubt whether we shall ever again balance the Federal budget. Our credit would be wrecked and our system of Government destroyed.

We must remember that we had deficits extending from 1932 until just recently. When that period began the debt of the Federal Government was only $16,000,000,000, and we were in a depression at that time. I have always believed that had we levied taxes during that period in proportion to our expenditures, the expenditures would have been much less. But, Mr. President, deficit spending now must be added to a debt of more than $250,000,000,000, and at a time when, as I have said, as of today, we are enjoying a very high level of prosperity.

TAXES

Are new taxes the answer? What would be the result of a substantial increase on a business economy when it is already receding? By all the rules, new taxes at such a time as this may easily accelerate a minor business decline into a major recession. Business is never more sensitive to new costs and taxes than it is on a declining market.

Any picture of our tax system must include State and local taxes. These taxes have recently been increased at such a rapid rate that no current estimate of the total is now available, but it is reasonable to assume they now total at least $16,000,000,000 in addition to Federal levies. There is reason to expect that State, municipal, and county deficits may come simultaneously with Federal deficits.

RETRENCHMENT

Reduction in Federal expenditures can be accomplished only if there is a desire for it and a will to do it. Actually, we have assumed—and we are still assuming—tremendous long-term expenditure commitments with little appreciable inclination for any offsetting retrenchment or even for token reduction.

THE BUDGET FOR FISCAL YEAR 1950

When we analyze the President's budget requests for fiscal year 1950 which begins July 1, 1949, we know that the Federal Government is permeated with waste and inefficiency. We know that with the exception of the interest on the debt and several other items of similar character, there is not a single category in the expenditure side of the budget that could not absorb a full 10-percent reduction in administrative costs without impairment of essential functions. We know that administrative efficiency and economy should be the responsibility of the executive branch.

FORTY PROPOSALS

It must be noted by the legislative branch, however, that the President's budget submitted in January contains some 40 spending proposals—exclusive of major military and foreign commitments—which require new legislation by Congress. Some of these, it is true, are for continuation of projects already authorized and undertaken, but many of them open up completely new fields of Government spending. Mr. President, in the President's budget there was not even one recommendation to discontinue a single existing function. Retrenchment in these new programs, projects, and policies is the responsibility of Congress.

To analyze the Federal budget is a huge job and a tiresome task. But it is of absorbing interest to those who have been conscious of the trend which has been developing for 15 years in this country.

REVENUE IN 1950

In analyzing the revenue side of the President's budget recommendations for fiscal year 1950 it is interesting to look at it in three parts:

First. General revenue taxes, including taxes on personal and corporate income, and excise taxes levied on a great many goods and services we buy.

Second. Pay-roll taxes, including employment taxes levied for social security old-age insurance, and the proposed socialized medicine.

Third. Receipts, including miscellaneous receipts from various sources such as the sale of surplus property, and customs receipts from duty on imports.

Income taxes, excise taxes, and receipts are combined in the regular budget to defray the expenses of the regular general-fund expenditures. The pay-roll taxes, on the other hand, are routed through trust-fund channels outside the regular budget and do not show up at all in the revenue totals ordinarily reported. In other words, if we look at the budget, on the revenue side, it does not disclose the full amounts being paid by the citizens of the United States, because it does not include the pay-roll taxes. However, those taxes are just as much taxes as if they were levied in other ways.

Reduced to tabular form, the story of the revenue side of the President's 1950 budget follows:

[In billions of dollars]

Sources	Under existing legislation	Additional taxes proposed by the President	Gross total, including refunds	Gross total, excluding refunds
1. General revenue taxes, including taxes on personal and corporate income and excise taxes	39.9	4.0	43.9	41.9
2. Employment taxes, including pay-roll taxes levied for social security, old-age insurance, and proposed socialized medicine	3.3	1.9	5.2	5.2
3. Receipts, including miscellaneous receipts and customs receipts	2.1	.1	2.2	2.2
Total	[1] 45.3	6.0	51.3	49.3

[1] This figure is gross, including refunds. If refunds were deducted it would be approximately 43.2 billion dollars.

It should be noted that not all of the employment taxes collected by the Federal Government are expended through trust funds. In fiscal year 1950 the President estimates that $904,000,000 of employment taxes will be spent through the regular budget for such items as railroad retirement, and so forth, and therefore must be credited to regular budget revenue. When these funds are added to the $41,900,000,000 from income and excise taxes, and $2,200,000,000 in miscellaneous and customs receipts, the total amount available for expenditure through the regular budget, under the President's proposals, becomes $45,000,000,000. If the President's proposals for taxes are not adopted the total under existing taxes is only $40,900,000,000 as I stated at the beginning.

To reconcile the figures in this table with the $41,000,000,000 revenue estimate which was publicized at the time the President brought in his January budget recommendations, we merely take the President's estimate, excluding refunds, of $41,000,000,000 and add in the items excluded in the President's estimate, which were:

Old-age insurance funds under existing legislation	$2,400,000,000
Old-age insurance and socialized medicine funds proposed legislation	1,900,000,000
Income tax increases under proposed legislation	4,000,000,000

We find that the excluded items total $8,300,000,000, and the reconciled figure becomes $49,300,000,000.

TAX TREND

With these figures in mind, let us see the trend in the taxes we have been paying to the Federal Government. In the year before Pearl Harbor our income, pay roll, and excise tax bill from the Federal Government totaled $7,250,000,000 (exclusive of customs and miscellaneous receipts). A year after the war was over it was $36,250,000,000. In the current fiscal year it is $38,500,000,000. If the present Congress were to enact the budget submitted by the President in January, our Federal tax bill next year would be $47,100,000,000. Mr. President, if miscellaneous and customs receipts are added, the total would become $49,300,000,000.

Our Federal tax bill this year is more than five times its amount in the year before Pearl Harbor. If the new budget requests were enacted our postwar Federal tax bill next year would go to 6½ times our prewar Federal tax bill. In this connection it should be noted that our current national income is slightly more than two times its total in the year before Pearl Harbor, and that our adult population has increased by about one-tenth. The total of the national income is only twice as much as it was in the year before Pearl Harbor, but we are collecting more than five times as much in general taxes. It may be of interest to note further that the cost of living, on a consumer price basis, exclusive of taxes, is less than two times its level in the year before Pearl Harbor. Thus we see how much of the increased cost of living is due to taxes.

With increases in national income and population taken into account, Federal taxes in the year before Pearl Harbor amounted to 7 percent of income; a year after the war was over, Federal taxes amounted to 17 percent of income; and again in the current year Federal taxes, exclusive of local and State taxes, amount to 17 percent of income. Assuming there is no reduction in income if the budget submitted by the President in January were enacted, our Federal tax bill next year would amount to 21 percent of income. When State and local taxes are added the total tax bill amounts to nearly 30 percent of the total income of the country.

Under the President's proposals, including his proposals for new taxes, the Federal Government in 1950 would be taking $33,900,000,000 in Federal income taxes on individuals and corporations, $7,900,000,000 in Federal excise taxes, $5,300,000,000 in Federal employment taxes, and miscellaneous and customs receipts would be about $2,200,000,000, making a total yearly income of $49,300,000,000.

INCOME TAXES IN 1950

The $33,900,000,000 in Federal income taxes on individuals and corporations would be an increase of $5,600,000,000 over the Federal income tax total expected this year. It would be $6,900,000,000 more than we paid the year after the war was over. And, while national income is little more than two times what it was in the year before Pearl Harbor, Federal income taxes next year would be eight times the $3,900,000,000 collected in the year before the war.

EXCISE TAXES IN 1950

Federal excise taxes are the nuisance levies on motor-vehicle fuels and accessories, telephone calls, train tickets, amusement admissions, electrical appliances, luggage, cosmetics, furs, jewelry, radio sets, musical instruments, tobacco, liquor, and so forth. Through these excise taxes next year we are expected to pay into the Federal Treasury $7,900,000,000. That is almost as much as the combined tax collections of all our State governments. It would be about $200,000,000 more than is to be collected from the sale of these items in the current year. It would be more than half a billion in excess of the yield from these taxes in the year after the war was over, and it would be nearly three and one-half times the amount brought in by these Federal levies in the year before Pearl Harbor.

PAY-ROLL TAXES IN 1950

Employment taxes are a relatively new type of levy, and they are growing. It is by additional Federal employment taxes that the President, in his January budget message, proposed to raise $260,000,000 next year to start socialized medicine, and this will be only the beginning. Members of the Senate know that these great plans start with a small amount. They get a foot in the door. Here is a plan for socialized medicine, which starts this year with $260,000,000, but which is estimated to cost, when it gets into full operation, as much as $10,000,000,000 a year.

This program was conceived by the Federal Security Administrator on the basis of a 4-percent employment tax split to impose 2 percent on employees and 2 percent on employers. Tied to an estimated $165,000,000,000 pay roll, a 4-percent employment tax in the full year would bring in $6,500,000,000—half of it withheld from every wage earner's pay check and the other half assessed upon his employer. Authoritative estimates indicate the Federal medical cost will go to $10,000,000,000 a year when the program gets into full swing. Ten billion dollars is more than total Federal expenditures for all purposes 2 years before Pearl Harbor.

The additional employment tax for socialized medicine is not the only increase due next year in these Federal employment taxes. The old-age tax under social security increases a full 1 percent on July 1, if the President's proposal is followed—half on employees and half on employers. By this request the President would move the increase up 6 months. Under existing law, this increase would not become effective until next January. Still further, the President proposed to expand social-security coverage.

All of these changes would mean total Federal employment taxes next year would amount to $5,200,000,000, imposed on employees and on employers. This is more than two times Federal employment taxes this year, more than two times Federal employment taxes in the year after the war, more than five and one-half times employment taxes in the year before Pearl Harbor.

These Federal income, excise, and employment taxes, under the President's proposals totaling $47,100,000,000 plus $2,200,000,000 in customs and miscellaneous receipts, bring the total Federal take to $49,300,000,000, instead of $40,900,000,000 which was heralded in most headlines when the President's budget was submitted in January. The $40,900,000,000 was only the total estimated in regular budget revenue on the basis of present rates applied to the economic situation as it existed in calendar year 1948.

TOTAL TAXES IN 1950

Assuming the income is sustained at peak inflation and the President's tax budget were enacted, the amount available for expenditure next year by the Federal Government would be $49,300,000,000.

DEBT

From that total, of course, amounts equal to collections for old-age insurance, and so forth, would be transferred to trust accounts. But if current practice prevails, the transfer will be in the nature of an evidence of debt. I hope Senators will mark that. This is not an inference that the retirement funds are not sound, for they are as sound as any of our Government bonds. The Government will use the cash and credit the debt. Retirement payments will be made from the trust funds when required, but these payments are not made through the budget.

At present the Federal debt is about $252,000,000,000. The annual interest on the debt will be approximately $5,500,000,000. In 1940 this was the assessed valuation of all taxable property in States like Illinois, New Jersey, and Indiana. In other words, the interest on the public debt for 1 year is equal to the assessed value of all taxable property in the three States of Illinois, New Jersey, and Indiana.

Nearly one-fifth of that interest will be paid to Federal trust funds which next year will be holding up to $35,000,000,000 of the Federal debt. That is a serious situation—the amount of the Federal debt which is being invested in the trust funds, which are funds paid in, in part, by the beneficiaries of those funds. That is constantly growing, so that now $35,000,000,000 of the Federal debt is held in these trust funds. This is more of the debt than is held by banks and the Postal Savings System combined. It is possible that under present practices and trends we could build a floor under the Federal debt in this manner, and, as we shall see, interest on the Federal debt is running now at more than 10 percent of all general-fund expenditures.

I ask unanimous consent to insert certain additional tables in the RECORD as a part of my remarks at this point.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPENDITURES IN 1950

We have seen that if the President's tax proposals are enacted Federal revenue from miscellaneous and customs receipts plus taxes from all sources would total more than $49,000,000,000. We have seen also that if present taxes are not increased—and if tax sources should remain at last year's level—Federal revenue for regular budget purposes will total less than $41,000,000,000. Now, let's add up the expenditures which the President has recommended.

	Billions
When the President submitted his 1950 budget in January he listed regular budget items totaling	$41.9
But, when he submitted the budget it was known that he omitted items for:
Western European military alliance (exclusive of Greek-Turk) now estimated at	1.2
Remote area aid now informally estimated at	.1
Supplementals for veterans, etc., now estimated at	1.1
So, the President's regular budget requests for fiscal year 1950 now total	$44.3
It should be noted at this point that the President also recommended an increase in postal rates totaling $250,000,000, to reduce the postal deficit. If this increase is not enacted the above regular budget expenditure total would be increased by $250,000,000 to	44.5½
In addition to the regular budget expenditures which I have just totaled, 1950 expenditures from employment taxes to trust funds (outside the regular budget) as recommended by the President, include:
For old-age and survivors' insurance:
(a) under existing legislation	2.7
(b) under proposed legislation	1.7
For socialized medicine under proposed legislation	.3
Making total expenditures from employment taxes to trust funds (outside the regular budget)	$4.7
Thus we see that expenditures from regular budget revenue plus expenditures from pay-roll taxes in 1950 are estimated at a grand total of	+49

1950 EXPENDITURE REQUESTS

When he submitted his regular budget in January the President requested $2,600,000,000 for health and welfare expenditures in fiscal year 1950, exclusive of any social security or socialized medicine payments from trust funds.

He requested $338,000,000 for housing. In connection with this figure it should be pointed out that it does not take into account liabilities to be assumed under any new housing-insurance programs and that the proposed new low-rent subsidies will not reach substantial amounts until after 1950.

And the President further recommended:

$414,000,000 for education and research, exclusive of GI education aid, which he included in the veterans' item;

$1,700,000,000 for agriculture, without consideration of the Brannan plan, which at that time had not been submitted;

$1,000,000,000 for natural resources;

$1,600,000,000 for transportation—this figure will rise if the postal deficit is not offset by enactment of a quarter of a billion dollars in additional postal rates;

$107,000,000 for controls and promotion of finance, commerce, and industry;

$187,000,000 for labor; and

$1,200,000,000 for general Government expenses, exclusive of interest on the debt.

Nearly all of these requests represented increases over the expenditures for the current year, and are much higher than they were in the years before and after the war.

Most of these items are for general operation of civilian agencies, and, although they total more than $10,000,000,000, they are relatively small when compared with the really big expenditure items such as national defense, foreign aid, veterans, and interest on the debt.

BIG EXPENSE ITEMS

Interest on the debt in fiscal year 1950 is estimated at nearly $5,500,000,000. It is five times the $1,100,000,000 we paid out in Federal-debt interest in the year before Pearl Harbor. With at least nominal reduction in the debt since the war we would expect the interest cost to be coming down, but it is not. It is going up. Next year it will be $125,000,000 higher than it is this year. And this year it is a half billion dollars higher than it was in the year after the war. This is due largely to accumulation in the employment-tax trust funds and to the fact that the cost of E bonds builds up fast as they approach maturity. In addition, there has been a recent stiffening in the cost of short-term financing.

The President originally requested $4,900,000,000 for veterans. This was a reduction of about $1,300,000,000 under expenditures estimated earlier this year. The reduction was largely in adjustment programs. But now the estimates for both this year and fiscal year 1950 are being revised upward. The GI programs are not tapering off as sharply as expected. The original request also contemplated postponement of major veterans' construction projects. Whether this is done remains to be seen.

As to national defense and foreign-relief programs, even now there is still no really firm estimate on expenditures in these categories for next year. When the President submitted his budget he completely omitted any estimate for the proposed western European military alliance, and his proposal to extend American business and scientific assistance to the remote areas of the earth. In addition, he based his Air Force estimate on 48 groups instead of the 70 groups which are authorized.

Without estimates for these two items the defense-foreign aid costs were estimated at $21,000,000,000. When the military alliance and remote area aid are in, this figure might easily approach $23,000,000,000. This year the cost of these two items is $19,000,000,000. The year after the war was over the total for military and foreign aid was $22,000,000,000, including the cost of the military still largely on a war basis and UNRRA. The year before Pearl Harbor these items amounted to $6,400,000,000.

Exclusive of the social-security and health-benefit payments from trust funds, the domestic civilian expenditure budget for next year totals more than $20,000,000,000, including the postal deficit. In the aggregate, this represents no reduction under the cost of these items this year. Expenditures the year after the war were $3,000,000,000 less. In the year before Pearl Harbor they totaled $7,000,000,000.

Combined—national defense, foreign aid, and the remainder of the expenditure budget for next year will total upward of $45,000,000,000, exclusive of social-security and health-benefit payments, from trust funds and tax refunds. For the current year, ending June 30, the President estimated that expenditures would be $40,000,000,000, but they will be higher. In the year after the war total Federal expenditures were $39,000,000,000, and in the year before the war they were $13,300,000,000.

OBSERVATIONS

Mr. BYRD. The trend of our Federal expenditures from the standpoint of size can be observed from these comparisons. It is easy to toss them off with a mere suggestion that times have changed, and the cost of everything has increased. But there is a significant factor which stands out in analysis of all recent Federal budgets, and it is highly important to those who are concerned about financing the Federal Government in the future.

Mr. President, when you analyze these budgets, especially those for the years since the war, you find that more and more Federal expenditures are being tied to long-term commitments on which no responsible government can renege—no matter what the condition of the Treasury may be.

LONG-TERM COMMITMENTS

All social programs fall into this long-term commitment category if they are sincerely conceived.

The same is true of veterans' programs.

Our agriculture-subsidy program has developed into a permanent commitment.

Huge public works projects require capital outlay expenditures over a period of years and, in addition, increased maintenance and operation costs are permanent.

Once a State grant-in-aid program is inaugurated, it cannot be disturbed without upsetting 48 State budgets. That is one reason why I was so opposed to what was done by the Senate last night in starting the program of subsidizing public education, because, once started, such a program can never be stopped, and will not be stopped; to the contrary, it will be increased and increased as the years go on. It is a permanent commitment of the financial resources of the Federal Treasury.

Most major defense projects require expenditure commitment for more than 1 year.

We even tie foreign relief and aid to 5-year programs.

Every time we indulge in deficit spending we assume long-term debt financing.

Reducing public expenditures is always difficult. But reducing public expenditures when they involve the integrity of the Government—in the form of promises to pay—is something more than just difficult.

Some of these promises to pay—such as public-works construction and production of military equipment—are actually in the form of contracts. Others—such as grants-in-aid and veterans payments—are moral obligations.

The extent of these long-term promises to pay may be seen by a quick run-down of the major categories in the pending budget for fiscal year 1950 beginning in July; and bear in mind the figures I shall mention at first do not include pay-roll and administrative costs. They are merely payments which the Government is legally and morally bound to make next year.

First there are payments to be made on what I choose to call long-term domestic civilian commitments. These include:

	Billions
Interest on the debt which will run to nearly	$5½
Veterans' pensions, adjustment aids, and hospitalization (exclusive of construction) which will run to approximately	5
Federal contributions to retirement funds, including expenditures for railroad retirement—but exclusive of military retirement and social-security payments	1
Direct Federal public works, including veterans' construction, but excluding Federal-aid projects, which will run to nearly	2½
Grants-in-aid and shared-revenue programs, including federalized education	2½

These five items total more than $16,000,000,000 in fixed costs virtually impossible of reduction at any point except the remote possibility that federalized education might be rejected.

In addition to these domestic civilian commitments, there are others which fluctuate widely from year to year. The first is agricultural subsidies. I want to emphasize, too, that the estimates of expenditures I have made are based upon estimates contained in the President's budget for parity payments, without any question of the adoption of the Brannan plan, with all its enormous cost. Even the Secretary of Agriculture says he is unable to estimate what the plan would cost. The conservativeness of the estimate I have made is shown by the fact that if there is any serious decline in the price of agricultural products, the President's estimate of parity payments will actually be greatly increased under the law. But I took the estimates as they were in the budget.

We have business subsidies, merchant-marine subsidies, losses by Federal corporations, postal deficits, and so forth.

Assuming the Brannan plan will not be adopted, and that the present agriculture-subsidy formula will be continued, the cost of these additional long-term domestic civilian commitments in fiscal year 1950 may be estimated at considerably more than $1,500,000,000.

Thus, exclusive of pay-roll costs, administrative costs, foreign economic-aid costs, foreign military-aid costs, our own Military Establishment costs, and exclusive of payments from social-security trust funds, we are obligated by long-term domestic civilian commitments to annual Federal expenditures running to $18,000,000,000 a year or more.

Let us remember that the year before Pearl Harbor the total cost to the Government was approximately $9,000,000,000. The figure which I have given the Senate includes nothing for the defense of our country or for our foreign commitments.

The housing program recently adopted by the Senate is a good example by which to demonstrate how these long-term commitments build up from a relatively minor item in the budget for the first year. In his January budget message, the President estimated that 1950 expenditures for the new housing legislation he proposed would total slightly more than $200,000,000.

Yet, under the low-rent-subsidy feature alone, the Federal Government will enter into 40-year contracts with localities under which the Federal expenditures of the future will range up to nearly a half billion dollars a year. Depending on how good the loans are under other features of the proposal, this program may ultimately cost the Federal Government $20,000,000,000.

Actually there were some 40 expenditure items in the President's original budget recommendations which required new substantive legislation. If approved, these items in 1950 would cost about $2,000,000,000. But in terms of long-time commitments it was a multi-billion-dollar program.

The housing program is an example of one type of long-term authorization.

SEAWAY

Another type is illustrated by the recommendation to authorize United States participation in construction of the proposed St. Lawrence seaway. This was in the 1950 budget for a mere $8,000,000, but the ultimate cost to the United States—for construction alone—is estimated at more than a half billion dollars.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. In connection with the St. Lawrence waterway, the channels would be so shallow that we would have to dredge twice as deeply as they are now dredged, and therefore it would probably cost twice as much. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. That is correct. These great projects start with a very small appropriation. The budget provides for only $8,000,000, but if we approve the project it will cost half a billion dollars, and may cost more than that.

EDUCATION

Still another type of commitment, permanent in nature, is illustrated by the pending proposal for Federal aid to elementary and secondary education which was passed yesterday by the Senate. This item is in the 1950 expenditure budget for $290,000,000 to augment, or subsidize, teachers' pay. In the opinion of many, this may be a very meritorious proposal. But will it stop here; or is it just the beginning for Federal aid to other phases of the education system in years to come? In answer to this question I refer the Senate to page 16 of the President's January Economic Report, where, after recommending initiation of the pending program, he said:

> We should make plans whereby the opportunities for higher education would be expanded through cooperation between the Federal Government and public agencies and private institutions, including a system of general scholarships and fellowships. And a study should be initiated to determine authoritatively our national needs for educational facilities and the most feasible methods of providing them.

And, in this connection, there is in the 1950 budget $1,000,000 for "survey of educational building needs, and study of scholarships and fellowships."

I predict that the Federal budget item for Federal aid to education will never again be as low as the $290,000,000 figure in the 1950 estimates.

These examples of tiny acorns from which big-spending oaks grow, that I have cited to this point, all affect the general fund budget, the cost of which is met largely by straight Federal taxes on personal and corporate income, and excise taxes on things and services we buy.

MEDICINE

There is still another type of Federal commitment which operates largely outside the general-fund budget, but it costs money just the same, and it requires another Federal levy. In the pending program this type of long-term commitment is illustrated by the proposed socialized-medicine program. In this case the program is compulsory, and part of the costs are supposed to be paid from an additional Federal levy in pay-roll taxes which would go into a trust fund and be expended to a great extent outside the general-fund budget.

This proposal was brought in without any official estimate by the administration as to its ultimate cost. But, on page 17 of the President's January Economic Report, he recommended enactment this year of a program to assure that all individuals have access to the medical care they need. He said Federal grants in support of hospital construction are an indispensable support to such a program. He also said it would be necessary to augment the number of doctors, dentists, and nurses. Estimates on this program run as high as $10,000,000,000 a year. It is disposed of in the 1950 budget with the recommendation for a levy totaling $260,000,000 in pay-roll taxes to finance the program through the trust-fund technique, outside the regular budget.

But it must be understood that once employees and employers contribute through pay-roll taxes to this program, the Federal Government is committed to make good its promise to provide adequate medical care and service, for whatever it may cost.

In other words, if the pay-roll deductions are not sufficient to give every person medical attention, the Federal Government is obligated to augment the funds out of the general funds of the Treasury and make available whatever money is necessary to accomplish the result.

ALLIANCE

The proposed military alliance is in the nature of an indefinite commitment to rearm North Atlantic Pact nations for which no expiration date has been fixed. Under pressure the State Department has made an estimate of something over a billion dollars for the first year. But even this would appear to be low inasmuch as the program involves giving away reserve military stock, with heavy transportation costs, and highly expensive replacement of equipment and matériel for our own military services.

AGRICULTURE

The most horrible example of long-term commitments would be the adoption of the so-called Brannan agriculture plan by which the Federal Government would underwrite a producer-distributor-consumer utopia. The author of the plan admits its costs cannot be estimated.

These are only examples of scores of Federal programs by which the Federal Government is, or would be, committed to huge continuing expenditures under long-term contracts or moral obligations.

I invite attention to them for four reasons:

The first reason is to show why it is virtually impossible to reduce Federal expenditures substantially, insofar as they implement vast programs, projects, and policies already authorized.

The second reason is to cite chapter and verse evidence on which I base my contention that the place to cut Federal expenditures is at the inception of the program, project, or policy involved. It is too much to expect that appropriations will be withheld from programs, projects, and policies already authorized in previous substantive legislation.

The third reason is to enlist your support in a campaign which I start now to require that every bill reaching the calendar of either House of Congress be accompanied by a competent estimate of its annual and ultimate cost to the Federal Government. I know, we all are familiar with the recent contentions that some programs, projects, and policies either cannot or should not be considered in terms of cost. In a relatively few cases I may agree, but only with the reservation that frank rejection of the proposals would be far better than the deceit of a promise which cannot be fulfilled. And, how do we know whether we can meet our financial requirements until we know what the requirements are?

My fourth reason for inviting your attention to these long-term commitments is to show their effect on the current and coming Federal budgets in the foreseeable future. As these extended programs get under way they gather terrific momentum which forces expenditure budgets up and up. They are largely responsible for the serious fiscal prospects which confront us now. And every day we are trying to assume the obligations of more.

If the President's program for fiscal year 1950 is substantially enacted in this session of Congress, the increasing momentum of existing commitments combined with new ones to be assumed under the President's proposals are certain to drive Federal expenditures to a dangerous height in fiscal year 1951.

On this basis expenditures from the regular budget may be projected for fiscal years 1949, 1950, and 1951 as indicated on the table which I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHOEPPEL in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Expenditure projection

Categories of regular budget expenditures	Comparative estimates (in billions of dollars)
	1949 (ending June 30)	1950 (beginning July 1, 1949)	1951 (beginning July 1, 1950)
1. Long-term domestic commitments (exclusive of pay-roll and administrative costs):
Interest on debt	5,325	5,450	5,500
Veterans' pensions, adjustment aids and hospitalization (exclusive of construction and pay roll)	5,850	5,000	4,800
Federal expenditures for retirement funds (including railroad retirement)	1,000	1,000	1,000
Direct public works (exclusive of Federal aid; inclusive of veterans' construction)	2,000	2,400	2,500
Grants-in-aid and shared-revenue programs (including Federal education)	2,000	2,500	3,000
Subtotal	16,125	16,350	16,800
2. Additional commitments (exclusive of pay roll and administrative costs) including agriculture, business and merchant marine subsidies, corporate losses, postal deficits, etc.	$1,200	[1]$1,600	$2,200
3. Pay-roll and administrative costs (exclusive of National Military Establishment and foreign programs)	3,800	4,100	4,400
Subtotal	5,300	5,700	6,600
4. Foreign economic commitments (and Greek-Turk aid) including ECA, occupied-area, remote-area aid, etc., and participation in international organizations (including pay-roll and administrative costs)	7,125	7,000	6,500
5. Western European military alliance aid (including pay-roll and administrative costs)		1,200	1,500

[1] This figure assumes the postal deficit will be reduced by $250,000,000 through increased postal rates; otherwise this figure and the totals would increase by $250,000,000.

Categories of regular budget expenditures	Comparative estimates (in billions of dollars)
	1949 (ending June 30)	1950 (beginning July 1, 1949)	1951 (beginning July 1, 1950)
6. National Military Establishment (including civilian pay-roll and administrative costs)	11.755	14,500	16,000
Subtotal	18,970	22,500	24,000
Total[2]	40,395	44,550	47,400
Refunds	2,700	2,100	1,600
Total	43,095	46,650	49,000

[2] These figures represent total expenditures through the general-fund budget and are exclusive of social security and proposed socialized medicine payments from employment tax trust funds.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, these are projections of the regular budget. They do not take into account the social-security old-age program, the proposed socialized-medicine plan, or any other operations which are handled through trust funds outside the budget.

ESTIMATES CONSERVATIVE

The figures on the spending side of these projections are not appropriation estimates. They are expenditure estimates. There is a vast difference. There is a great deal of confusion about appropriations. The appropriations are made in 1 year, but they are not spent for 2 or 3 years afterward. The estimates I have attempted to give are all on the expenditure basis. I have consulted with the Budget Bureau and the Treasury Department, and while I am not at liberty to state officially what they have told me, I am convinced that they will not take issue seriously with any estimates I make here today.

Appropriations are not necessarily expended in the year in which they are approved. Appropriations enacted in a high-revenue year may actually be spent in a low-revenue year.

Mr. President, an appropriation bill should show in columns what could be expended in the fiscal year, and we could proceed in much better order than now, when we have 12 appropriation bills coming in, and no Senator, not even the members of the Committee on Appropriations, can tell the Senate at any given time how much has been obligated for expenditure in that fiscal year or the succeeding fiscal year.

Deficits or surpluses are determined by expenditures—not appropriations—against revenue.

Senators probably will regard these expenditure estimates as ultra conservative when they realize that they include no more than a moderate increase for agricultural subsidy losses under the present formula; they do not contemplate the Brannan plan. They do not contemplate a 70-group Air Force. They do not project any general fund expenditures for socialized medicine. If vast projects like new valley authorities are undertaken, they would be in addition.

On the revenue side my estimates will decrease with any substantial decline from the high level of prosperity which prevailed at the time the President's January budget message was submitted.

I leave it to my colleagues as to whether we shall maintain prosperity at the high average of the 1948 calendar year. If we do not maintain that level, experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation calculate that a 10-percent drop in the aggregate of personal incomes would mean a loss of $5,000,000,000 in Federal revenue under the existing system and rates.

They use personal income as a gage in the measurement of other principal factors. If we returned to a level of prosperity which prevailed at the end of the war—and we did not regard ourselves in a depression then—the reduction in personal income would be 20 percent. In that event, by the experts' formula, Federal revenue would be $10,000,000,000 less than my projected figures.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to insert another table in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FISCAL YEAR 1951

It is against a background of admittedly uncertain economic conditions, and these revenue prospects, that we project the Federal expenditure situation in 1951. A simple analysis of the known expenditures in the current year 1949, and the requests by the President for fiscal year 1950 reveals the magnitude and the duration of the obligations which would have to be endured by our free-enterprise system and our form of government.

LONG-TERM DOMESTIC CIVILIAN COMMITMENTS

First, are the long-term domestic civilian commitments (exclusive of pay-roll and administrative costs), in the nature of contracts or promises to pay. Expenditure items in this category include:

1. DEBT INTEREST

Interest on the Federal debt. This item of more than $5,000,000,000 would rise even if the debt were reduced by nominal amounts. The reasons for this are (a) interest on certain classes of government debt is rising rapidly as they approach maturity, and (b) the increasing amount of the debt, carrying relatively high interest rates, held by trust funds such as social security.

2. VETERANS

Veterans' pensions, adjustment aids, and hospitalization (exclusive of public works construction). The adjustment costs in this item are not declining at the expected rate for this period. The reasons for this are (a) payment increases enacted a year ago, and (b) recession in employment. It is expected that as education and training costs decrease there will be some increase in hospitalization costs. Expenditures for veterans (exclusive of public works and pay roll) in 1949 are running at close to $6,000,000,000. Next year they will approach $5,000,000,000. In 1951 they will be more than $4,500,000,000.

3. RETIREMENT

Federal contributions to Civil Service, Foreign Service, Panama, Alaska and other retirement funds, and expenditures for railroad retirement. (This is exclusive of military retirement.)

Expenditures for retirement funds in 1949 are running at about $1,000,000,000. They are expected to remain more or less constant in 1950 and 1951.

4. WORKS

Direct Federal public works (excluding Federal-aid projects, but including veterans' construction projects). Efforts are being made to hold back expenditures for this item, but there are more than $30,000,000,000 in projects at some stage of construction, approval, or proposal which could be activated.

Expenditures for direct public works (exclusive of Federal-aid projects) in 1949 are running at about $2,000,000,000. Next year they are expected to be $2,400,000,000. In 1951 they will go to $2,500,000,000 or more.

5. GRANTS-IN-AID

Grants-in-aid and shared revenue programs. Expenditures for these programs in 1949 are running at $2,000,000,000. In 1950 they would be expected to approach $2,500,000,000. In 1951 they would be at about $3,000,000,000. If the federalized education program were expanded to include school-building construction, the expenditures would be additional.

6. REFUNDS

Refunds due largely to overpayments in withheld taxes and, also in 1949, to reduction in taxes.

Expenditures for refunds in 1949 are running at more than $2,700,000,000. They do not show as expenditures in the 1950 budget because the President chose to regard them as deductions from revenue. Either way they will amount to $2,100,000,000 in 1950 and $1,600,000,000 in 1951.

These so-called long-term domestic commitments (exclusive of pay roll and administrative costs) in 1949 are running at $16,100,000,000 exclusive of refunds, and $18,900,000,000 with refunds. In 1950 they would total $16,300,000,000 exclusive of refunds. If refunds were included, the figure would be $18,400,000,000. In 1951 they would be $16,800,000,000 exclusive of refunds. If refunds were included, the total would rise to $18,400,000,000.

OTHER DOMESTIC CIVILIAN COMMITMENTS

In addition to these long-term domestic commitments which will continue at a relatively constant rate between $15,000,000,000 and $20,000,000,000 (exclusive of pay roll and administration), there are also other domestic commitments which vary sharply with conditions and policy. And there are some more or less permanent costs not in the nature of commitments.

In this second group of domestic commitments and costs (exclusive of executive branch pay roll and administration) are:

1. Subsidies for agriculture, business, merchant marine, and housing.
2. Postal deficits.
3. Federal corporate losses.
4. Costs of legislative and judicial branches of the Government.

Expenditures for this group of domestic commitments and costs, in 1949, are running at $1,500,000,000. They will be $1,600,000,000 in 1950, exclusive of any sharply increased housing subsidies and providing the postal deficit is curtailed by increased rates. Increases, including the housing subsidies, probably would bring the 1951 expenditures to approximately $2,250,000,000.

PAY ROLL AND ADMINISTRATION

Executive branch agencies concerned with domestic civilian programs, projects, and policies (exclusive of those engaged in military and foreign aid activities) are using about 60 percent of the civilian personnel of the Government. The total number of employees in the executive branch at present is averaging well over 2,000,000 and pay-roll costs are running at nearly $6,500,000,000 a year. Other administrative costs also are involved.

Pay-roll and administration costs connected with domestic civilian commitments in 1949 are running at $4,000,000,000. Expansion required by the new proposals probably would increase these expenditures to $4,100,000,000 in 1950 and $4,400,000,000 in 1951. These costs will be greater in 1950 and 1951 if substantial increases result from the proposed reclassification of civil-service positions.

Thus, it is seen that domestic civilian commitments (most of them of a long-term nature) plus personnel and administrative costs are running at approximately $21,500,000,000 in 1949, exclusive of refunds. There is no reason to expect reduction in these categories in 1950 or in 1951. If the new proposals in this field are adopted, expenditures (exclusive of refunds) would mount to approximately $22,000,000,000 in 1950, and to $23,500,000,000 in 1951. These figures are exclusive, of course, of increased expenditures from trust funds which would follow expanded social security and adoption of socialized medicine. If refunds were counted as expenditures the total for 1949 would become more than $24,000,000,000. It would increase slightly in 1950 and reach $25,000,000,000 in 1951.

FOREIGN ECONOMIC COMMITMENTS

The fourth category of expenditures embraces foreign economic commitments (including pay roll and administration) which also are largely tied to multiyear programs. These include ECA, occupied area costs, Greek-Turk assistance, China and other aid, and participation in international organizations.

Expenditures for foreign economic commitments, in 1949, are running at $7,250,000,000. There may be a slight reduction in 1950. Some further reduction is promised for 1951.

MILITARY ALLIANCE COMMITMENTS

The fifth category of expenditures is foreign military assistance (exclusive of Greek-Turk aid) incident to the North Atlantic Pact.

There is no firm estimate on the cost of this program. But the most frequently mentioned estimate for 1950 is $1,100,000,000. I am advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no actual commitment for 1951, but it is too much to expect a program of this character to expire in 1 year.

NATIONAL MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT

The sixth category of expenditures are those for our own National Military Establishment (exclusive of occupied area costs, but inclusive of civilian personnel pay roll).

It has been only with strenuous effort and arbitrary decision that expenditures for the National Military Establishment in 1949 have been held to $12,000,000,000. The estimate of $14,250,000,000 based on a 48-group air force in 1950 is likely to be exceeded. Fiscal year 1951 will be the big delivery year under nearly a billion dollars of Air Force contract authorization granted last year, and there probably will be delivery under some of the additional contract authorization which is under consideration at this time. National Military Establishment expenditures in 1951 probably will exceed $15,000,000,000.

Actually the foreign economic commitments, the foreign military commitments, and the National Military Establishment commitments may be regarded as integral parts of our foreign policy.

Expenditures incident to this policy as a whole, in 1949, are running at $19,000,000,000. They will be more than $22,000,000,000 in 1950. They will increase substantially in 1951.

When domestic civilian commitments and costs running at $21,500,000,000 (exclusive of $2,700,000,000 in refunds) in 1949 are combined with $19,000,000,000 in foreign policy and military commitments, total expenditures for the current year exceed $40,000,000,000.

When domestic civilian commitments ranging up to $22,000,000,000 (exclusive of $2,100,000,000 in refunds) in 1950 are combined with at least $22,500,000,000 in foreign policy and military commitments, total expenditures in fiscal year 1950, beginning July 1, will approach $45,000,000,000.

When domestic civilian commitments ranging over $23,000,000,000 (exclusive of $1,600,000,000 in refunds) in 1951 are combined with $24,000,000,000 in foreign and military commitments, total expenditures in fiscal year 1951, beginning a year hence, will total between $45,000,000,000 and $50,000,000,000 (exclusive of refunds).

To meet these expenditure requirements the President, in his January budget message estimated that there would be revenue and receipts totaling $39,600,000,000 in the current fiscal year 1949. Thus, a deficit of $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 is indicated.

For fiscal year 1950, beginning July 1, assuming a continuation of current levels of economic activity the President 4 months ago estimated revenue and receipts would total $41,000,000,000, and requested $4,000,000,000 in increased income taxes. Since that time the rate of personal income in January dropped to $219,000,000,000 as compared with $219,600,000,000 in December. And in February it dropped to a rate of $217,000,000,000. Thus, without new taxes, a deficit of more than $3,000,000,000 is indicated.

With respect to 1951, the President in his budget message said, "It must be recognized that expenditures in fiscal year 1951 are likely to be larger than those for 1950." From this it must be concluded that without additional taxes the deficit in 1951 will be between $5,000,000,000 and $10,000,000,000.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot meet these expenditure requests except by higher taxes applied to a national income sustained at the highest and most inflated point ever reached. That is to say, the fiscal integrity of the United States Government, under the proposals now before us, depends upon continuation of inflation and higher taxes. It means also that constant stability of our enterprise, which is the only source of Federal revenue, is an absolute requirement in the teeth of the most disturbing deterrents—unpredictable inflation and constricting taxes. Additional taxes under these circumstances, when business is already receding, would be dangerous indeed. To place a great additional financial burden on the people at a time of receding business might lead to diminishing income, which would result in a very serious financial crisis.

Additional taxes would be hazardous. We must not dare deficit spending at the rate indicated for either fiscal year 1950 or 1951.

RETRENCHMENT REQUIREMENTS

The remaining alternative is reduction of expenditures. This can be done. Admittedly it is difficult. To do it as it should be done would require cooperation on the part of the executive branch of the Government, Congress, and the public—particularly the pressure groups.

PUBLIC

There must be a public demand for retrenchment which cannot be denied by a bureaucracy which has been raised on 16 years of excessive spending—a bureaucracy which knows and practices the tricks of buying off such a demand with more spending.

EXECUTIVE

There must be a reduction in the overhead on existing programs, projects, and policies which can be accomplished best by simple administrative efficiency which does not require legislation.

CONGRESSIONAL

There must be courageous action by Congress in the rejection of new programs, projects, and policies which are not urgently essential.

Under existing legislative facilities and procedures any worth-while reduction in expenditures on already authorized Federal programs, projects, and policies must originate with the administration in the executive branch, which has the primary responsibility for administrative efficiency and economy. In the archaic procedures and confusing language which characterize the action by Congress on fiscal legislation, intelligent curtailment to the degree necessary is virtually impossible.

SINGLE APPROPRIATION BILL

Actually, after the President submits his recommendations, Congress never sees the budget again as a whole until after it is enacted. And as we pass on it in relatively small unrelated pieces over a period of 6 months, our action is on appropriations which may continue over a period of years—not annual expenditures which determine whether there is to be a deficit.

For several years I have been trying to correct this situation by advocating the use of the single appropriation bill capable of translation into terms of annual expenditures. I am encouraged this year by increasing support for this simple change in the rules. But we have not got it adopted yet. With such a single appropriation bill we could consider the budget as a whole, and by knowing what it means in annual expenditures we could act in the light of revenue estimates.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. The distinguished Senator from Virginia has been governor of one of the greatest and oldest States of the Union. Did he find from his experience that the fiscal management of the State of Virginia compared in any way in its effectiveness with the fiscal management of the Federal Government?

Mr. BYRD. The fiscal management of the State of Virginia was much more effective, because, in the first place, we had a more thorough budgetary control. The budget was submitted by the Governor. Secondly, we had one appropriation bill, so that we knew at all times what we were doing. When we passed that bill we knew how much money we appropriated, and we knew what our income was. Under the Federal Government system I challenge any Member of the Senate, no matter what committee he is on, the Finance Committee or the Committee on Appropriations, to report to the Senate at any given time during a session of the Senate how much we are going to spend and how much the income is estimated to be to pay for those appropriations.

Mr. BALDWIN. Would the Senator say that it has been his experience that most, if not all, the States of the Union have a better system of fiscal management and control, both in matters of budgeting appropriations and expenditure control, than does the Federal Government?

Mr. BYRD. I think the Senator from Connecticut is absolutely correct. In the first place, the appropriations of the States are not complicated by the authorization plan which exists in the Federal Congress. Authorizations are brought in here by committees other than the appropriations committees, and then we are told on the floor when we vote for an authorization that it is not binding. But once it is adopted, if any reduction is made we are told we have violated our moral obligation. That has happened time and again on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further for one observation?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. It seems to the junior Senator from Connecticut that one of the best things we could do in bringing about a better fiscal management of the Federal fiscal affairs would be to adopt the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Virginia that we have one budget and one appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRD. I am much pleased to hear the Senator say that. I want to pay tribute to my colleague the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] because he has been cooperating in that field. Last year he was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Rules and Administration which unanimously reported a measure providing for such a change in the rules of the Senate, but unfortunately we could not get action on it in the Senate. We are hoping for better results this year. I think if we were to have one budget and one appropriation bill it would be a vast improvement over our present method, because the Senate and the country generally could know what we are doing, instead of what now happens, when 12 or more appropriation bills are brought in, and a number of supplemental bills and deficiency bills are brought in, the confusion is so tremendous that, as I recall last year, very sincere and able Members of the Senate differed by as much as three to four billion dollars over the amount of money which had actually been appropriated. They could not come in any closer agreement than that in estimating the amount that had been appropriated.

Mr. President, as long as this legislative handicap exists intelligent reduction in expenditures—in any substantial degree—on programs, projects and policies already authorized must originate in the Executive Branch.

But there is every reason why Congress should make a major contribution to the requirement for retrenchment by rejecting new legislation which would authorize more and more programs, projects, and policies requiring additional expenditures.

It is with this situation in mind that I emphasize long-term Government commitments and their effect on the Federal budget; suggest that no new program should be entitled to consideration by Congress until it is accompanied by a competent estimate of annual and ultimate cost; and explain why sympathetic cooperation by the Executive Branch, Congress, and the public is necessary if we are to reduce expenditures on projects, programs and policies already authorized.

We know that costs of existing programs can be cut substantially and we know that the Federal Government is permeated with waste and inefficiency.

I have said that repeatedly, and I have had no reason to retract it, because that is something which I, as chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, have called to the attention of the committee from time to time. The fact that Federal employment is increasing at a daily average rate of 300 is evidence enough. Yet the war has been over for 5 years. Every single day 300 new employees are being put on the pay roll of the Federal Government at an average cost of about $3,200 or $3,300 each. So Senators can estimate what that costs us. Now today we have more than 2,000,000 Federal employees as compared to 1,000,000 when Pearl Harbor came. We have more than twice as many Federal employees today as we did then.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Is it not true that all this reorganizing and streamlining is not going to do any good unless some employees are taken off the pay roll? If the Federal Government is to employ as many persons, and pay them as much, in spite of reorganization and streamlining, there cannot be any reduction in the Federal pay roll by such means. It makes no difference whether they are all in one department or are divided between five departments, if no reduction in the number is made.

Mr. BYRD. That is correct. When an attempt at economy is made by reorganization, all that is done is to transfer employees from one place to another. So it results in no economy. It actually results in costing more money to the Government.

Mr. LONG. Oftentimes there are twice as many employees when two agencies have been joined into one as there were employed in the two agencies before the change was made. Is that not true?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

We are adding 300 employees every day to the domestic pay roll of the Federal Government. No one can explain why. No one can give any justification for it. When State and local government employees are added to the more than 2,000,000 on the Federal pay roll, we find that one out of every nine persons in the entire American labor force is on a government pay roll. In other words, if we take the State, county, and municipal employees and add them to the Federal employees, we find that one person out of every nine gainfully employed in this country is working for the different governments. That does not include pensioners, persons who receive subsidies, and many others. We know that if the executive branch chose to take the initiative, the administrative costs of programs, projects, and policies already authorized could be reduced a full 10 percent without impairment of a single essential function.

We know that the prevailing inclination in the legislative branch is to enact more and more programs, projects, and policies involving long-term commitments. We know that almost invariably these commitments are characterized by increased regimentation and expenditures.

REDUCTION RECOMMENDATIONS

If we are to avoid serious difficulties in the coming fiscal year and a critical situation in fiscal year 1951, we must act now to curtail the 1950 program and budget which are pending at this time in Congress.

To all concerned—the public, the Executive, and the Congress—I submit:

First. Expenditures for the next year could be reduced at least a billion dollars by eliminating completely, or postponing until a more appropriate time, nonessential proposals among the 40 the President has submitted for new legislation. The saving would be measured not only in reduction of expenditures in the coming year but indefinitely.

Second. In addition, there are other nonessentials already authorized which could be eliminated or postponed, particularly in public works, where at least another half billion dollars could be saved out of the proposed expenditures.

Third. It should not be unreasonable to expect effective unification of the armed forces and coordination of their functions and equipment to save a billion dollars, in addition to reduction in civilian manpower costs.

The Senator from Connecticut is working very energetically in the Armed Services Committee to that end now.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Senator from Virginia for his reference to the Senator from Connecticut in that regard, but I should like to say for the benefit of the RECORD that no man on the committee works more diligently than does the distinguished Senator from Virginia. Is it not his opinion, as it is the opinion of the junior Senator from Connecticut, that the security of our country and its future welfare and independence rest quite as much upon sound fiscal policies as they do upon adequate armed forces?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Connecticut is eminently correct. If the fiscal solvency of this country is ever shaken or weakened, then we shall have lost the greatest force we have. I think that what Russia fears more than anything else is not the money we are spending in Europe to fight communism. What Russia fears more than anything else is the mass-production capacity of this country, made possible under our private-enterprise system. With only 6 percent of the population of the world, we can now produce more than all the rest of the world combined. Why can we do that? It is because we have a free country and a free-enterprise system. But we could be forced to come to state socialism by reason of a weakened physical condition of our Government, and let us remember, Mr. President, that no democracy has ever survived when its fiscal solvency was impaired. So the Senator from Connecticut is entirely correct about that. Probably the most important thing for us to do is to keep ourselves strong to be able to meet any emergency that may come.

Now with regard to the armed services, former Secretary of the Army Royall has testified that a billion dollars could be saved through unification. Former President Hoover in his report on the Federal Government estimated that a billion and a half could be saved. And, Secretary of the Air Force Symington testified several billion dollars could be saved; and as the Senator from Connecticut knows, the committee has taken action now to start that program of economy within the armed services, and we are hopeful of securing results.

Mr. President, I have already mentioned the excessive civilian employment. But I now come to my fourth point.

Fourth. Excessive civilian employment is another source of major savings. Civilian employment in the Executive Branch in the year before Pearl Harbor averaged 1,164,463. The postwar low point in December 1947 was 1,995,388. At present civilian employees number 2,111,257. This is an increase over the year before Pearl Harbor of 946,794. It is an increase over the postwar low point of 115,869. Of the 115,869 total increase in Federal civilian employees since the postwar law, 66,229 have been added by the Military Establishment and 49,640 by the civilian agencies. The Military Establishment now employs more than one civilian for every two men in uniform.

The new budget requests provide for 18,000 new permanent positions (exclusive of temporary appointments) in the Federal civilian service. There were already too many. The pay roll next year, under budget proposals would run to nearly $6,500,000,000. This could be reduced at least a billion dollars without impairing any essential Federal function.

When I came to the Senate 16 years ago the total cost of government was only $4,000,000,000. Now we are spending $6,500,000,000 for salaries to employees alone. This item could be reduced at least $1,000,000,000 without impairing any essential Federal function.

Fifth. These suggested reductions total $3,500,000,000. If applied to the President's expenditure requests as they were submitted in January, they would leave a balance of $38,300,000,000, exclusive of the supplementals for the military alliance and remote area aid. Further reduction of $500,000,000 or 1½ percent would bring the total reduction to $4,000,000,000. No one familiar with the vast Federal operations covered by that $38,300,000,000 will doubt that prudent appropriating by Congress and efficient administration by the executive branch could save 1½ percent in these activities.

This $4,000,000,000 of savings would equal the request of the President for $4,000,000,000 in additional general revenue taxes.

A $4,000,000,000 cut in the President's budget proposals would represent a reduction of only about 10 percent of the over-all figure. If this could not be accomplished without impairment of a single essential Federal function it would be a sad commentary on administrative efficiency and the competence of Federal officials in general.

Elimination or postponement of the President's request for socialized medicine and expansion of social-security coverage and immediate increase in its tax rates would not only help reduce expenditures next year, but it would also preclude nearly $2,000,000,000 in new-employment taxes.

I think there is not a single department of Government whose appropriations could not be reduced by 10 percent or more without interfering with a single essential function of the Government. If I may be permitted to relate a little personal history, when I left the governorship in 1930 it appeared that a depression was coming. My successor, a very able man, Hon. John Garland Pollard, asked the legislature to place in the budget a provision that if the income was reduced by reason of the business recession he thought was coming, he should be empowered to reduce the budget in proportion. Governor Pollard reduced the budget of Virginia 30 percent, and Virginia was a fairly efficiently administered State. The departments got along all right. That continued until the depression was over, and Virginia was one of the three States in the Union at that time that did not have a deficit. So it can be done. If we were to avoid going into new ventures of spending, in accordance with these suggestions, the budget could be balanced; taxes would not be increased; and the cost of the Federal Government in future years would be reduced as well.

If we do not choose to reduce these Federal expenditures, the alternative is more taxes or deficits, more Government competition and more regimentation. We know that private enterprise is the foundation stone upon which this Nation has built its freedoms and its progress. It is a good system, and in most respects it is tough and durable. But, we know that it cannot survive excessive regimentation; it cannot survive excessive taxation; and it cannot survive excessive Government competition.

Let us remember, too, that state socialism, such as we see being incorporated in the Government of England, and free private enterprise cannot live under the same roof. If we start state socialism we must go forward to the ultimate end, as England is now doing. We continue to read in the newspapers that she is socializing a new industry. The only way to preserve our free-enterprise system in this country is to keep it free from the contamination of state socialism.

There is a world full of examples to prove that neither Socialist or Communist countries could meet such obligations as our Government had assumed even before the President's new proposals were submitted this year.

Without American solvency our constitutional freedoms would disappear at home and there would be no deterrent to communism abroad. Under existing circumstances, it is no exaggeration to say there is literally nothing on earth more important than the preservation of the fiscal integrity of the Federal Government of the United States and the financial stability of our free enterprise system. It is a dangerous situation indeed when we can count only on sustained inflation and higher taxes on inflated income and business to produce revenue of the magnitude required to meet vast new social expenditures at home and economic, social, and military programs abroad.

Our friends overseas who seek American aid and comfort must realize that the only hope for their recovery and security lies in our continued solvency and therefore, for the security of all, the stability of our system takes priority over any and all programs of international subsidies which would severely strain our economy.

By the same token, those among us at home who, through membership in pressure groups and otherwise, continue to wring more and more political pap from the Federal treasury should make a place in their consciences for the fact that impairment of our financial soundness would serve the enemies of representative government far more than any lethal weapon they could devise.

Under current conditions the security of what we have is the first security requirement.

It would appear this best could be achieved by reducing expenditures to meet revenue; not by increasing revenue to meet additional expenditures.

If increasing taxes or deficits to meet continuously higher expenditures is to be our course, it is obvious that neither our system nor our form of government can endure. With them will go our freedom and the hopes of all freedom-loving people in the world.

If this is to be our fate, there are two questions:

How long can our private enterprise system and our democratic government endure our folly? The fiscal year beginning 15 months hence will be critical and the red lights of danger are flashing in the program before us in Congress now.

What will we contrive as a substitute for the doctrines which have made us great? I know of no one who regards the British mess as something more desirable. It is probable that the mechanism our pressure groups would concoct would be worse.

Those who are responsible—willfully or otherwise—for our profligacy must leave a place in their consciences for the consequences of their deeds.

I prefer my position in the rear guard fighting for the kind of freedoms which are far more dear than dole and regimentation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I express my deep appreciation to the distinguished Senator from Virginia for the very able address which he has delivered on the floor of the Senate this afternoon. I feel it is regrettable that more Members of the Senate could not be present to hear the warnings he has sounded and consider the tables which he has presented. I recommend to Senators that they read this important message as we approach the fiscal problem now before the Eighty-first Congress in making the appropriations which, as the distinguished Senator from Virginia has pointed out, may involve the choice between deficit spending, increased taxes, or a cut in the authorizations.

The Senator has analyzed the President's budget requests for the next fiscal year. It is obvious from the observations he has made that the Senate should take important action as we consider the appropriations which are now confronting us.

Mr. President, the Congress faces a fiscal problem which is very acute, and one which should be carefully examined if we are to preserve the financial structure and economy of the Nation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield, if the Senator's remarks may be placed at the conclusion of my address.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Senate. His remarks appear at the conclusion of Mr. WHERRY's address.]

Mr. WHERRY. If we wish to have security and peace, we must keep our Nation solvent. We shall have neither security nor peace if the United States of America becomes a bankrupt Nation. In support of that statement, I refer all Members of the Senate and all the American people to the facts and the observations set forth so eloquently this afternoon by the senior Senator from Virginia. In no uncertain terms he has warned the Congress and the people of the United States that it will take a superhuman effort even to provide the appropriations for the things already authorized by the Congress; but if we add to the authorizations which already have been made, if in fact we expand the authorizations we already have, by adding to them the authorizations necessary under the program which has been submitted and requested by the President, the result will be that increased taxes will have to be levied upon the people of the United States, to the tune of approximately $11,000,000,000, if I correctly understand the figures the Senator from Virginia has presented; we shall have to levy approximately $11,000,000,000 in additional taxes by the fiscal year 1951, or else the United States will have to resort to deficit spending. The first alternative would result in hardship and depression, and to my mind would have exactly the effect the Senator from Virginia has said it would have. The second—deficit spending—would mean higher prices and cheaper dollars; it would mean that the laboring man would not take home from his salary check the money he should take home. Finally, it would mean that the United States would suffer the experience which I saw when I was in France, namely, complete bankruptcy.

Mr. President, the prospect is so serious that we in this country should wake up to the realities of the situation. If we are to grant the demands of the pressure groups and are to authorize further programs, involving the employment of thousands more persons to work for the Federal Government, more taxes will be required. We shall have to pay heavily for those authorizations, if we make them. So we should be very sure about the programs we authorize. Whether they are to be paid for from current receipts or from sources outside current receipts, we must be sure that the United States can undertake them and still remain financially solvent. If that cannot be done, the result will be as stated by the Senator from Virginia. Such a result would be what Russia is looking for in our country. Russia hopes our economy will decay and collapse. Such a development would aid the Russian attempts to take over the United States.

So, Mr. President, if we wish to maintain our country secure, we must keep it financially sound. Regardless of the merits of the various proposals which may be made to the Congress, all involving additional expenditures, we must cut the cloth to fit the pattern, and that must be done in connection with the appropriation bills, after we know what the total receipts and what the total expenditures are to be. That attempt must be made if we are to preserve America intact and safe from attacks either from without or from within.

Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has made relative to the fact that a few people or a few corporations have too much power in the United States. Of course, indirectly he was saying that the cause of some of our difficulties is monopoly. There is no doubt about that.

I should like to endorse with all the force at my command the statement the Senator from Virginia made when he said that our financial policies are reaching the point of getting out of hand, and that that situation is due largely to the long-term commitments which already have been authorized, as well as to still other long-term commitments which apparently the Congress will authorize.

The Senator from Virginia presented most eloquently, as only he can do, the experience we had last night in acting on the Federal-aid-to-education bill. He also called attention to what we did in passing the housing bill. Of course, Mr. President, from time to time we are presented with requests for projects calling for comparatively small appropriations, for only a few million dollars, and Senators are inclined to believe that that will be their total cost of the projects. However, when we undertake to calculate what the total cost of such projects and programs will be over a 50-year period, the resulting figures are startling.

Recently on 14 successive days at the beginning of each session I submitted to the Senate the compilations which had been made by the Baltimore Sun. I spoke about them again last night.

If the figures which have been presented to us this afternoon by the Senator from Virginia are calculated on the basis of a 50-year period, including the cost of the social legislation we already have and also the cost of that which is included in the program proposed by the President of the United States, we find that the total cost to the people of the United States will be one trillion two hundred and fifty billion dollars over the 50-year period. Those figures give us some idea of what a long-range commitment really means, even though the first authorization we are asked to make would require the appropriation of only a few million dollars. Once we permit the groups who propose such authorizations to get their foot in the door, we shall find that the appropriations required will continually expand; and, in addition, the power and control exercised by the Federal Government also will expand as time passes. The result will be that additional persons will have to be employed by the Federal Government.

The distinguished Senator from Virginia spoke the truth when he said that the Federal Government here in the United States is adding to its pay rolls 300 employees every day, as of the present time; and if we continue to authorize such programs and put them in effect, it will be necessary to have still more Federal Government employees.

Many people in the United States feel that taxes are taken only from the rich. Some persons think taxes grow on trees. Mr. President, if we add the tax bill of the Federal Government to the taxes levied by the State and local governments, we find that the total of such taxes takes 27 cents out of every dollar earned by every American citizen. If that does not restrict the liberties of the people, I do not know what it does do. If we add together the total tax bills which our people must pay, both to the Federal Government, the State governments, and the local governments, we find that one-third of all our income goes either to the Federal Government, the State governments, or the local governments, in the form of taxes. Once again I say that such a situation results in restricting the liberties of the people, because the power to tax is the power to destroy. If it is desired to destroy all the initiative of the people and the free-enterprise system in the United States, if it is desired to have a planned economy, either socialistic or communistic, let us continue to impose heavier and heavier taxes upon the backs of the American people, and ask them to pay the bill; and that will be the result.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. JENNER. I was called from the floor for a moment. As I left the floor, I believe the Senator from Nebraska was referring to statements made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in regard to the growth of monopoly in the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. JENNER. Is it not a fact that monopoly has had its greatest growth in this country from 1940 to the present time?

Mr. WHERRY. As a member of the Small Business Committee, and as a result of the research we have made, I should say the Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. JENNER. Is it not a fact that about 57 great monopolies in this country control the vast percentage of the entire business?

Mr. WHERRY. My figures show that less than 100 corporations do over 75 percent of the business.

Mr. JENNER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate this valuable observation by the junior Senator from Indiana, who is an authority on the question he has raised.

Mr. President, I am not talking at this time about centralization of authority; I am not talking so much about monopoly. What I am talking about is bureaucracy. I am talking about authorizations. I am talking about appropriations. I say if an authorization is made, the Government will have to pay the cost. There is no other way out. The long-term commitments which are presented, constituting at first a toe in the door of congressional appropriations, will grow, like Topsy, at each and every session of Congress. I have not had the rich experience which the senior Senator from Virginia has had, of 16 years in this body; I have been here only 7 years; but I have already seen authorizations which in the beginning were very small, grow into tremendous appropriations. Not only do the appropriations grow, but the authorizations grow, and also control by the Federal Government.

It is too much to expect that funds will be withheld from programs already authorized. We can cut them to some extent; we can argue about them; but, after all, once a project is authorized, it is difficult for the Appropriations Committee to cut down appropriations for it. The authorizations are somewhat in the nature of promises to pay at some time in the future, and of course the money must be provided. It is not too much, however, to expect in the administration of these programs, policies, and projects that they will be operated efficiently and economically. That is the responsibility of the administrative branch of the Government.

Parenthetically, I may observe on this point that those of us who have been constantly speaking and working for economy and sensible attention to the costs of government will be looking with interest to the recommendations of the Hoover Commission to help bring about the efficiency which we all desire in executive agencies. But even on that point, as was brought out in the exchange between the senior Senator from Virginia and the junior Senator from Louisiana, even though the Government be streamlined and a bureau here and a bureau there be abolished in the interest of economy, yet that is not the answer. Once things are authorized, they must be paid for. If we are to have a Government financially strong, we should only pay for what we can afford, and, whether projects are meritorious or not, we should screen them and approve only those we can pay for. I say that because once they are authorized, there is then nothing else to do but pay for them as we go along.

It is obvious, however, that the responsibility for enacting new long-term projects and policies lies with the legislative branch, and, frankly, the legislative branch does not have the facilities for determining whether the enactment of the programs will create deficits either this year or in future years.

I certainly join in the observation made by the distinguished Senator from Virginia that those who propose various projects and programs should bring with the request for an authorization an estimate of the full, ultimate cost, so that when projects are authorized Members of the Senate will know what the total cost will be. Repeatedly, in the Appropriations Committee, in connection with reclamation, for instance, what happens? A bill is presented. Proponents of the measure say, "We want to make a study here and a study there. We want only a few thousand dollars." The next year there is further study, and then they come forward and say, "We would like to construct just so much, just a little, of this project." Before we get through it will be similar to the St. Lawrence seaway project, which, with a request now for only a few million dollars, involves, as I learned while sitting as a member of the committee, a grand total exceeding $800,000,000.

What should be done when legislation for a particular program is presented is to determine not merely the few million dollars initial cost but the total amount which is to be spent over the years, projected into the future, so that we may know what the complete authorization will cost and decide whether we can afford it, not only this year, but in years to come. If we cannot continue to have a high national income, and even though we do continue to have it, at the rate projects are now being authorized we shall have to make certain that we can keep the country on a pay-as-you-go basis and maintain its solvency.

So, Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Virginia, when authorizations are requested for projects, there ought to be a detailed statement of the ultimate cost, so that, when considering the authorization, we may have some idea of what is involved so far as total costs are concerned.

As I have already said, the reason for this is that we enact appropriation bills scattered over an entire session of the Congress, with no way of knowing what they mean in terms of total annual expenditures, and with no means of viewing them as a whole against estimated revenue.

For this reason, I want to pay my sincere compliments to the prodigious efforts which have been made by the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia, and to endorse his findings and recommendations as worthy of the most serious consideration by the entire membership of the Senate. The Senator from Virginia has devoted himself unselfishly to the work of his Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures. He has devoted himself consistently to the necessity of common-sense economy in Government, not only this year but for many years. I may say that I think no one is better qualified than the able Senator from Virginia to speak on these matters. As I go from place to place in the country, the figures which are usually accepted at 100 percent face value are the figures released by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures. Somehow, those who are inquiring always take those figures at their face value.

The Senator's motives, and also the motives which, if you please, impel me to rise at this time, are those which are born of our interest in maintaining the solvency of the Nation. The problem is not a partisan one. It rises above partisan politics. It is in the interest of all America—and we are all Americans—that we try to do the best we can for the people and the Government of the United States. As I said in the beginning of my remarks, if America should become insolvent, economic catastrophe would be invited and there would be placed in jeopardy not only the welfare, happiness, and even the peaceful security of our people but also the peace of all the nations of the world.

In this connection I invite the attention of the Senators to a careful study of Senate Concurrent Resolution 18, in which I joined with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] as a sponsor in the last Congress, along with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON]. The purpose of the resolution briefly is to consolidate into one bill all the dozen or more appropriation bills which we now consider over the period of an entire session of the Congress, provide for limitations on annual obligations, and provide further that the reports on such a bill shall translate the appropriations into terms of annual expenditure.

If that can be done, we can have as sound a fiscal policy as there is in the States of the Union. From my contacts with governors, I have learned that in Nebraska and, I am told, in Wyoming, and in most of the other States, especially in the Middle West, the States are practically on a basis of that kind. If we can put the Federal Government on such a basis, we shall then know not only what the costs are, but we shall have the money; we shall not only know what the studies are, but we shall be able to appropriate with a knowledge of what the costs will be. The cloth will fit the pattern, and the country will remain solvent. By this means, we shall always have available before the Congress a blow-by-blow picture, as it were, of what we are doing in terms of expenditure, and by this means we can determine whether we are within the anticipated revenue for the years in question.

Without some procedure of this nature, we shall continue to work in the dark, we shall continue to appropriate blindly, and I am afraid we shall intensify the critical situation which the Senator from Virginia has described so forcefully today.

The subject matter of Senate Concurrent Resolution 18 is not new. It was originally offered in the Eightieth Congress. As the Senator from Virginia has stated, and as I know from having served as chairman of the Subcommittee on Rules and Administration, we had hearings lasting many days. The resolution was reported by the subcommittee and later by the full committee, and was placed on the calendar last year. Of course, because of the difficulty created by the pendency of so much major legislation before the Senate, it was impossible at that time to obtain consideration of the resolution.

The resolution has again been offered in the present session of Congress, and has been referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. At present it is in the hands of a subcommittee. I hope it will receive an early hearing, and that it will be favorably reported and placed on the calendar. It is of such importance, and particularly is its importance so underscored at this time by the fiscal crisis which impends, that I believe the Senate will be fully justified in taking up for consideration the subject matter of the Senate Concurrent Resolution 18.

Particularly is this true in view of the report on this bill by our committee last year.

The general public needs to become tax-conscious and appropriation-conscious if we are to preserve the financial stability of the Nation.

The enactment of such a bill would provide not only the Congress but also the general public with a clear understanding at all times of the Federal fiscal situation. It would give the Nation at large a picture at any given moment in the legislative process of how spending commitments balance against the estimated revenues.

With this information I have confidence in the public of this Nation to demand the same protection for the national solvency that they would exercise in the handling of their personal, family, or business budgets.

That is what we must have, Mr. President. We must have the same kind of care and consideration. We must keep this country on a balanced budget. We must be on a pay-as-we-go basis if we wish to continue to keep America strong.

For this reason I acted yesterday to reintroduce the subject matter of Senate Concurrent Resolution 18 in the form of an amendment to the so-called McKellar resolution on the subject of the legislative budget, provided for under the Congressional Reorganization Act. I did this on the information that the McKellar resolution, which pends now on the calendar, may be called up at any moment for Senate consideration.

It is my strong feeling that to suspend or eliminate the legislative budget would be a serious mistake, and for that reason I intend to inject the question of a single appropriation plan as a practical working substitute for the elimination of the legislative budget, and hope that when occasion comes to call this up as an amendment, it will have not only serious consideration but the support of all Members of this body.

Mr. President, along with the distinguished Senator from Virginia, some of us have been urging economy in Government. On the floor of the Senate last night time did not permit a full discussion of the position of the Senator from Nebraska. I want all Members of the Senate to know where I stand. Some bills providing for the expenditure of large sums of money have already been passed. To the Senators voting for them I concede the fullest sincerity and patriotism in doing as they chose to do. If they feel we should authorize these programs, then let each and every Senator individually use his best judgment and integrity and vote his conviction. Personally, I cannot support these programs involving more and more spending and more and more power for the Government at Washington over the lives of the people.

I feel that at the rate we are going now, the sky-high wartime tax rates will have to be restored. We shall have to go back to wartime taxes—wartime taxes in peacetime—at a time when we should be cutting down expenditures.

Either we shall cut the appropriation bills that have come to us from the other end of the Capitol—and cut them along lines indicated by the senior Senator from Virginia—or approve them, add to them, and reimpose wartime taxes upon the people—take away from the people the tax reduction voted by the Eightieth Congress.

But I am not sure that the present Congress will increase taxes, if it refuses to cut appropriations. It may be that we are to have a return to deficit-financing. Deficit-financing, bluntly speaking, is printing-press money. It is simply a process by which the Treasury Department has some bonds printed, then places those bonds in the hands of the banks, and they become the basis for loans to private borrowers, mere paper money.

All the pump-priming schemes are being dusted off and brought forward in an effort to stop the downward trend of business—everything except the one thing that will bolster confidence of the people, namely a sign from this Congress that it is economy-minded and determined not to run this country onto the rocks.

When the ECA authorization was before us recently, some of us contended that its provision for $5,580,000,000 was much too large; that it could and should be cut by at least 15 percent.

We pointed out, from the official record, that ECA estimates were made last November, and that since November prices had dropped.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that our receipts this year are estimated to be $31,000,000,000 as compared with $35,000,000,000 last year. I am using only round figures. Expenses this year will be $30,000,000,000. Last year they amounted to $27,000,000,000. If the Senator would permit I should like to put into the RECORD this table entitled "Government Expenses and Receipts for the Current Fiscal Year Through May 4 Compared With a Year Ago." Would the Senator like to have me put it in at the end of his address?

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Michigan for the insertion of that table in the RECORD. It may be inserted at this point. It is on the subject about which I am speaking.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Government expenses and receipts for the current fiscal year through May 4, compared with a year ago

	This year	Last year
Expenses	$30,129,145,826.11	$27,988,122,504.83
Receipts	31,757,782,505.44	35,383,357,786.08
Surplus	1,628,636,679.33	6,395,235,281.25
Cash balance	3,607,271,825.34	4,331,124,021.52
Public debt	251,568,466,430.39	252,131,373,527.37
Gold reserve	24,334,408,203.20	23,176,177,058.12

Mr. WHERRY. Some of us went further and insisted that ECA is not a program to relieve destitution in western Europe. We showed, from the statements of responsible authorities, at home and abroad, that production in ECA countries has now surpassed prewar levels. That is another reason we ask a reduction. We showed from the official statements that ECA is now being used to finance ECA countries to goals of prosperity they never before have attained—their own ideals for trade expansion and prosperity over the years—with the American taxpayers footing much of the bill. I compliment Mr. Hoffman. I think he has done a splendid job.

I mention ECA in connection with the great speech of the Senator from Virginia, because substantial reduction in the ECA funds is warranted by all the facts. When we were battling over the ECA authorization the President insisted that every cent in the bill be retained; that it be passed exactly as handed to Congress.

But apparently something has happened since passage of the bill. Certainly there was no sharp drop in prices between the time of passage of the bill and the belated admission by the President and State Department that the ECA authorization could be cut.

There is one thing which those of us who opposed the full authorization for ECA accomplished, namely, the fact that $5,580,000,000 is not a sacred figure, and that we do have a right to examine it for justification.

Mr. President, in today's Washington Star there is a front-page story which sheds light on the European recovery program, now known as the Economic Cooperation Administration. It is a story by the Associated Press from Geneva, Switzerland.

It says a United Nations commission has found that the European recovery program is actually hurting Europe's economy more than it is helping it.

Some of us have contended all along, and back when the first ECA authorization was before the Senate, that it was economically unsound and would have to give way to something better. I opposed the first ECA authorization and I voted against it this year. I did not disagree with the objective, I disagreed with the approach.

To me, at least, the wisdom of those votes becomes more apparent and certain, as the evidence comes in, on the way ECA is functioning to take the taxes of the American people and give new birth to trade rivalries among the receiving nations.

I contended right along, with others, that the soundest, safest road to recovery of Europe, real recovery, lies in free enterprise, the system that has made America the greatest producer among the nations of the world.

We wanted to keep ECA reconstruction funds in private channels, to build upon the initiative and enterprise of the people of the various countries in Europe. Legislation was introduced by those of us who felt the situation should be handled in that way. To direct relief of the suffering of people in other lands we had no objection. There has never been any objection by any Member of the Senate, so far as I know, to giving any relief needed in Europe, but that form of help has been virtually completed.

Now it is a question of building up their balances in dollar areas, so that the people in the 16 countries may continue to raise their production and their standards of living. The testimony was that most of those countries had not only reached but had gone away beyond the production figures of the prewar years. Yet we are continuing to subsidize their governments by the funds we are appropriating, subsidizing governments which are continuing to plan socialism, when we are attempting to defeat it and outlaw it here at home.

We wanted to set up for the devastated countries of Europe agencies similar to our own Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], who sits before me, remembers that. We wanted to establish an International Bank, and an RFC, to permit those entitled to loans to get them, at any sort of interest, in order that they might rebuild their industries, help stabilize their currencies, and have exchange not only among themselves but with the other European countries which might be the beneficiaries. We hoped they would invest their own funds. They have about $18,000,000,000 wrapped up in the banks in this country, and we thought that that kind of a set-up would induce them to invest their money. But we could not write one condition in the bill when it was being considered. What do we find now?

Mr. President, at this point I wish to present a news item. The headline is "ERP Hurting Europe, UN Group Charges—Nations Tripping Over Own Isolationism, Survey Report Says." This article reads:

ERP HURTING EUROPE, UN GROUP CHARGES—NATIONS TRIPPING OVER OWN ISOLATIONISM, SURVEY REPORT SAYS

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND, May 6.—A United Nations commission contended today that the European recovery program is hurting Europe's economy more than it helps.

The assertion marked a survey report of the UN Economic Commission for Europe. Nations from both sides of the iron curtain constitute the commission, created in 1947 by the UN Economic and Social Council to coordinate emergency organizations working to rehabilitate Europe.

In 100,000 words the Commission said European nations, striving for an economic come-back, are tripping over their own isolationism, and that the ERP is aggravating the situation.

INTEGRATION FAILING, REPORT SAYS

The Marshall plan, through ERP, pours in money with the avowed intention of helping to integrate European economy; European nations themselves adopt plans to integrate it, but the observable trends are away from integration, the Commission reported.

For lack of such integration, it continued, national economy is disintegrating all over the Continnet. Prospects for the future are unfavorable, despite a remarkable improvement in industrial production in 1948, it added.

The Commission said a long-term program of American capital investment, much like the way Britain financed economic development overseas in the nineteenth century, is the only solution it can see. Increased trade between the iron-curtain countries of eastern Europe and western European areas also would be helpful, it said.

Eastern European countries, the report said, because of American restrictions on imports to them, are the only ones in Europe having a favorable trade balance with the United States.

DOLLAR SHORTAGE BLAMED

Europe will remain dependent on American capital for many years, the survey report said.

The report said European industry has recovered with remarkable speed and will soon be as highly developed as if the war had never occurred. But, in spite of this recovery, it held the general economic outlook is poor because of a persistent dollar shortage and the almost total absence of integration of the economic plans of the various European nations.

The dollar shortage remains Europe's major economic problem, the survey concluded. It reported, however, the complementary problem of an American dollar surplus has as grave implications for the United States.

To solve the double problem, the survey said, the United States probably will have to "continue for many years to assist the outside world through investment loans, in much the same way as Britain financed capital development of the rest of the world throughout the nineteenth century * * * . The most desirable course would seem to be for the United States to schedule a major program of capital investment abroad for specific development projects staggered over a period of time."

ALL PHASES OF ECONOMY REVIEWED

The survey reviewed all aspects of Europe's economic life during 1948 and the prospects for the future.

The survey made these observations:

1. Industrial production in Europe rose by 16 percent and agricultural production by 12 percent during 1948.

2. In the Soviet Union, industrial production rose by 27 percent and the grain harvest returned to the prewar level.

3. The productivity of labor rose about 9 percent.

4. There was substantial improvement in the rate of capital formation, and the volume of investment exceeded the 1938 level by one-third.

5. Overseas exports increased by 30 percent, while imports were reduced by 7 percent.

6. There was a gradual return to conditions of monetary stability.

7. A major contribution to the increase in European production was a spectacular recovery in the western zones of Germany, where output reached 64 percent of the prewar level at the close of 1948.

8. With the exception of Italy, Hungary, Belgium, and Germany, unemployment remained very low.

9. If high levels of employment are maintained, increases in production may continue for some years and the productivity of European workers will continue to rise.

POVERTY IS PROBLEM

Despite continuing progress, the probable improvements in the next 10 years are unlikely to bring about a solution of "the basic problem of Europe—the severe poverty in which the majority of the European peoples live," the survey declared. It went on:

"The resources that are likely to be devoted to capital investment within Europe are far from adequate to secure any really substantial improvement in living standards, or to narrow the tremendous gap between industrial output per man in Europe and in the United States.

"The problem of the overseas balance of payments remains the most threatening aspect of Europe's economic situation."

The essence of the economic crisis between the United States and Europe lies in the fact that the United States is simultaneously the most highly developed industrial country of the world, the world's largest surplus area and Europe's largest supplier of primary products.

The survey has been in preparation during the past 9 months by the economic commission's research division. It was under the direction of the Hungarian-born British economist, Nicholas Kaldor. It is to form one of the principal subjects for discussion at the fourth session of the Commission, due to open here next week.

I wish to close with the observation that those of us who believed in that very kind of finance, when the appropriation was authorized, were denied the amendment on the floor of the Senate which is now recommended by the United Nations Commission as the only way by which to get the beneficiary countries to help themselves back to complete rehabilitation, not only among themselves, but with the other nations of the world. I do not wish to appear as a prophet and say, "I told you so." Some of us have taken a great deal of pressure from those who did not agree with us.

Mr. President, this statement of this Commission certainly is not partisan, and I hope some of the citizens of this country will now see the light, and that some of those who criticized us, I think unjustly, because of the program we wanted to write into the ECA measure, will now begin to realize that there are other approaches besides the one adopted, and the very recommendation made here is the approach suggested by the junior Senator from Nebraska, as well as by both Senators from Indiana, as they attempted to get an amendment into the ECA bill when it was first considered.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. JENNER. If we are to continue to support the United Nations, and are not going to admit that it has degenerated into nothing but an empty shell of a debating society, certainly this body, before the appropriations are made for the Marshall plan at this session, should give some consideration to this study made by the Economic Commission of the United Nations.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree with the Senator heartily. I should like to conclude with the further observation that I bring this matter up, not in a spirit of criticism or by way of vindicating my position, but I bring it up now to call to the attention of the Members of the Senate the fact that we should be on the alert when the bill comes from the Committee on Appropriations. The appropriation has been authorized, and I am not one to try to sabotage an authorization after it has been made, but I say it becomes a charge on every Member of the Senate to see that when the ECA appropriation comes from the committee it is scrutinized from beginning to end, and that every cut is made which should be made.

I say to every Member of the Senate, regardless of his party affiliations, that this means the life or death of America. We are at the crossroads. This Government is going to step over the line to deficit spending, or increased taxes, or we will have to decrease the authorizations. I appeal to every Member of the Senate to join in authorizing only those things we can afford to pay for.

Mr. JENNER. The Senator is not stating, I hope, that it is too late to look again at the authorization of the Marshall plan, which was passed in the Senate only 2 weeks ago.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not want to say that I would not look at it. I have been looking at it for 2 years. But I do say that we have authorized the second year's commitment, under the authorization statute. What we can do, of course, is to argue about the amount of the appropriation. We could repeal anything we have done, if there is any suggestion about doing it a different way, amending the basic legislation. Any bill could be presented now to do that.

Mr. JENNER. I was going to say that the administration is taking another look at the labor bill in the House of Representatives. It had one on the floor, and now it is back in committee, and the administration is having another look at it. So is there anything wrong in having another look at something for Europe that is going to cost the American people $5,580,000,000, when the United Nations itself says it is going to be wasted, and that it is not the answer?

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his observation. Of course we can always take a look, and I appeal to Senators, as did the Senator from Virginia, who has only his country's interest at heart, as do those of us who are here helping day after day. This is an honorable body. Its members are giving their lives for America. Senators have a right to do as they choose in the consideration of authorizations, but let us follow the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Indiana and take another look. The United Nations Commission says the way chosen is not the right way. Let us follow the right way, but in any event let us appropriate only what is needed, so that we will have an over-all appropriation program that will come within our income. Otherwise we will have to impose wartime controls, and we will lose the very thing for which we are fighting. In the end we can lead ourselves and the other nations of the earth into happiness. We can be a leader, and lead the nations of the world down the road to peace.

During the delivery of Mr. WHERRY's speech,

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, unfortunately I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] began his interesting discussion. I heard the latter part of it. I join with the Senator from Nebraska in complimenting the Senator from Virginia.

There can be no doubt that the Congress should do everything in its power to reduce the cost of the Government of the United States, and every possible avenue of waste ought to be blocked. But I am inclined to believe—and I have talked with the Senator in years past about this point—that the cause of the great difficulty in which we find ourselves is not that Government expenditures were expanded. The reason that Government expenditures were expanded was that the conditions which existed required such expansion. Members of the Senate Appropriations Committee doubtless can cite case after case in which individuals have appeared before the Appropriations Committee asking for increased appropriations, representing organizations and individuals who themselves deprecate increased expenditures.

The cause of our problem, as I have seen it, has been primarily the economic concentration which has brought about the control of our economy in a few large centers. Unless we succeed in breaking down that concentration—not in the sense that we would atomize big business, but in the sense that we should create the climate in which little business can live—and that I know is a matter in which the Senator from Nebraska is tremendously interested—we shall not be able to prevent the continued expansion of the Government. Because of concentration in national business organizations, because of improvements of modern technology, particularly in transportation and communication, local economic independence is being undermined. The result is the increased demands on the Federal Government.

THE RETIREMENT OF GEN. LUCIUS CLAY AS MILITARY GOVERNOR AND COMMANDER IN GERMANY

(After the conclusion of Mr. WHERRY's speech, Mr. HUNT obtained the floor.)

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for about 2 minutes?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, all too frequently in the history of our country have our people enjoyed and accepted great and distinguished services from their public servants without appropriate recognition thereof. Perhaps, Mr. President, this is so because truly great people have a tendency to "hide their lights under bushels," while the lesser great have a way of acclaiming themselves.

Lest we fail to properly note the retirement of Gen. Lucius Clay as military governor and commander in Germany, and his heroic contributions toward our national security and the peace of the world, I would refer the Senate to an editorial entitled "Clay's Service" which appeared in the Thursday, May 5, issue of the Washington Post, in which this great soldier is paid high tribute. But, Mr. President, as one who had the great privilege of serving very briefly under the general's command, I would like to add to that tribute by saying that no finer gentleman or more brilliant soldier has ever worn his country's uniform. His exemplification of patriotism, of devotion to duty, of intellectual honesty, of integrity and courage, should ever be an inspiration to us all.

It is to be regretted that we are to lose his valuable service in the business of completing the reconstruction of western Europe, but we can be consoled by the knowledge that his great mind, together with his broad and rich experience, will continue to be available to the leaders of our Nation as they proceed with their plans for the attainment of a just and lasting peace.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial referred to, be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CLAY'S SERVICE

Gen. Lucius Clay, who has now resigned his post as military governor and commander in Germany, held the only sector of the cold war with Soviet Russia which ever threatened at any time to turn hot. His nerves are made of iron. During the ordeal of the airlift he never flinched, and he deserves the high praise with which both President Truman and Secretary Acheson have referred to his salient services. The United States may well be proud that it can produce at this critical moment in world history soldiers of the stamp of General Clay.

Clay's organization in Germany, unlike General MacArthur's in Japan, was built on civilian lines of government. It was in this atmosphere that he thrived. He was a soldier, but his branch was the Engineers—where the brains of the military academies traditionally go—and he was in his element in building up and guiding an operation by example and leadership rather than by word of command. Business lost a fine executive when General Clay chose the Army as his career. He worked so hard and long that his associates swore he never slept. Yet his mind never seemed tired, his decisions never disorderly. His precision in what he said and did was almost Prussian-like.

There was a deceptiveness about the cool and gimlet-eyed demeanor of General Clay. Underneath lay a fiery temperament. It has been said that there was a fight wherever Clay happened to be, and the bigger the stage, the better. Be this as it may, he could burn up the communications system with Washington whenever he felt crossed. In these stormy passages he had a habit of threatening to throw in his uniform. His tantrums produced a kind of terror in the Capital, for none appeared to know where to turn for a man who could come anywhere near his stature.

This conflict was generally with the State Department. State shared with War the ultimate responsibility for Germany, and the duality made for difficulty in finding out where authority lay at a particular moment. Shared authority is confused authority. The State Department would not relieve the War Department of its charge in Germany, yet it could not resign responsibility. In the circumstances State Department supervision could not help but be spasmodic and shifting in emphasis, and there was some justification for the sense of grievance which marked Clay's relations with the State Department.

Proconsular statesmanship requires prescience and insight, and General Clay never pretended to have it. His gift was to be the very model of a soldier-administrator—that is to say, he had a rigid sense of duty and an uncanny knack of personifying the high policy of his Government. After Potsdam this was accommodation with Soviet Russia in promoting unity in and toward Germany. Clay labored with might and main to achieve it, and his patience was monumental. When this approach proved futile, he was the expression of the "firmness and patience" of Secretary Byrnes. The time came for downright toughness, and nobody has been tougher than Clay. He headed the partitionists, and the west German government is his child, as much as anybody's. While the government has been aborning he has administered the counterblockade relentlessly.

It is a big man who has lain down one of the biggest jobs ever to be given into American custody. There can be no doubt about that. His task is completed, and he leaves Germany when a new phase of that tortured problem is about to open. The country is well on the road to economic revival, and its political voice has come back. This latter will be heard inside or outside the projected meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and will help to determine the new political configuration of Europe.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HUNT. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Before the Senator proceeds with his statement I might say to him that earlier in the day there was had a gentlemen's agreement or understanding that we would endeavor to recess at about 5 o'clock this afternoon. I think that is the reason why so few Members are now on the floor. The bill the Senator is about to discuss is extremely important. In view of that fact, I wonder if the Senator would have any objection to the Senate taking a recess now and going over until Monday noon, at which time I am sure there will be a great many more Members present. Many Senators are very much interested in the pending bill.

Mr. HUNT. The suggestion made by the acting majority leader is accepted by the junior Senator from Wyoming. I should like to have the understanding, if I may, that I may have the floor the first thing after the convening of the Senate on Monday next, so I may discuss the pending measure.

Mr. MYERS. I am sure that can be arranged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHOEPPEL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Rear Adm. Paul L. Mather, United States Navy, retired, to be War Assets Administrator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 9, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Counselor of our minds and Companion of our hearts, kindle now within us the sacred flame of lofty aspiration. Help us to believe that whatsoever things are noble are the truest and whatsoever is best is the most real.

We pray that we may follow faithfully the ways which Thou hast marked out for us. Give us faith and courage lest we be turned aside by obstacles which we should overcome.

May we be helpers of one another in the quest for the highest life and coworkers with Thee in building the kingdom of peace and good will. Inspire us with wisdom in solving the problems of international relationship. Make us eager to share our blessings.

In Christ's name we pray. Amen.

$373,095.80, Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1949 and a prior fiscal year (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were presented and referred as indicated:

By Mr. GREEN (for himself and Mr. MCGRATH):

A resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to use their good offices to secure prompt passage of the Huber bill, so-called, House resolution 1374, now pending in the House of Representatives of the United States with respect to the extension of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944

"Whereas the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 (Public Law 346, passed by the 78th Congress June 22, 1944) provides for payment of readjustment allowances for former members of the armed forces who are unemployed, in addition to payments to self-employed veterans; and

"Whereas under the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act aforesaid payments are to expire in 1950; and

"Whereas it appears that only 42.5 percent of eligible veterans have taken advantage of their rights and benefits thereunder; and only 7 percent of the veterans residing in the State of Rhode Island have drawn their complete entitlement under the provisions of this program; and

"Whereas it is anticipated that thousands of veterans including veterans of this State who have participated in the educational program offered to veterans under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act during the period 1950 through 1956 will be entering the labor market and endeavoring to establish themselves in the economic life of this country; and

"Whereas this group of veterans, many of whom have families dependent upon them, will, during this period of economic adjustment in their lives, require the financial support and encouragement which an extension of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act will provide; Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States hereby are respectfully requested to approve and support House bill 1374, the Huber bill, so-called, extending the time during which readjustment allowances may be paid until July 25, 1954, or similar legislation accomplishing the same purpose; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be and he hereby is authorized and directed to transmit to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States duly certified copies of this resolution."

A resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Resolution memorializing Congress relative to the restoration of former Italian colonies to Italy

"Whereas Italy, by geographical position, tradition, culture, and ideology, and now a party to the North Atlantic Pact, is a definite part of the alliance of western nations; and

"Whereas the United Nations General Assembly is soon to take under consideration the matter of trusteeship of former Italian colonies; and

"Whereas Italy has thrown off the yoke of fascism and joined with the forces of America and the other free nations of the world in combatting communism; and

"Whereas Italy's high rate of unemployment, due largely to overpopulation, is being used as a basic for communistic propaganda, intended to bring about strained relations with other western nations; and

"Whereas the restoration to Italy of her former colonies and the continued development by Italy of those colonies in north Africa would greatly contribute to the social progress and economic rehabilitation of western Europe: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the General Assembly of Rhode Island hereby urges the Congress of the United States to strongly advocate the restoration to Italy of her former colonies of Eritrea, Lybia, and Somaliland; and be it further

"Resolved, That duly certified copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States and to the representatives of the United States to the United Nations General Assembly."

By Mr. LODGE (for himself and Mr. SALTONSTALL):

Resolutions of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"Resolutions memorializing Congress to change the date of Labor Day to the second Monday in September

"Whereas in many States, including Massachusetts, proposals have been presented to the legislatures thereof for legislation to establish the date of Labor Day later than the first Monday in September; and

"Whereas any change of date of said holiday may cause confusion and inconvenience unless it is made uniform and is effective Nation-wide: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby urges the Congress to amend the Federal law whereby the first Monday of September, known as Labor Day, is made a legal public holiday so that thereafter Labor Day will occur on the second Monday of September each year; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions shall be forthwith transmitted by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, the Presiding Officer of each branch of the Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth."

Resolutions of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Finance:

"Resolutions memorializing Congress to repeal the excise taxes on articles of jewelry, furs, cosmetics, and handbags

"Whereas the taxing of articles of jewelry, furs, cosmetics, and handbags has created unemployment in industry and business engaged in the production and sale of such items; and

"Whereas the imposition of taxes on such items creates a substantial hardship on those who can least afford to pay such taxes: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby urges Congress to repeal the existing excise taxes on said articles; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent forthwith by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth."

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY—RESOLUTION OF CITY COUNCIL OF WESTFIELD, MASS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] and myself, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the City Council of the city of Westfield, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation proclaiming October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in Congress

Whereas a resolution providing for the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski is now pending in the present session of the United States Congress; and

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Nevada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the heroic death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated from October 11, 1929, to October 11, 1946, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day in the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the City Council of the City of Westfield and State of Massachusetts:

SECTION 1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the General Pulaski's Memorial Day resolution now pending in the United States Congress.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Massachusetts.

PROHIBITION OF LIQUOR ADVERTISING IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—PETITION

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, a petition signed by Mrs. F. H. Ragsdale, Mrs. R. E. Woolwine, and Mrs. R. J. Atkins, and sundry other citizens of Stuart, Va., relating to the prohibition of liquor advertising in interstate commerce, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures, as follows:

We respectfully request that you use your influence and vote for the passage of a bill to prohibit the transportation of alcoholic beverage advertising in interstate commerce and the broadcasting of alcoholic beverage advertising over the radio. The most pernicious effect of this advertising is the constant invitation and enticement to drink. The American people spent $9,640,000,000 for alcoholic beverages in 1947 as compared with $7,770,000,000 in 1945. During the same period there was a corresponding increase each year in crime, juvenile delinquency, broken homes, deaths, and injuries due to intoxicated drivers, in the number of alcoholics and also in habitual or heavy drinkers. There is every reason why this waste of money and of human values should not be increased but rather greatly decreased.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, May 9, 1949, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 270) to change the name of Culbertsom Dam on the Republican River in the State of Nebraska to "Trenton Dam" and to name the body of water arising behind such dam "Swanson Lake."

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR NORTHWEST ATLANTIC FISHERIES—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from Executive N, Eighty-first Congress, first session, a certified copy of the International Convention for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries, formulated at the International Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Conference and signed at Washington under date of February 8, 1949, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and by the plenipotentiaries of certain other governments, and that the convention, together with the President's message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed, and the convention, together with the President's message, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the message from the President will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The message from the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the International Convention for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries, formulated at the International Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Conference and signed at Washington under date of February 8, 1949, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and by the plenipotentiaries of certain other governments.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Secretary of State regarding this convention, and a certified copy of the Final Act of the Conference. The Final Act does not require ratification.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 9, 1949.

(Enclosures: (1) International Convention for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries—certified copy; (2) Report of the Secretary of State; (3) Final Act of the Conference—certified copy.)

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 1808. A bill to amend the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, so as to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to adjust the lineal positions of certain officers of the staff corps of the Navy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

(Mr. McCLELLAN, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, reported an original bill (S. 1809) to simplify the procurement, utilization, and disposal of Government property, to reorganize certain agencies of the Government, and for other purposes, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BREWSTER (by request):

S. 1810. A bill for the relief of Arthur J. Cyr; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 1811. A bill for the relief of Kassid Ali; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ELLENDER:

S. J. Res. 90. Joint resolution to suspend for a temporary period the demolition and removal of buildings and other structures on the new Senate Office Building site; to the Committee on Public Works.

AMENDMENT OF RULE RELATING TO LEGISLATION ON APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. FERGUSON (for himself, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. WHERRY, and Mr. CORDON) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 115), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That paragraph 4 of rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, a point of order will not lie against any amendment to the bill which authorizes and directs the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to make reductions in the amounts to be expended from any or all of the appropriations contained therein."

ORGANIZED RESERVE OF ARMY AND AIR FORCE

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, on February 7, 1949, I submitted Senate Resolutions 60 and 61 calling for investigations by Congress of the Departments of the Air Force and Army on their failure to develop adequate and realistic Reserve programs and on their administration of the Reserves. I am gratified that Congress is now making such investigations.

On March 14, 1949, I formally requested the Secretary of Defense for a comparative report on the civilian components of our armed services—for a comparison of the disparities between the Army Reserve, Air Force Reserve, National Guard, and Naval Reserve. Today, 2 months later, I have not received that report.

However, I have received such a report from Brig. Gen. William C. Lewis, Air Force reservist, past president and executive director of the Air Reserve Association. Because I believe that this unofficial report can be of great assistance to the congressional investigations, I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the body of the RECORD. I invite the attention of the Senate to it. It is interesting and informative reading on a very vital subject. The conclusions reached in the report are strictly those of the author.

I ask unanimous consent that correspondence between the chairmen of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees and myself also be inserted in the body of the RECORD as these letters provide informative background.

There being no objection, the correspondence and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1949.

Hon. MILLARD TYDINGS,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Today I introduced two resolutions in the Senate—one calling for an investigation of the administration of the Air Force Reserve by the Department of the Air Force, the other calling for an investigation of the administration of the Army Reserve by the Department of the Army.

I hope that the Senate Armed Services Committee will undertake such investigations itself as well. The deplorable status of our Air Force Reserve and our Army Reserve is well known. Yet nothing is done to correct this situation.

I am puzzled to know just what is the attitude of the Departments of the Air Force and Army on this vital matter. In a small way, I have attempted to contribute to the solution by introducing several Reserve measures. My experience on these measures has been an almost unbroken series of opposition on the part of the old War Department and its successors, the Departments of the Air Force and Army to proposals for the improvement of the Reserve programs. This opposition is particularly puzzling because most of my measures proposed only that the Air Force and Army Reserves be given that which the Naval Reserve has enjoyed for a long time.

The Air Force and Army Reserve programs are woefully behind that of the Naval Reserve. The Departments of the Air Force and the Army have been given sufficient time to correct this disparity but have failed to do so even at the official prodding of the President. I think that it is time that the Congress stepped in and found out why the Departments of the Air Force and Army have failed to act adequately on our Reserve forces which provide more than 90 percent of our fighting forces in time of war.

Sincerely yours,

MARGARET CHASE SMITH,
United States Senator.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
February 11, 1949.

Hon. MARGARET CHASE SMITH,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMITH: I have received your letter of February 7, 1949, in which you discuss the situation which prevails as to the Organized Reserve of the Army and Air Force. I appreciate your interest in this matter a great deal. As you know, this entire problem concerning the size and degree of readiness of the non-Regular components of the services is one which has been of major concern to the entire Committee on Armed Services for many months.

At the moment, as a result of the combined congressional and Presidential prodding to which you have alluded, the operational and fiscal programs for the non-Regular components have recently undergone a rather major overhaul, the effects of which are being observed with close attention.

I wish to assure you that the committee is alert to the need for continued congressional surveillance and action in this field, and will continue to press for the correction of the defects of which you spoke in your letter.

Sincerely yours,

MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman.

Hon. CARL VINSON,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CHAIRMAN: Today I introduced two resolutions in the Senate—one calling for an investigation of the administration of the Air Force Reserve by the Department of the Air Force, the other calling for an investigation of the administration of the Army Reserve by the Department of the Army.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1949.

HON. MARGARET CHASE SMITH,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: From what I have been able thus far to understand in respect to the plight of the Army and Air Force Reserves, I agree wholly with the views expressed in your letter of February 7 to me.

We have already had a discussion before the committee as to the advisability of an investigation of the progress, or lack thereof, of these Reserve programs. It is my personal opinion that such an inquiry is very likely, and I am certainly pleased to see that you are maintaining your very active and helpful interest in such matters.

Let me take this opportunity to wish you the very best of success in your responsible place in the United States Senate.

Sincerely,

CARL VINSON,
Chairman.

INHERENT WEAKNESSES OF THE AIR RESERVE PROGRAM

I. INTRODUCTION

"And the elimination of inequities and disparities among the several components" was a part of the charges that the Secretary of Defense gave to the Committee on Civilian Components in his precept and terms of reference on November 20, 1947. The appointment of this committee, more popularly known as the Gray Board since it was headed by Assistant Secretary of the Army Gordon Gray, constituted official recognition of facts and conditions long known and of great irritation to many members of the civilian components of the armed forces.

Particularly sensitive to, and aware of, the existing inequities and disparities have been the members of the Air Force Reserve and the Army Reserve. Their feeling gained official support in October 1948 when the President of the United States issued an Executive directive to the Secretary of Defense to take immediate action to bring the programs of the Air Force Reserve and the Army Reserve up to a more realistic parity with that of other civilian components and to report to the President within 60 days after the issuance of the Executive directive.

Congressional dissatisfaction with the status of the programs of the Air Force Reserve and the Army Reserve was officially recorded in February 1949 when Senator MARGARET CHASE SMITH introduced Senate Resolutions 60 and 61 calling upon the Senate Armed Services Committee to investigate the Department of the Air Force and the Department of the Army in their administration of the Air Force Reserve and the Army Reserve.

In letters to the chairman of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees, Senator SMITH charged that the Departments of the Air Force and Army had failed to take satisfactory action even at the official prodding of the President and since the Departments had had sufficient time to act, it was time that the Congress stepped in. Both chairmen expressed agreement with her.

The House chairman expressed complete agreement and stated that the House committee had been considering investigating the Departments on their lack of programs for the Air Force Reserve and Army Reserve. On March 30, 1949, the House chairman announced that his committee would "conduct a thorough inquiry into the present plight of Army and Air Force Reserves."

With such recognition of the unsatisfactory status of the Reserve by the Secretary of Defense, the President of the United States, and the Armed Services Committees of Congress, the complaints of Air Force Reservists and Army Reservists are obviously something more than prejudice and fiction. But too often griping criticism is expressed in vague generalities rather than in specific, constructive suggestions. Too often a charge is made without specific proof to back it up.

What are the disparities and inequities that have caught the attention of the Secretary of Defense, the President of the United States, and those Members of Congress who are most conversant with Reserve matters? In view of the terms of reference to the Gray board, one would suppose that the specific identification of these disparities and inequities would be contained in the official report of that group. But such is not the case. While there are occasional and general references made in the report, there is a surprising lack of pin-point identification and recommendations. The Gray report admirably analyzes each of the civilian components—but for the most part it analyzes each by itself. The analyses are isolated. There is no over-all cross-the-boards comparative analysis of how each of the civilian components stack up with each other on matters uppermost in the minds of Reservists. What comparative analysis there is, is rare and incidental.

For this, the Gray board is not necessarily to be criticized since its terms of reference covered many matters, and the general objective was an analysis of the status of each civilian component. Inequities and disparities constituted only one term of reference.

To fill partially this existing void of pinpoint identification of inequities and disparities is the objective of this paper. But the author wishes to make one point clear at the outset. Complete treatment of this subject can be done only by a sizable staff working for a considerable length of time with the civilian-component sections of each armed service. The most that the author can do is to make some basic observations and to point up only some of the more evident and important differences that exist.

In attempting to do this, the author has concentrated his efforts on those matters which he conceives to be the basic incentives for attracting and retaining personnel in the civilian components of the armed services. Those basic incentives are conceived to be (1) training pay, (2) security, (3) recognition, and (4) training facilities and equipment.

This comparative analysis is limited to (1) the Naval Reserve, (2) the National Guard, (3) the Army Reserve, and (4) the Air Force Reserve. No attempt is made to consider in any detail either the Marine Corps Reserve or the Coast Guard Reserve. They have in the past been considered in the general category of the Naval Reserve. The Marine Corps Reserve, especially, is governed much the same as the Naval Reserve.

Before making a comparative analysis of the basic incentives offered to each of the civilian components, one must recognize the fundamental and general differences between the civilian components that give rise to the specific and detailed differences, inequities, and disparities. Until the Unification Act of 1947 there were only two independent services—the Army and the Navy. The civilian-components organization of the two services had one radical difference. For all intents and purposes, the civilian component of the Navy was one Federal Reserve force. It was not handicapped by a split into two Reserve forces—one Federal and one State. True, there are some State naval militias, but they were few and relatively negligible.

With the advantage of having a single Federal Reserve force, the Navy was able to effect an over-all integration of the Naval Reserve that avoided Federal-State distinctions. The Naval Organized Reserve logically was made the M-day Reserve force of the Navy and given top priority on the basic incentives. Second priority was given to the Naval Volunteer Reserve. The difference was in the degree of active participation in the Naval Reserve. Organized Reservists drilled weekly and were paid for it as well as receiving other priority benefits, including better chances for promotion. Thus, the incentive of a truly interested Volunteer Reservist was to earn his way into the Organized Reserve. There was no State barrier to keep him from gaining a place in the Organized Reserve.

The second principal advantage of the Naval Reserve has been the Naval Reserve Act of 1938. Without going into the details of the act, it put all Naval Reserve laws into one place; it provided the vehicle for an over-all, well-integrated Magna Carta for Naval Reservists, and it placed Naval Reservists more side by side with Navy Regulars. Under the provisions of the act a Naval Reserve Advisory Board, composed of an equal number of Naval Reserve officers and Navy Regular officers, met at least once a year in extended sessions to study and consider changes in the Naval Reserve.

In contrast, the Army did not have a single Federal Reserve force. Its civilian component organization was two-headed—with (1) a State Reserve force, the National Guard, and (2) a Federal Reserve force, the Army Reserve. In some respects the National Guard is comparable to the Naval Organized Reserve. Designated the M-day organization of the Army civilian component organization, the National Guard was assigned priority over the Army Reserve. Specifically, the National Guardists had such advantages over Army Reservists as drill pay and M-day equipment and facilities. The Guard was organized by the States under the militia clause of the Constitution.

Thus, the top-priority civilian component of the Army was not a Federal Reserve force except in time of war—and for the most part was not subject to the authority of the Army in peacetime, but rather came under the States. This was a basic difference from the Naval Reserve. Another way of putting it is that while the Army Reservist was in most respects like the Naval Volunteer Reservist, he did not have the opportunity through more active participation to graduate into a drill paying civilian component. To accomplish that he would have to resign from the Army Reserve and try to get in the National Guard. Here was a practical example of the Army's handicap of the distinction between Federal and State civilian components and the Navy's advantage of no State civilian component.

In the National Guard picture there are two very important factors creating the State control and the Army priority for the National Guard. First, the operations and maintenance cost of the National Guard is shared by the States with the Federal Government. This was not done in the Naval Reserve and the Army Reserve, both of which were completely financed by the Federal Government. Second, the National Guard is one of the most politically powerful groups in this country. This stems from the fact that appointments in the National Guard are made by the Governors of the State. Carried one step further, a preponderant number of the Members of Congress have always been graduates of State politics—former governors, former appointees of governors, former elected State officials, or former members of State legislative bodies. It is no wonder that the National Guard has enjoyed an unbroken advantage in congressional support.

The distinction in priority was further affirmed by the Army in the War Department policies directive of October 13, 1945. In that directive, first priority was assigned to the Regular Army, second priority to the National Guard, and third priority to the Army Organized Reserve Corps. The National Guard of the United States was made the first-line Reserve component of the postwar Military Establishment, with the distinction between the National Guard of the United States and the National Guard of the States being Federal recognition. Yet, the primary control of the National Guard of the United States still vested in the States and not in the Federal Government.

After the enactment of the Unification Act of 1947, a third service, the United States Air Force, came into existence—and with it the United States Air Force Reserve, formerly the Army Air Corps Reserve—and the Air National Guard. The very inherent character of the instrument around which the Air Force is built—the airplane—inevitably aggravated an already difficult situation that had resulted from the Army's lack of a single Federal Reserve force and the division between the Reserve and the National Guard. Two concepts ran head-on—the concept that the National Guard was raised and organized for the protection of each State without regard to other States or the Federal Government, and the concept that the speed and range of modern aircraft made it no practical respecter of State boundaries. Put another way, modern military aircraft are primarily designed to protect the Nation and not just one State.

That this Federal-State, Reserve-National Guard matter is the No. 1 problem of the civilian components was officially recognized by the Gray Board when it made its No. 1 recommendation that the Army Reserve and the National Guard be merged into one Federal Reserve force of the Army under the name of the National Guard of the United States, under the Army clause rather than the Militia clause of the Constitution—and that the Air National Guard and Air Reserve be merged into one Federal Reserve force of the Air Force under the name of the United States Air Force Reserve.

In substance, the Gray Board concluded that single Federal Reserve force of the Navy was the better system. And it is from the basic difference of systems of the Army and Air Force from the Navy that most of the existing inequities and disparities stem. While some postwar legislation, such as the Inactive Training Pay Act of 1948, has done much to remove the demoralizing inequities and disparities, the only realistic approach to the ultimate solution of the problem will be the legislative adoption of the No. 1 recommendation of the Gray Board.

Although we are principally concerned with what are the present inequities and disparities between the civilian components, we must also consider in some instances the past differences that postwar legislation has remedied. We must make this consideration because the historical, particularly recent, experience of the members of the respective civilian components has affected their morale.

II. DISCUSSION OF PROBLEM

A. Pay and allowances

Perhaps the most tangible of all incentives for service in the civilian components, is pay. Patriotism is, of course, the dominating factor in time of war. It is a major factor in time of peace. But when it is not accompanied by tangible benefits or incentives in time of peace, the interest in the Reserve lessens. After all, reservists are essentially civilians first and soldiers second. Their civilian occupations and pursuits provide their means of livelihood—which means that we get right back to the most tangible of incentives for most of us—pay.

There are those of us who because of personal prejudice would prefer and select a particular service over the other services, even though that preferred service paid less for Reserve service. The author feels that way about the Air Force Reserve.

But to attempt some objectivity, we must consider this from the standpoint of one who has never served in any of the services and who wants to select the civilian component which will give him the greatest return for the time and effort that he puts in the Reserve, and takes away from his family, his work, and his leisure. And no standard is more tangible than pay.

1. Training Pay

There is no material difference in the active duty training pay between the Naval Reserve, Army Reserve, Air Force Reserve, and National Guard. Nor has there been any material difference. Generally, all four have paid the same for the annual 15-day summer camps or tours, for extended active duty, and for attendance at special schools such as command and staff schools.

The difference before the Inactive Training Pay Act of 1948 was in the fact that members of the Naval Reserve and the National Guard received pay for weekly drills. Members of the Army Reserve and Air Force Reserve didn't. Prior to the Inactive Training Pay Act, drill pay and command pay for the faithful performance of administrative functions were specifically authorized for all civilian components of the Armed Forces except the Army Reserve, the Air Force Reserve, and the Coast Guard Reserve.

There was a second major difference which placed the Naval Reserve and the Marine Reserve ahead of even the National Guard, as well as the "stepchildren" Reserves of the Army and Air Force. While the payment of transportation and subsistence was not authorized for members of the National Guard, the Army Reserve and the Air Force Reserve, when with their consent they were performing duty without pay, it was authorized for members of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve.

A third major difference was command pay. Commanding officers of units in the Naval Reserve, Marine Corps Reserve, and National Guard were authorized to receive command pay not to exceed $240 a year for the faithful performance of administrative functions. Commanding officers of units in the Army Reserve and the Air Force Reserve faithfully performing administrative functions received nothing for such performance.

In summary, the Naval Reserve and the Marine Reserve received all three pays, (1) drill, (2) transportation and subsistence, and (3) command. The National Guard received two of these, (1) drill, and (2) command, but not transportation and subsistence. The Air Force Reserve and the Army Reserve received none of them—they were shut out in this 3-2-0 ball game.

In January 1947, at the request of the Air Reserve Association, Representative MARGARET CHASE SMITH, Republican, of Maine, introduced a bill to provide inactive training pay for the members of the Army (and Air Force) Reserve. Three months later the War Department adopted the Smith proposal in a departmental bill. This bill was ultimately passed and became law. It removed the existing training pay inequities and disparities suffered by the Army and Air Force Reserves.

2. Aviation Reserve Bonus

A $500 annual bonus is authorized for all Air Force Reserve officers while on active duty provided that they are separated from active duty before being integrated into the Regular Air Force and provided that they have served continuously for a period of 1 year or more. A similar $500 annual bonus is authorized for commissioned Naval Reserve aviators (graduate aviation cadets) who have served continuously on active duty over a period of one or more years, with the limit being an aggregate of $3,500. In both instances, the Reserve annual bonus was suspended during the war and is not terminated. The Air National Guard does not receive any such bonus.

This is a rare instance where the Air Force Reserve was ahead of the Naval Reserve and the Air National Guard. For while the bonus in the case of the Naval Reserve was limited to commissioned personnel (graduate aviation cadets) on duty involving flying, the Air Force Reserve bonus was payable to nonflying officers as well as rated officers and to all Air Force Reserve officers, regardless of whether or not they were commissioned as a result of aviation cadet training.

Since the accumulated $500 annual bonuses could not be collected by the Naval Aviation reservists and the Air Force reservists until they were separated from active duty, that is, separation from active duty was a prerequisite to payment of the bonus, some question arose in those cases where the reservists were killed while on active duty and before separation to inactive duty, and thus before collection of their earned and accumulated bonuses. To remove this question, Representative MARGARET CHASE SMITH introduced a bill in 1946 providing for the payment of such bonuses to the heirs and estates of the reservists killed while on active duty and prior to collection.

And while the Navy Department supported this proposal, the then War Department sent officer representatives to Representative SMITH and requested that she not push her bill. They gave two reasons for their request, (1) that the bill was not necessary since the Comptroller General had ruled that death constituted "separation from active duty," and consequently the uncollected bonuses were due the heirs or estates of the deceased Air Force reservists, and (2) that the Smith bill would create an administrative inconvenience on the War Department in that it would make the payment of the bonuses to the heirs or estates of the deceased air reservists mandatory, instead of discretionary, upon the War Department.

The difference between the Navy and the War Department (Army and Air Force) was that the Navy asked the Congress to pass a bill directing and requiring it to pay the heirs—but the War Department asked Representative SMITH not to require it to do this. To the first reason advanced, Representative SMITH observed that the Comptroller General could change his ruling at any time and rule that the heirs were not entitled to the accumulated and uncollected bonuses. She said that she wanted to remove the ambiguity by specific and permanent law. To the second reason advanced, Mrs. SMITH said that she would rather have an administrative inconvenience placed upon the War Department, which had the machinery for paying the bonus, and mail initiative and action mandatory upon the War Department, than to leave the matter a discretionary one for the Department. She pointed out that many of the heirs would otherwise never collect the uncollected bonuses simply because they did not know about them or didn't know how to proceed for collection. She further observed that in many instances where the heirs would have to take the initiative they would have to hire an attorney whose fee would reduce what they finally received from the War Department.

The only way that Representative SMITH prevailed was to amend the department bill of the Navy so as to include the Air Force Reserve officers. The amended Navy bill passed.

This is not an example of a tangible disparity. It is an example of an intangible disparity—the contrasting attitudes of the Navy and the Army (and Air Force) toward their Reserves—and another example of where the Naval Reserve is out in front of the Air Force Reserve.

Another intangible as reflected by the official attitude of the Air Force toward its Reserve was the opposition of the Air Force to another bill of Mrs. SMITH—the bill that proposed that those Air Force reservists who never went off of active duty to collect their accumulated bonuses, and who were integrated into the Regular Air Force, should be paid their accumulated bonuses. The premise of this bill, which was reintroduced in the Senate in 1949, is that these integrated reservists who never went off active duty are entitled to the same thing that are those who went off active duty, collected their accumulated bonuses, and then applied for and obtained commissions in the Regular Air Force.

The Air Force's official grounds for opposition to the Smith bill is that the bonus was not a gratuity but rather a rehabilitation allowance and that those who didn't go off active duty didn't require the habilitation financial assistance that those who did go off active duty needed—even if only one day intervened between their separation to inactive duty and their return to active duty as a member of the Regular Air Force. The integrated reservists who never went off active duty feel that they have been penalized for loyalty to the Air Force and for not leaving to "shop around" for a better spot in civilian life. They feel that the Air Force has reneged on a contractual obligation of the bonus which was offered as an inducement to get them to sign up with the Air Force during the prewar days.

Regardless of who is right, this official attitude of the Air Force has impaired the faith of many reservists in the Department's attitude toward the Air Force Reserve.

3. Uniform Allowance

Uniform allowances must be compared in two periods because of the existing variation—(1) peacetime and (2) wartime. Regardless of service, it is desirable that when reservists report for duty or training when the wearing of the uniform is required, they do so in proper uniform. It is essential to military bearing and discipline. It avoids delay in availability.

Comparison of uniform allowances in peacetime is easier simply because no uniform allowances are prescribed during peacetime for officers of the Air Force Reserve, the Army Reserve, and the National Guard. Again the Naval Reserve and the Marine Corps Reserve are out in front. When these officers first report and are accepted for active or training duty with pay they receive a uniform allowance of $100. And if they perform a minimum amount of training or active duty, they receive an additional $50 uniform allowance every 4 years.

The disparity between rated Air Force Reserve officers and Naval Reserve aviators is even greater. The Naval Reserve aviators receive an initial uniform allowance of $150 and subsequently $50 for each 4 years.

To summarize, naval aviator reservists get the best peacetime treatment on uniform allowance with $150 plus $50—the other naval reservists next with $100 plus $50—and the Air Force reservists, Army reservists, and National Guard men last with nothing. In other words, another shut-off for the Naval Reserve.

A total uniform allowance of $250 in wartime is granted to all civilian components. At first glance it would appear that there was no disparity in uniform allowances among the non-Regulars in wartime. But such is not the case. All officers of the Air Force Reserve, Army Reserve, and National Guard above the rank of captain are denied any uniform allowance. There is no such rank distinction or "cut-off" in the Naval, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard Reserves.

In summary, all officers above the rank of captain in the Air Force Reserve, Army Reserve, and National Guard get no uniform allowance at any time. Captains and below of these three components get an allowance only in wartime. All officers of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve, regardless of rank, are granted uniform allowances in both peacetime and wartime, with naval aviators having a $50 edge in peacetime.

B. Security

A goal that each of us individually, regardless of occupation or station in life, seek is security—or at least a sense of security—whether it be financial or physical security. We cherish the thought that we can establish such security that even though illness or unemployment (particularly that unemployment at advanced age), may befall us, we will still have a means to provide food, shelter, and health treatment.

And a reservist is just like any other person, who is interested in the service retirement and health insurance systems carried by any potential employer. He is like the Regular who properly values the physical disability protection that a service career offers, the insurance coverage for his family, and the reward of service retirement pay.

1. Service Retirement Benefits

Prior to the enactment of the Reserve Retirement Act of 1948, the Army and Air Force did not have legislative authority for the nondisability (or service) retirement of personnel of the Army Reserve, National Guard, or Air Force Reserve. However, it was possible for members of the Naval Reserve and the Marine Corps Reserve to be granted nondisability service retirement benefits. Basic requirement was a minimum of 20 years' active service. It was true that very few Naval and Marine reservists accumulated as much as 20 years' active service. Nevertheless, it was possible of attainment and for it they could gain retirement benefits, while those of the Army Reserve, Air Force Reserve, and National Guard could not. This was another example of disparity between the civilian components.

Fortunately, the Reserve Retirement Act of 1948 has removed the existing disparities and all civilian components have been awarded the same nondisability service retirement benefits.

2. Physical Disability Retirement

Under existing statutory provisions, personnel of all civilian components receive retirement pay and hospitalization coverage on a par with Regulars only if they are ordered to extended active duty in excess of 30 days. There is no tangible difference between the civilian components since none of them have this coverage for less than 31 days' service.

But there is an intangible difference measured in terms of morale and indicated contrasting attitudes of the Navy toward the Reserves and the Army and Air Force toward Reserves. Recently at a hearing of the Senate Armed Services Committee on S. 213, a bill by Senator SMITH to provide physical disability and death coverage for reservists when training or on active duty for less than 30 days on a par with Regulars, the Chief of Naval Personnel urged the immediate passage of the bill while the Army and Air Force representatives opposed the bill. Again, in the eyes of reservists, especially those testifying in favor of S. 213, the Navy was out in front of the Army and the Air Force. The committee was impressed with the Navy view and reported the bill out favorably and it was passed unanimously by the Senate on April 11, 1949.

3. Hospitalization, Disability Compensation, and Survivors' Benefits

Generally speaking, hospitalization and disability compensation is granted to all personnel of the civilian components for injury, disease, illness, or death while in training or on duty for less than 31 days. Cases covered fall into three categories of service that is not extended active service ordered in excess of 30 days: (1) "While employed in service"; (2) while on active duty under proper orders or non-active-duty aerial flights; and (3) illness or contraction of disease while on active or training duty. In these cases there is considerable variation as to coverage for each particular civilian component.

Under the "while employed in service" coverage, the Naval Reserve again has the edge on the Army Reserve and Air Force Reserve—and the National Guard is not covered at all. The Naval Reserve is covered for all duty and training and authorized travel to or from such duty and training. Coverage of the Army Reserve and Air Force Reserve is limited to active duty and training without pay and the authorized travel is limited to and from active duty—travel for any thing other than active duty is not covered.

Specifically this class of coverage is—

Those who suffer physical injury or death as a result thereof while employed in service, other than extended active service to which ordered in excess of 30 days, and their beneficiaries are entitled to all the benefits prescribed by law for civil employees of the United States who are physically injured in line of duty or die as a result thereof or they may elect the veterans' pensions for peacetime service.

The "under proper orders" or non-active-duty aerial flights cases stated more fully is—

Those who suffer physical injury or death as a result therefrom while on active duty under proper orders, other than extended active service to which ordered in excess of 30 days, or who voluntarily participate, when not on active duty, in aerial flights, in Government-owned aircraft by proper authority as an incident to their training, are entitled to surgical, medical, or hospital treatment until the condition resulting from injury cannot be materially improved by such further treatment; and necessary transportation incident to such hospitalization and return home; and to pay and allowances during a period limited to 6 months after termination of the prescribed period of active duty or training, except that subsistence is furnished with any continued hospitalization; or to burial expenses if death results from the injury.

This is another rare instance where the Naval Reserve does not enjoy an advantage over the other civilian components. The Army Reserve and the Air Force Reserve receive all of these above-stated benefits. So does the National Guard and more. It is covered by the above-stated benefits when personnel suffer such injury in line of duty while en route to or from service schools, encampment, maneuvers, or other exercises—while the Army Reserve and Air Force Reserve are not.

On coverage for illness or disease contracted while on active or training duty, other than extended active service to which ordered in excess of 30 days, members of civilian components are entitled at Government expense to treatment, transportation, and subsistence. Army reservists, Air Force reservists, and National Guardists must be on duty with pay status in order to qualify for these benefits. Naval reservists need only be on active duty, with or without pay. But upon qualifying under these requirements, the naval reservists are limited to 10 weeks' hospitalization and treatment following discharge unless a medical-survey board or the Surgeon General authorizes a longer period. Pay and allowances of naval reservists in these instances are terminated at the expiration of the prescribed active-duty or training period.

Army reservists, Air Force reservists, and National Guard men enjoy certain advantages over naval reservists on this coverage. They are entitled to burial expenses that naval reservists are not. They are entitled to hospitalization and treatment for 6 months or more after the order duty period expires, as compared to the 10 weeks for naval reservists. They are entitled to pay and allowances for 6 months after the order duty period expires while the pay and allowances for naval reservists terminates with the expiration of the prescribed order duty period.

Army reservists and Air Force reservists also are entitled to the option of Federal employees' compensation or veterans' pension, while the naval reservists and National Guard men are not. But National Guard men are covered for disease contracted while en route to or from service schools, encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises.

It would be difficult to say which civilian component has the broadest and most favorable coverage on illness or contraction of disease on service of less than 31 days. Naval reservists have the initial advantage on qualifying since they do not have to be in a pay status. But once Army reservists, Air Force reservists, and National Guard men qualify, they get more and longer benefits. Army reservists and Air Force reservists get the option of Federal employees' compensation or veterans' pension that the others do not, but they don't get the travel coverage that the National Guard men do.

There is a consistent threat of Naval Reserve advantage on the matter of security coverage for Reserve service. However, the Hook Commission has recommended an overall and uniform compensation plan for all civilian components and all Regular services. This plan has been incorporated in the Career Compensation Act of 1949 bill now before Congress. It will do much to remove the existing complicated variations.

C. Recognition

Pay means a livelihood, food, and shelter. Security means protection against misfortune, physical or financial. But often a complimentary word will inspire and stimulate individual effort and results that neither pay nor security could. Ambition necessarily places great value on recognition. And recognition breeds leadership.

As in most fields, there are two principal types of recognition that are granted to members of the civilian components of the Army, Navy, and Air Force. They are (1) decorations and awards, and (2) promotion.

1. Decorations and Awards

On Reserve decorations and awards, the Naval Reserve and Marine Reserve are in a class by themselves. And as is usually the case, the Air Force Reserve and the Army Reserve trail at the rear with absolutely nothing.

The Marine Reserve tops the list with three Reserve medals and ribbons: (1) the Naval Reserve Medal, (2) the Naval Reserve Special Commendation Ribbon, and (3) the Organized Marine Corps Reserve Medal. The Naval Reserve is not awarded the last of these three.

A Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve Medal is authorized for those Naval reservists and Marine reservists who complete 10 years' honorable service (either active or inactive duty or both) in the respective Reserve. A bronze star is awarded for each additional 10 years' honorable service in the Reserve.

A Naval and Marine Reserve Special Commendation Ribbon is awarded to those Naval and Marine reservists who officially commanded, in a meritorious manner, a battalion, squadron, separate Navy division, or larger Organized Reserve unit for a total of 4 years, not necessarily continuous, between January 1, 1930, and December 7, 1941, provided the individual reservists served in the Reserve for 10 or more years.

An Organized Marine Corps Reserve Medal with ribbon is authorized as an award for 4-year period of service in the Marine Corps Reserve during which the individual has met certain conduct and professional standards and attended four annual field-training periods and 80 percent of the drills scheduled for the Organized Reserve in four consecutive years. A bronze star is awarded for each subsequent qualification.

While the National Guard does not have any Federal or uniform State award, a number of States award service medals to members of their National Guard for the rendering of long and faithful service to the State.

The Air Force and Army do not authorize any medal or ribbon for service in a Reserve status. In fact they have opposed legislation designed to award a Reserve Medal and Reserve Special Commendation Ribbon to the members of their Reserves on exactly the same basis as those awarded to the Naval and Marine Reserves.

In summary on Reserve medals and ribbons, the score reads—Marine Reserve, three, Naval Reserve, two, National Guard, one, Air Force Reserve, none, Army Reserve, none—another incentive instance of where the Air Force and Army Reserves are shut out, and at the official insistence of the Air Force and the Army.

2. Promotion

Since the promotion systems of the Army, Navy, and Air Force have been undergoing considerable change and study in the postwar period, it is risky to compare the promotion systems and policies of the civilian components of the armed services. Comparison is further questionable because of the variance between the services in size, composition, assignments, age, and physical standards. The present legislative trend is to apply the Navy system to the other services. This stems partially from the comparative success of the Navy on the problem and partly from the fact that Hon. CARL VINSON, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, has guided armed services composition and organization legislation along the naval pattern that he set for many years as chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee.

However, the very fact that present legislative trends are to pattern after the Navy system indicates that again the Naval Reserve sets the model for the other civilian components to shoot at.

One can get an earlier commissioned start in the Naval Reserve and a head start often cannot be overcome in a promotion contest. The minimum age for commission in the Navy and Naval Reserve is 17 years. That is 4 years ahead of the Army, Air Force, and National Guard minimum of 21 years.

Opportunities to advance in rank, or to be promoted, are directly contingent upon the availability of higher ranks. On this point, it is believed that the Naval Reserve again has the edge because the promotion of naval reservists is tied in directly with promotion of Navy Regulars. To most any reservist, this in itself speaks volumes, for the goal of reservists is to be promoted in side-by-side equity with the Regulars. That in itself is the greatest guaranty or assurance of fair promotion treatment.

Backbone of the Naval Reserve promotion system is the running-mate assignment. Officers, except those on active duty, are placed on a Reserve lineal precedence list and each assigned a running mate. Position on this list and determination of running mate is based on date of rank. As officers of the Regular precedence list become eligible for consideration for promotion, their running mate on the Reserve precedence list also becomes eligible. This insures that Naval Reserve officers may be promoted as fast as, but no faster than, their Regular contemporaries, regardless of whether they are members of tables of organization units, if they fulfill certain minimum training requirements.

Promotion in the Army Reserve and Air Force Reserve is keyed to filling vacancies as they occur in the grade structure of organized units and mobilization positions of the Reserves. In other words, no mobilization or T/O vacancy—no promotion. Eligibility to fill a vacancy is dependent upon service and participation factors such as minimum time in rank and in the Air Force Reserve a minimum number of earned credits and points in each grade.

Promotions in the National Guard are a function of the State, but for benefits of the National Defense Act, they must be federally recognized. All officers of the National Guard are assigned to units which provide within their organization prescribed officer grades, while officers of the Army Reserve and Air Force Reserve may be assigned to the catch-all composite units where grade allocations are not fixed.

Minimum time in grade under the present regulations of the civilian components is as follows:

Rank	Air Force Reserve, Army Reserve, National Guard	Naval Reserve, Marine Reserve
	Years	Years
Second lieutenant, ensign	2	3
First lieutenant, lieutenant (junior grade)	3	2
Captain, lieutenant	5	4
Major, lieutenant commander	3	4
Lieutenant colonel, commander	4	5

Comparison on age-in-grade limitations for officers brings no hard and fast conclusion. The nearest approach to a conclusion is that in the higher ranks naval reservists are permitted to be from 3 to 15 years older than reservists of the other civilian components before becoming over age-in-grade. This means that they can stay in the Reserve longer before being released because of age. For instance, a rated Reserve colonel in tactical Air Force Reserve unit is over-age when reaching the age of 49, while a rank equivalent captain in the Naval Volunteer Reserve is not over-age until he is 64.

Officers become over age-in-grade upon reaching the birthday shown below for each grade:

	Air National Guard, Air Force Reserve
	Lieutenant	Captain	Major	Lieutenant colonel	Colonel
Rated personnel, tactical units	32	37	42	45	49
Others	36	42	48	55	60

	Naval Reserve
	Ensign	Lieutenant (junior grade)	Lieutenant	Lieutenant commander	Commander	Captain
Organized Reserve or general duty in Volunteer Reserve	32	34	38	43	46	(1)
All others	40	40	46	52	58	64

[1] None prescribed.

Comparative summary of the high points of promotion aspects of the civilian components shows the Naval Reserve to be out in front in the following respects: (1) A Reserve commission can be obtained 4 years earlier at the age of 17; (2) a naval reservist can ordinarily serve longer before becoming over age-in-grade; and (3) naval reservists are promoted side-by-side with Navy Regulars under the "running mate" system instead of having to wait for mobilization or T/O vacancies.

D. Training

Variance in character of each of the services makes most difficult training comparisons between the civilian components. Ship training in the Naval Reserve is hardly comparable to infantry or armored training in the Army Reserve or pilot training in the Air Force Reserve.

From the standpoint of the Air Force Reserve, it is more practical to make the comparison with the Naval Air Reserve and the Air National Guard. However, in some instances such as (1) privileges extended while training and (2) Reserve publications, a more general interservice comparison can be made.

1. Instructors

Training instructors are human. Humans have great variations in ability and attitude. No one could generalize and say that instructors assigned to the Air Force Reserve training are better or worse than instructors in the other civilian components.

Whether it is justified or not, there is a strong feeling among the Air Force reservists that Regular Air Force personnel assigned to Air Reserve training units are not interested in their assignments and/or in the Reserve and that the better caliber of Regular officers is not assigned to such duty inasmuch as they seek other assignments that offer them greater career opportunities. It is felt that both the number and caliber of Regular officers assigned to Air Reserve training units are unsatisfactory and thus handicap the Air Reserve training program.

Brig. Gen. Robert J. Smith, 1948 president of the Air Reserve Association, gave the Gray Board an example of this when he said:

"I had a report just recently in respect to a base training unit at Portland, Oreg., where a man with a rating of a balloon pilot having about 6 or 8 months to go from retirement was made the base unit commander. I leave it to your imagination how much interest and how much imagination and enthusiasm he would be likely to bring to such a program. That illustration can be repeated in many other places of the 41 where such base units are maintained today. It will not get the job done."

2. Quality of Facilities and Equipment

Where and what a reservist trains with obviously controls the development of his trained proficiency for the job he is expected to do in time of war. It also greatly shapes the reservist's interest and enthusiasm for training—or his lack of interest and enthusiasm.

Major in the list of facilities are armories. On this both the National Guard and the Naval Reserve enjoy a distinct advantage over the Army Reserve and the Air Force Reserve. The States have provided the armories for the National Guard. The Navy Department in conjunction with Congress has provided armories for the Naval Reserve.

But even more specific as far as the Air Force is concerned is the comparison in equipment—in aircraft. The Air National Guard trains in tactical and service aircraft as modern as jet fighters. The Naval Air Reserve trains with modern tactical and service aircraft. The Air Force Reserve trains in trainer aircraft—in AT-6s and AT-11s. What an experience for the combat Air Reserve veteran. Not until the last year have any service aircraft been placed in the Air Force Reserve training program—and the number assigned is so negligibly small that it cannot be regarded as anything but merely a token assignment. The Air Force Reserve just isn't in the same league with the Air National Guard and the Naval Air Reserves on aircraft in Reserve training.

3. Quantity of Facilities and Equipment

The appendix of the Gray report provides statistics which forcefully expose the short end of the deal that the Air Force Reserve gets on the number of aircraft assigned to its training. However, the Gray report did not make the comparison but rather just stated the details of the Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard programs. It is when the two programs are analyzed side-by-side that the revelations come forth. On June 30, 1948, the Gray Board reported the statistics below:

	Current			Planned
	Pilots	Planes	Pilots per plane[1]	Pilots	Planes	Pilots per plane[1]
National Guard	2,364	1,998	1+	3,189	3,212	1−
Air Force Reserve	10,436	1,325	8	22,500	2,600	9−

[1] Computed by author. Not in Gray report.

From these statistics, the heavy distribution of planes to National Guard pilots and the thin distribution to Air Force Reserve pilots is most evident. While there is one plane for each National Guard pilot on the average in both planning and actuality, eight to nine Air Force Reserve pilots on the average have to share one plane. In others, the ratio is at least 8 to 1 in favor of the National Guard pilots over the Air Force Reserve pilots. The oft-reported experience of Air Force reservists waiting around to fly a plane and seeing several idle National Guard tactical planes that they couldn't touch, takes on real meaning in view of these statistics.

This factor of utilization was commented upon in the Gray report by the way of footnote. That footnote is quoted below.

"The Air National Guard is fully equipped with tactical aircraft, the Air Reserve, with trainers, except for 10 tactical planes. The following figures on utilization from July 1, 1947, to June 1, 1948, show that maximum training value is not being obtained from National Guard aircraft.

"Average hours per month per aircraft on hand

Air Force Reserve	33
Regular Air Force	29
Air National Guard	8

Average hours per month per aircraft in commission

Air Force Reserve	45
Regular Air Force	49
Air National Guard	14

Percentage of aircraft in commission

	Percent
Air Force Reserve	72
Regular Air Force	58
Air National Guard	56"

4. Privileges Extended While Training

Commissary and post exchange or ship's service privileges are extended to the members of all civilian components when they are on active duty. But this uniformity of treatment does not apply on training not in the active-duty category.

Naval reservists may make purchases and utilize ship's service stores during any day when they are in a drill status or attending drills or performing duty at a naval station. Members of the Marine Organized Reserves are extended post exchange privileges at all Marine Corps posts and stations regardless of the days they are in a drill status. Retired Naval and Marine reservists in a pay status or with 16 years or more of active service have the same privileges as the Regulars.

Members of the Organized Naval Reserve and Organized Marine Corps Reserve are permitted to operate canteens and unit post exchanges stocking such items as tobacco, candy, soft drinks, and articles which members need in connection with their training.

Units of the National Guard can operate post exchanges in armories and in camps under State supervision at the discretion of the local National Guard commander.

None of these privileges are specifically granted to Air Force reservists or Army reservists when they are on inactive training.

Summary scores: Naval Reserve 3, Marine Reserve 3, National Guard 1, Air Force, 0, Army Reserve 0; the familiar shut out of the latter two.

5. Publications—Dissemination of Information

We all like to know what is going on. We all have questions and seek information about that in which we participate. Members of civilian components are no exception to this normal characteristic.

Only Naval reservists and Marine reservists regularly receive Reserve publications that keep them posted on the Reserve program and Reserve activities and news, as well as news about the Regular Establishment. Naval reservists received a monthly publication known as the Naval Reservist—Marine reservists receive the Marine Corps Reserve Bulletin.

It is somewhat understandable that the National Guard men, being in a State organization, do not receive a national regular publication.

But again the Air Force reservists and the Army reservists pull up at the rear with nothing. They do not receive any such Reserve publications. They have to rely on Reserve association publications.

III. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The inherent weaknesses of the Air Reserve program are in essence those which stem from the disparities and inequities, past and present, that handicap the Air Force Reserve in comparison with other civilian components. As can be seen from the previous discussion, there is a consistent pattern of the Air Force Reserve being denied basic incentives that the Naval Reserve and National Guard enjoy.

The comparatively recent enactment of the Inactive Training Pay Act and the Reserve Retirement Act has done much to remove the inherent weaknesses. But these steps are only a start in the right direction.

The two greatest basic needs are (1) to merge the Air Force Reserve and the Air National Guard into one Federal civilian component of the United States Air Force, and (2) the enactment of an Air Force Reserve Act, patterned after the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, or the expansion of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 into a Civilian Component Act to extend the beneficial effect of the former in application to all members of all civilian components.

Remedial action will have to come by (1) the Department of the Air Force and (2) the Congress.

A. Action by the Department of the Air Force

The following action by the Department is deemed necessary:

1. There should be no further delay in announcing the new and revised Air Force Reserve program. Past repeated postponements and delays have already seriously impaired the confidence of Air Force reservists in the real intention of the Department of the Air Force to take effective action.

2. A greater portion of the Air Force budget should be allocated to the Air Force Reserve. Only 1.7 percent was allocated in the 1949 budget to this force which constitutes more than 90 percent of wartime strength of the United States Air Force.

3. The Department of the Air Force should either support pending legislation proposing a uniform allowance for reservists or should propose its own departmental measure to Congress.

4. The Department of the Air Force should withdraw its opposition to S. 213, a bill to provide physical disability coverage for reservists in training or on duty for less than 31 days on a par with Regulars.

5. The Department of the Air Force should reverse the past opposition to the legislation proposing a Reserve medal and a Reserve special commendation ribbon.

6. Serious consideration should be given to adopting the best features of the "running mate" promotion system of the Naval Reserve for the Air Force Reserve.

7. The very best possible Regular Air Force personnel should be assigned as instructors in the Air Reserve training program.

8. More tactical aircraft should be assigned to the Air Force Reserve training program.

9. Air Force reservists in training should be extended post exchange and commissary privileges on a comparable basis as is extended to members of the Naval Reserve, Marine Reserve, and National Guard.

10. The Department of the Air Force should publish a regular monthly Reserve bulletin to be distributed to all members of the Air Force Reserve—in like manner of the Naval Reservist and the Marine Corps Reserve Bulletin.

B. Legislative action

The following action by Congress is most desirable:

1. The Air National Guard and the Air Force Reserve should be merged by legislation into one Federal civilian component of the United States Air Force. Whether the Air National Guard or the Air Force Reserve is to dominate the proposed single civilian component is not nearly as important as merging the two into one.

2. Either an Air Force Reserve Act should be passed or the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 should be expanded into a Civilian Components Act so as to give all members of all civilian components the "breaks" that naval reservists get under the Naval Reserve Act of 1938.

3. Congress should increase the appropriations for the Air Force Reserve and should legislatively prevent the Departments from cutting back Air Force Reserve appropriations, as was done in 1947 when the Air Force Reserve allocation was cut from the appropriated $41,000,000 back down to $18,000,000 and 29 Air Reserve training units were abolished by administrative action—a 44-percent cut in the training program.

4. S. 213, the Reserve physical disability retirement bill, should be passed.

5. Legislation proposing an Air Force Reserve medal (S. 218) and an Air Force Reserve special commendation ribbon (S. 217) (patterned after such in the Naval Reserve) should be passed.

6. In order to assure continued proper evaluation of the civilian components, standing Subcommittees on Civilian Components should be established and appointed in the Senate Armed Services Committee and the House Armed Services Committee.

PROPOSED CHANGES IN FEDERAL TAX LAWS AND SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAM—STATEMENT BY SENATOR BUTLER

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a copy of a news release prepared by me, dealing with a poll among business establishments on various questions related to proposed changes in tax laws, and in social-security programs. The news release is self-explanatory:

Businessmen generally are split about 50–50 on the proposal to extend the social-security system on its present basis to the 25,000,000 citizens not now covered by the system, Senator HUGH BUTLER (Republican, Nebraska) announced on the basis of a poll conducted by him among about 6,000 individual business establishments throughout the Nation. On the other hand, the same group voted heavily against the proposal that a system of compulsory health insurance should be added to the present social-security set-up.

Of businessmen replying to the questionnaire, about 47 percent favored extension of old age and unemployment benefits to those not now covered, while 53 percent opposed such extension, Senator BUTLER said. On the compulsory health insurance question, 94 percent of those replying were opposed. Senator BUTLER, a member of the Senate Finance Committee which must pass on tax questions, conducted the poll to secure a sample of business sentiment.

A heavy majority of the businessmen favored a ceiling on the pay-roll tax rate to finance the social-security program, so that such rates could not be increased indefinitely, the Senator said.

Replies to other questions yielded the following results:

Asked what should be the normal income tax for corporations and for individuals, the average rates in the replies were: 30 percent for corporations and 38 percent for individuals. (These rates are well below present maximum rates on both categories.)

In recommending a formula for depreciation or replacement, the answers were as follows: 20 percent were for the straight line cost method; 35 percent were for permitting owners to decide; 41 percent were for the formula as at present.

When asked which of present taxes was most objectionable and should be repealed first, the businessmen replying made the following choices: 65 percent were most anxious for repeal of the transportation tax; 25 percent, the communications tax; and 11 percent, all nuisance taxes. Those affected by penalty tax on consolidated returns were 100 percent against its continuance.

In making the results of the poll public, Senator BUTLER emphasized that he did not believe that the views of businessmen were the principal controlling factor. "I appreciate the interest and cooperation shown by these businessmen in answering my poll," Senator BUTLER said, "since they are in a better position than the average citizen to judge the practicability of these various tax proposals. Of course, when we come to reach a decision, a great many factors and the views of other groups must receive equally careful attention."

INCONSISTENCY—EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON POST

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD at this point an editorial from today's Washington Post entitled "Inconsistency."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INCONSISTENCY

"A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds, adored by little statesmen, and philosophers and divines." This famous dictum of the Sage of Concord, Ralph Waldo Emerson, came to mind when we read that President Truman had urged Members of Congress to do what they think to be right—that is, vote according to their convictions—on the basis of the facts at hand. To those who regard inconsistency as a mark of greatness that advice should increase the President's stature as a statesman, for only a few days ago he threatened to punish Members of Congress who voted against administration bills by depriving them of patronage. Since that threat still stands, it follows that the President's brand of inconsistency takes the form of simultaneously endorsing irreconcilable codes of conduct.

We feel sure that Emerson would not applaud this kind of inconsistency, which is merely a way of currying favor by expressing noble sentiments, while clinging to practices in conflict with such views. At any rate, the President's little homily will not allay the alarm of Members of Congress, whose views of what is right differ from his own and who have been forewarned of reprisals if they depart from the party line.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Vernon E. West, Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia, and Mr. Harry L. Walker, Assistant Corporation Counsel, may be present on the floor of the Senate during consideration of the pending District of Columbia tax bill, so they may be available to furnish fiscal information to the Members of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred H. R. 3704, being a bill to provide revenue for the District, now reports the bill back to the Senate with certain amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass. This bill was prepared by a joint Senate and House District subcommittee and was passed by the House on March 29. It is hoped that the Senate may act with dispatch on this measure, for each succeeding month, week, or even day the District is losing needed revenue in substantial amounts which this bill would produce.

The subcommittee of the District Committee, in conjunction with the House committee, have applied themselves very diligently to a study of the finances and of various types of taxation applicable to the District for a period of over 3 months, and we have held a very great number of public hearings. The committee finds that the District must have additional revenues to administer even at a minimum the necessary functions of the District government.

The Senate committee amendments do not greatly change the bill as passed by the House.

Under existing law, for the purposes of administration, the functions and finances of the District government are divided into three separate and distinct divisions, namely, the Highway Department, the Water Department, and the so-called general department, which includes all divisions of District government excepting those relating to highways and the water system.

For the fiscal year 1950 the Highway and Water Departments need no attention from the Congress, in that their anticipated increased revenues of $41,600 and $117,000 in the Highway and Water Funds, respectively, will be ample for the proper and efficient functioning of those departments. The Commissioners of the District and District executive personnel are to be congratulated on their splendid record in the administration of these important functions of District government.

However, in the other departments of District government operating from income to the general fund, we find dire need of additional revenue. Under existing law, revenues are totally inadequate, and additional funds must be provided. Therefore, in presenting H. R. 3704 for consideration by the Senate our attention will be directed solely to the general fund.

For the general fund as presented to the committee by the District officials, income from this bill and present revenue sources is estimated to be $98,821,000; while the District budget requests $98,787,000; and if the Senate accepts the bill as presented for its consideration, there is estimated an overage of $33,085.

The committee has made provision in this bill for pay increases for 14,000 District employees retroactive to July 1 in the amount of approximately $10,000,000. It seems to be generally recognized, and was so recognized by the House, that the Congress has a moral obligation to the District employees to provide this retroactive pay increase because of the failure of the sales tax act to receive favorable action by this body at the last session. I am advised that these increases were provided for District employees as well as for Federal employees, but upon failure of the sales-tax bill to pass, the salary-increase bill—Public Law 900—was amended to read "not to apply to District employees until funds are available."

Mr. President, I think I can say to the Senate that the budget presented by the District Commissioners requests the bare minimum needed for efficient functioning of the District government. It is in no sense of the word a padded budget. The opposite is true, in that it fails to provide for certain badly needed improvements in the District. Perhaps the most glaring example is the failure of the budget to provide adequately for District schools and to meet minimum requirements of the welfare system.

I am aware, Mr. President, that from the $300,000,000 appropriated by this body recently as direct aid to schools throughout the Nation the District will receive $580,000, which, of course, will be helpful, but will not start to bring the District school system up to the standard of other like cities, and, most certainly, not the type of schools that should be maintained in the Nation's Capital.

The public school budget for the fiscal year 1950 was limited by a directive issued by the Board of Commissioners to three categories:

First. Completion of projects already authorized;

Second. Furniture and equipment for projects already authorized; and Third. Providing utilities for projects already authorized.

The school facilities of this city, as disclosed in a recent very comprehensive report by Mr. George D. Strayer, are totally inadequate. Many of the school buildings were built in the eighties and should have been demolished years ago, but because down through the years Congress has failed to provide adequately for the District, these antiquated, obsolete buildings are still in use, greatly to the detriment of the school system. This failure to provide funds for new construction imposes a serious handicap upon the children of the District of Columbia. It places a limitation upon their educational development that will be felt throughout their lives.

Mr. President, I was amazed to learn that in the Cardozo High School, which has a capacity of 1,040 students, there is an enrollment of 1,740 students, and it is operated on a triple-relay plan from 7:30 in the morning until 4:30 in the afternoon. I noted too that this high school has no playground and no physical training or athletic program.

Throughout the entire school system, I was surprised to learn, as I know the Members of this body will be surprised to know, that here in the Nation's Capital no provision of any kind is made for sick leave for teachers. In event of illness a teacher must employ and pay a substitute. Furthermore, Mr. President, I was surprised to learn that there is a great number of classes in the District school system having 45 students, and that the average number of students in each class is approximately 30, or twice the number generally accepted as the proper size of a class for the best classroom work.

As previously stated, after a most careful and thorough study, the committee reports H. R. 3704, as amended, providing for various types of taxation which we deem best suited to the District needs. They are:

First. Sales tax;

Second. Compensating-use tax;

Third. Excise tax on motor vehicles and trailers;

Fourth. Providing certain amendments and additions to the Income and Franchise Tax Act of 1947;

Fifth. Provides for increasing the fees for licenses and taxes on alcoholic beverages;

Sixth. Imposes a tax on cigarettes; and Seventh. Increases the minimum rate of taxation on real property in the District.

Mr. President, the committee found in its studies that for at least the last 12 years, committees of Congress, District officials, interested citizens, and civic organizations have lent their efforts, their time, and study in attempts to provide a sound and adequate tax system for the District. The committee had the information, guidance, and advantage of the studies and recommendations of these committees and, also, of the studies previously made at the direction of the Congress by Dr. Chester B. Pond, now director of the bureau of research and statistics for the department of taxation and finance in the State of New York. The bill as reported to the Senate closely follows recommendations made time and time again by these various committees, all of which are quite in harmony with those made by Dr. Pond at the completion of his studies. We believe the bill which we are recommending provides not only an adequate but, also, an equitable tax system with a broad base, designed in such a way as not to place an undue burden or hardship on any group or class of District of Columbia citizens. Mr. President, we believe we are presenting in this revenue act the wishes of the majority of the citizens of the District.

In order to meet the increasing costs of the District, which I assure the Senate are not above the average increased costs in like cities throughout the United States, we found the circumstances to be such that a retail sales tax, supplemented, as such a tax always is, by a use tax, is necessary. The rate of the proposed tax is 2 percent on all tangible personal property sold at retail, but exempting from the tax all food consumed in the home, as well as restaurant meals costing less than $1.50. The bill also exempts from the tax all medicines, including orthopedic and orthodontic appliances, crutches, wheel chairs, artificial limbs and teeth, artificial eyes and eyeglasses, and all things of like nature. Furthermore, Mr. President, any article under 14 cents bears no tax, while items selling for 14 cents up to 63 cents are taxed 1 cent; articles selling for 64 cents up to $1.13, both inclusive, 2 cents; and for each 50-cent sale in excess of $1.13, an additional 1-cent tax applies.

Mr. President, we followed quite closely the sales-tax laws now in vogue in 27 States—3 of the States having a 3-percent tax, 1 State a 2½-percent tax, and the other States 2 percent, as provided in this act.

To the end that this act may relieve the lower-income groups to the greatest possible degree, as previously stated, the tax does not apply to food consumed in the home or to restaurants meals costing less than $1.50. This provision, Mr. President, is quite in contrast with the fact that of the 27 States having a sales tax at this time, food is exempt in only 6 of the 27, and medicines are exempt in only 4. The committee is aware of the fact that there are those who are opposed to a sales tax. The committee, Mr. President, was not unanimous. This is to be expected, for I am sure we know of no tax of any kind that does not meet with opposition.

In addition to the 27 States having sales tax laws, we found that 134 cities and 3 counties also use the sales tax as revenue measures; and in most instances, city and county sales taxes are in addition to State taxes.

It has been demonstrated very conclusively for a great many years that a sales tax with a compensating use tax has ability to produce a revenue in stable and dependable volume under changing economic conditions, and is more reliable under changing economic conditions than any other type of taxation. The sales tax does produce substantial revenue, but does so because of its broad base, with everybody participating, and it therefore is not a severe tax on any individual or any group. This does not mean that the payment of a sales tax does not vary among individuals, for it most certainly does—some paying 5, 10, yes, even 100 times the amount paid by others; but those who do pay a substantial amount in sales tax are the people who can well afford it.

This fact is so obvious and so easily understood that any further discussion or explanation is entirely unnecessary.

Therefore, I think, Mr. President, it is entirely erroneous to conclude that general sales taxes bear more heavily on the low-bracket incomes. Dr. Pond, in his studies, states:

> We have been unable to find any positive figures to support that statement—it is apparently one of those assertions that once made gathers veneration from the fact that no one has taken the trouble either to prove or to disprove it. The preponderance of all evidence seems to point to the conclusion that assuming the low-bracket incomes are to bear their proportionate share of taxes, the general sales tax probably imposes as little burden on that class as any other form of taxation known.

Dr. Pond was referring to a general sales tax which included a tax on both foods and medicines.

Prof. Fred R. Fairchild, of Yale University, dwells at length on the same thought, and writes:

> I am disposed to challenge the common assumption that the sales tax bears no relation to taxpaying ability.

A report of the North Carolina Department of Tax Research, in 1944, after a decade of experience with sales tax, states:

> Where a sales tax is used in connection with a progressive income tax with reasonable exemptions, the argument with respect to the regressive character of the sales tax loses its force.

So, with all sales under 14 cents and all food consumed in the home and medicines also exempt, as is the case under House bill 3704, and with no sales tax being paid on rent, transportation, medical supplies, amusements, and so forth, and since these items make up approximately 70 percent of the expenditures of the low-income group, I think, Mr. President, you will agree with me that the committee has been diligent in its efforts to relieve the low-income group of a tax burden under this bill.

With reference to fairness of taxation, it most certainly should further be called to the attention of the Senate that under this bill persons in the low-income brackets will not pay the District income tax which will be paid by those with incomes of $4,000 and over. With reference to equalizing taxes as between the lower- and higher-income groups of our people, I think the Federal Government is doing a rather thorough, in fact a bang up job along that particular line.

So as we present this bill to the Senate, and recommend its passage, it will be noted that no real necessities of life are to be subject to the tax, excepting fuel, clothing, household equipment, and supplies. Considering the situation of persons in the low-income group, in the $2,000 bracket, these items would cost approximately $50 for coal, $250 for clothing, and $150 for household equipment and supplies; and on these amounts the sales tax would be $9. I am sure this amount cannot be classed as unduly oppressive. The cost of textbooks alone, which are provided free of charge for school children in the District of Columbia, could easily exceed the amount of such a tax.

Suggestion was made that the property tax be increased a sufficient amount to obviate the necessity of levying a sales tax; but since the Rent Control Act in the District provides for passing on to a renter any increase in taxes, the additional amounts in rent which would have to be charged the low-income group would have been in greater amount than the sales tax.

From personal experience in administering a sales tax law for a period of 14 years, I am definitely of the opinion, and evidently the majority of our States share the same opinion, that the sales tax is the most fair tax ever devised. It is a tax easier to collect than any other tax; it is a tax that cannot be evaded; and the cost of collection is exceptionally low. Experiences in the States with the cost of collection range from 3 percent for the first year to approximately 1½ percent of total collections for subsequent years. For the reason that the District is a compact unit comprising only 10 square miles, many expenses connected with administering sales-tax laws in the various States can be and will be obviated. Traveling of auditors, checkers, investigators, and members of the Board administering the tax, which is one of the major cost items in administering a sales-tax law, will not be an expense to the District, for there will, of course, be no per diem or traveling expenses.

The junior Senator from Wyoming regrets to have taken so much of the time of the Senate on this particular matter, but this portion of the bill, the sales tax, is, I think, the only controversial issue in the bill, and its importance demanded a rather full dissertation on it.

TITLE II—COMPENSATING USE TAX

Title II of the bill would impose a compensating use tax. Such a tax is necessary for the administration and enforcement of the sales tax and is, as a general rule, imposed wherever a sales tax is levied. The use tax is imposed upon the use of property in instances where the receipts from the sale of the property, had it been purchased in the District, would have been subject to the sales tax.

The purpose of title II of the bill is to prevent avoidance of the sales tax by the simple expedient on the part of the purchaser of the property making his purchase in a jurisdiction which does not impose a sales tax. The provisions of title II under section 16 provide for no use tax in the case of—

(A) Sales upon which taxes are imposed under title I; (B) sales exempt from the taxes imposed under title I; and (C) sales upon which the purchaser has paid a retail sales tax or made reimbursement thereof to a vendor or retailer.

Estimated revenue from titles I and II for the 11 months it will be in force and effect during 1950 will be approximately $10,880,000. Let me say very frankly to the Senate that this estimate is by those best qualified to make the estimate; but, let me repeat, it is merely an estimate.

TITLE III

Title III provides for imposing an excise tax on the issuance by the District under specified circumstances of certificates of title to motor vehicles and imposing a tax equivalent to 2 percent of the retail price.

This tax would not apply to any vehicle purchased in the District for use in any other State, which is not registered, and which does not require a certificate of title in the District. It is anticipated that for the 11 months of 1950 this tax will produce $1,375,000.

TITLE IV

Title IV provides certain amendments and additions to the District of Columbia Income and Franchise Act as approved July 16, 1947. The act now provides for an income tax at the rate of 1½ percent on the first $5,000, 2 percent on the next $5,000, 2½ percent on the third $5,000, and 3 percent on the taxable income in excess of $15,000. A provision under the present law allows a credit to residents of the District as a charge against the District tax, State income taxes paid in their home States. Under the 1947 act, exemptions from taxation were allowed for only the first $1,000 of income. Thus, in this bill the income tax does not apply to those of the lower-income bracket.

While this provision will greatly decrease the number of tax returns, the coverage will be extended considerably by a commendable action of the House in redefining the meaning of the word "resident," which now reads:

Every individual domiciled within the District on the last day of the taxable year and every other individual who maintains a place of abode within the District for more than 7 months of the taxable year, whether domiciled in the District or not.

Exempt from the provisions of this bill are also employees on the staffs of elected officers of the legislative branch of the Federal Government, if such employee is a bona fide resident of the State of residence of such elected officer. This wording was designed to exempt those employees in the offices of Members of Congress who are in Washington solely by virtue of employment in our respective offices.

Certain other minor amendments for corrections and changes are deemed necessary by District officials after the experience of nearly a year in administration of the act. These changes I refer to are found on pages 12, 13, 14, and 15 of the report, but I do not deem them of sufficient importance to take the time of the Senate for a detailed explanation of each of the various sections and provisions. They are more or less inconsequential.

The estimated revenue from title IV of the bill is $1,600,000.

TITLE V

This portion of the bill increases by 50 percent the fees charged on all liquor licenses issued by the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board. It will increase the gallonage taxes on spiritous liquors and wines by 50 percent and will increase the tax on each barrel of beer 100 percent.

In our deliberations there were those who felt that no increase should be imposed on the liquor traffic. There were others who thought even a greater increase should prevail. If it were possible, Mr. President, the junior Senator from Wyoming would favor imposing a tax that would eliminate this menace entirely. However, a national experience in the 1920's proved it impossible to do so. We all know that when and if the tax on the liquor trade reaches the point where bootlegging will be profitable, we would again be faced with that situation. District officials report to me that some bootlegging under present taxes is now taking place in the District.

Another reason for not writing a greater increase into this title is that unfortunately most of the people of the District of Columbia in the lower income groups would be adversely affected, especially in the case of beer, which is sometimes referred to as the poor man's drink, it would seem that a hardship would be imposed on that group. It was also contended that any greater increase in these taxes would drive District sales into the State of Virginia. So the tax the bill imposes, together with the tremendous Federal tax of $9 per gallon on 100-proof spirituous liquor, seemed to be all the traffic could bear.

I should point out that the 2-percent sales tax will also apply to this title.

Anticipated revenue from this title for the remaining 11 months of 1950 would be in the amount of $4,782,000. I may add that this would, on a full-year basis, mean an increase in taxes from this source of $1,682,000.

TITLE VI

A cigarette tax of 1 cent per package is an entirely new tax for the District. It, therefore, is the only District tax on cigarettes.

In most of the States of the Union the tax is from 2 to 3 cents, and in a few States I understand the tax is 4 cents. The committee arrived at the conclusion, however, that since cigarette smoking is more or less a universal habit, anything in excess of a 1-cent tax would be a burden on the low-income group of the people of the District. For the 11 months of 1950 this tax will produce $733,000. This tax, too, is another tax easy and inexpensive of collection.

TITLE VII

Title VII increases the rate of taxation on real property in the District from 2 percent to 2.15 percent per $100 valuation. I again refer to the very excellent study and report by Dr. Pond in his studies of the tax structure of the District. He stated:

For some time property has borne more than its relative share of the total tax burden in the District.

That statement was made in 1939, when the rate of tax was $1.75 per $100 of assessed valuation. Since that time there has been a 20-percent across-the-board general increase in valuation. The tax rate has been increased from $1.75 to $2 per $100 of assessed value. The bill we are presenting today provides for an additional increase of 15 cents.

Every person within the District either owns or rents real property. If a person owns or is buying his home, he would, of course, have to pay directly any increase in property taxes thereon. If he rents his home, he would have to bear the increase in property taxes, because it is elementary in economic principle and practice that no real estate investor would rent property to tenants without fixing the rental price in such an amount as to absorb the expenses, including taxes. The Rent Control Act for the District of Columbia passed by this body approximately 10 days ago specifically provides for a rent increase when taxes are increased.

Representation was made to the committee that property taxes should be increased in an amount that would obviate the necessity of a sales tax. On examining into the matter of the comparative extent of the burden by the payment of sales taxes under this bill and the payment of the increased property taxes necessary to raise a corresponding amount of revenue we find, based on statistics of the Bureau of Labor, that a person in the District with an average salary of $4,000 a year would own a home assessed on an average of $6,300. To obviate the passage of the sales tax by increased property taxes, it would require an increase of 85 cents per $100 in property taxes on this particular home and would result in his total property tax bill for the year being increased by $53.55 over and above that now being paid under the prevailing rate, while under the proposed sales tax included in this act such an individual for the year would pay approximately $19.42.

In the act approved July 26, 1947, as previously stated, the rate of taxation on real property in the District of Columbia was increased from $1.75 to $2.00 on each $100 of assessed value, which was an increase of slightly more than 14 percent. This was followed with an average across-the-board increase of 20 percent in assessed valuation of land and improvements in the District in recent years, with the result of an increase in the average tax bill to property owners in the District in 1948 of more than 30 percent. Now we propose an additional 15 cents per $100 of assessed value, which will make the average tax bill to the property owner in the District approximately 40 percent greater for the fiscal year 1950 than it was for the year 1946.

So, after very careful consideration, the committee believes the increase provided by this bill on the taxation of real property is all that should be required to be borne by property owners, directly, or tenants indirectly, in so short a period of time.

It may be of interest to report that at the suggestion of the joint committee, the District assessor investigated actual taxes assessed against identical property in the District, in Montgomery County, Md., and in Arlington County, Va., and we found the taxes on identical properties to be—Arlington, $188.35; Montgomery $175.91; while in the District the tax was $194.28. Further examinations were made with reference to several properties in Prince Georges County with identical houses in the District of Columbia, and we found the tax paid in Prince Georges County to be $147.14 and in the District $164.82.

With reference to valuations we found properties in the District valued higher than comparable properties in other like cities; and in the last few years 16 business properties in the down-town area sold for a total of $8,885,000, whereas the total assessment of these properties was $11,135,000.

Property in the District now pays 53.87 percent of all District taxes. It will be noted in the report, on page 23, that this is the highest of any city when computed on a straight population basis. Therefore, studies disclose that the percentage of property tax collections in the District to total tax collections is the highest of any city excepting Boston, Mass.

For the fiscal year of 1950 it is estimated the tax from real estate will total $34,900,000, which is an increase of $2,400,000 over the present yield.

For the information of the Senate, and, especially, those Members who are familiar with governmental expenditures in cities comparable in size to the city of Washington, I should like to state that the reason for a greater over-all cost in the District is that the District exercises all the functions of government peculiar to State, county, city, township, and school districts. In other words, in the District all the functions peculiar to all the other subdivisions of government are combined in the functions of the District.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I wish to reiterate that this proposed Revenue Act for the District, H. R. 3704, has in substance heretofore on many occasions, and at this time, been endorsed and approved by various bodies, including the special congressional investigating committee in 1939. It is the type of taxation recommended by tax authorities of our leading universities. It has the recommendation and support of approximately a dozen citizens' associations, businessmen's associations, home-builders' associations, and federations of women's clubs.

Between the dates of January 24 and 28, the Evening Star of Washington, in a series of articles under the caption "On making both ends meet," being a series of articles discussing facts concerning Washington's budget and tax problems, approved in substance this bill, and the last article of that series was written under the caption, "A sales tax is necessary." Other jurisdictions have been forced to adopt such a tax and found it productive. The District has no reasonable substitute.

While I have not paid particular attention to editorial comment on the proposed sales tax, Mr. President, I think the editorial poll of some other leading newspapers in the District is in harmony with that of the Star.

It is the majority opinion of the committee, Mr. President, that with the passage of this bill the District of Columbia's financial troubles will be solved, and there may be a slight surplus, an amount in the neighborhood of from $30,000 to $50,000. However, it is the universal experience that the sales tax produces in excess of the amounts estimated. So the committee approves of a provision now made a part of the proposed home-rule bill, which will shortly come before the Senate, that any amount of revenue accruing to the District in excess of budgets submitted by the District be earmarked for the sole purpose of construction of new schools.

So Mr. President, here is a bill that has been passed by the House, and it is our hope that it will be approved by the Senate. If so, I feel I can assure the Senate that the ever-recurrent trials and tribulations of financing the District will be solved for many years to come.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment was on page 8, in line 7, to strike out "on a nonprofit basis"; in line 8, after the word "hospitals," to strike out "and operated on a nonprofit basis for such purposes", and to insert in line 9, "no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, beginning in line 7, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(2) Sales of any food sold for human consumption in hotels, restaurants, cafes, bars, and other establishments where the sales price of the food furnished each individual patron, including any cover, minimum, entertainment, or other charge, is $1.50 or less: Provided, however, That the gross proceeds from all such sales where the sales price to the individual patron is more than $1.50 shall be subject to the tax imposed by this title without any deductions from such gross proceeds by virtue of the provisions of this subsection: And provided further, That the provisions of this title with respect to reimbursement for the tax imposed shall be applicable to every such sale where the sales price to the individual patron is more than $1.50 without regard to the provisions of this subsection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 9, to insert "whether or not"; and, in line 22, to insert "(q) Sales of cigarettes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 18, to strike out:

SEC. 5. The provisions of this title shall become effective on the first day of the first month succeeding the sixtieth day after the approval of this act.

And insert:

SEC. 5. Subsection (a) of section 23 of said act, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 23. (a) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all of the following-named beverages manufactured by a holder of a manufacturer's license and on all of the said beverages imported or brought into the District of Columbia by a holder of a wholesaler's license, except beverages as may be sold to a dealer licensed under the laws of any State or Territory of the United States and not licensed under this act, and on all beverages imported or brought into the District of Columbia by a holder of a retailer's license, a tax at the following rates to be paid by the licensee in the manner hereinafter provided:

"(1) A tax of 15 cents on every wine gallon of wine containing more than 14 percent of alcohol by volume, except champagne or sparkling wine or any wine artificially carbonated, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such gallon; (2) a tax of 22½ cents on every wine gallon of champagne or sparkling wine or any wine artificially carbonated, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such gallon; (3) a tax of 75 cents on every wine gallon of spirits and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such gallon; (4) and a tax of $1.65 on every wine gallon of alcohol and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such gallon."

SEC. 6. Within 10 days after the effective date of this title, every holder of a retailer's license under said District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act shall file with the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board a sworn statement on a form to be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia showing the number of each kind and denomination of stamps denoting the payment of beverage taxes held or possessed by such licensee or anyone for him on the day on which this title becomes effective, or on the following day if the effective date be a Sunday, other than stamps affixed to the containers of beverages manufactured in or imported into the District of Columbia prior to the effective date of this title, and shall, within 15 days after the effective date of this title, pay to the Collector of Taxes the difference between the amount of tax represented by such stamps at the time of purchase from the Collector of Taxes and the amount of tax imposed by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act as amended by this title, represented by such stamps.

SEC. 7. Within 10 days after the effective date of this title, every holder of a manufacturer's license, class A, and every holder of a wholesaler's license under the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act shall file with the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board a sworn statement on a form to be prescribed by the Commissioners showing the amount and kind of all beverages, except (1) beer, (2) wine containing 14 percent or less of alcohol by volume other than champagne and wine artificially carbonated, and (3) beverages upon which required stamps have been affixed, held, or possessed by him in the District of Columbia at the beginning of the day this title becomes effective and shall state the number of each kind and denomination of stamps necessary for the stamping of such beverages so held or possessed. Every such licensee, within 10 days after the effective date of this title, shall also file with the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board a sworn statement on a form to be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia showing the number of each kind and denomination of stamps denoting the payment of beverage taxes held or possessed by such licensee or anyone for him at the beginning of the day on which this title becomes effective, other than stamps affixed to the containers of beverages manufactured in or imported into the District of Columbia prior to the effective date of this title. Every such licensee shall within 15 days after the effective date of this title pay to the Collector of Taxes for all stamps not necessary for the stamping of beverages shown on the sworn statement hereinbefore required to be filed with the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board the difference between the amount of tax represented by such stamps at the time of purchase from the Collector of Taxes and the amount of tax imposed by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended by this title, represented by such stamps. Should the number of any kind or denomination of stamps so held by a licensee be less than the number necessary for the stamping of the beverages shown on said sworn statement, the Collector of Taxes is authorized and directed to sell to such licensee, at the rates prescribed for such stamps prior to the effective date of this title, such stamps as may be necessary for the stamping of such beverages. In the event any of the beverages shown on said sworn statement are sold to a dealer licensed under the laws of any State or Territory of the United States and not licensed under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, such sale shall, within 10 days thereafter, be reported to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board and within said 10 days such licensee shall pay to the Collector of Taxes on all stamps held by him for the stamping of such beverages the difference between the amount of tax represented by such stamps at the time of purchase from the Collector of Taxes and the amount of tax imposed by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended by this title, represented by such stamps.

SEC. 8. Subsection (a) of section 40 of said act (sec. 25–138, D. C. Code, 1940), as amended, is hereby further amended by striking out the figures and word "50 cents" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$1."

SEC. 9. The provisions of this title shall become effective on the first day of the first month succeeding the sixtieth day after the approval of this act.

TITLE VI—CIGARETTE TAX

SECTION 1. This title divided into sections and subsections may be cited as the "District of Columbia Cigarette Tax Act."

SEC. 2. Definitions: As used in and for the purposes of this title, unless the context indicates otherwise:

(a) The word "cigarette" shall mean any roll of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, wrapped in paper or in any substance other that tobacco.

(b) The word "person" shall mean any individual, partnership, corporation, association, receiver, executor, administrator, trustee, conservator, or other representative appointed by order of any court.

(c) The word "District" shall mean the District of Columbia.

(d) The word "Commissioners" shall mean the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

(e) The words "designated District agency" shall mean any officer, employee, department, office, or agency in or under the municipal government of the District of Columbia who or which is designated by the Commissioners to perform a function or duty under the terms and provisions of this act.

(f) The word "sell" or "sale" shall include offering for sale, keeping for sale, bartering, trafficking in, peddling, and any transfer or exchange in any manner or by any means for a consideration.

(g) The term "original package" shall mean the individual package, parcel, or other container in which cigarettes are put up by the manufacturer to which is affixed the required United States Government Internal Revenue stamp, and the Commissioners may, by regulation, include within this definition any wrapper immediately enclosing such package, parcel, or other container.

(h) The word "stamp" shall include impressions made by metering machines authorized to be used under the provisions of this title.

SEC. 3. Imposition of tax: (a) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all cigarettes sold in the District by licensed wholesalers, licensed retailers, or by licensed vending-machine operators, to consumers, a tax at the rate of 1 cent on each 20 cigarettes or fractional part thereof, such tax to be levied, collected, and paid once only on cigarettes sold as aforesaid.

(b) Said tax shall be collected by and paid to the Collector of Taxes of the District and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District.

(c) Said tax shall be collected and paid by the affixture of a stamp or stamps secured from the Collector of Taxes, denoting the payment of the amount of the tax imposed by this title upon such cigarettes, each such affixture to be on the original package, unless the Commissioners shall by regulation permit otherwise. Cancellation of such stamps shall be in the manner prescribed by regulation approved by the Commissioners.

(d) The Collector of Taxes shall furnish suitable stamps, to be prescribed by the Commissioners, denoting the payment of the tax imposed by this title and shall by the sale of such stamps at the amounts indicated on the faces thereof cause the said taxes to be collected.

(e) If at the time of acquisition of original packages by licensed retailers or by licensed vending-machine operators such original packages do not have affixed thereto the stamp or stamps denoting payment of the tax imposed by this title it shall be the duty of each such retailer and vending-machine operator to affix to each such original package such stamp or stamps before selling or delivering cigarettes to consumers and before removing or permitting the removal of cigarettes from the licensed premises or licensed vending machines of such retailers or operators for delivery to consumers.

(f) No person shall use or cause to be used for the payment of the tax imposed by this title a stamp already theretofore used for the payment of any such tax.

(g) Any person who shall counterfeit or forge any stamp required or authorized by this title shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or to imprisonment of not more than 2 years, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

(h) The Commissioners are authorized by regulation to permit licenses to pay the tax imposed by this title by the method of imprinting impressions upon original packages by the use of metering devices in lieu of the method of paying such tax by the affixture of stamps: Provided, That the Collector of Taxes shall control the use of such metering devices. In addition to their usual meanings the terms "affix stamp," "affixture of stamp or stamps," and like terms shall mean and include the imprinting of impressions denoting payment of the tax imposed by this title as authorized by this section.

(i) Stamps may be purchased only by licensed wholesalers, by licensed retailers, and by licensed vending-machine operators. Discount from face value of such stamps at a rate not to exceed 10 percent may be allowed under such terms and conditions as the Commissioners may by regulation prescribe.

SEC. 4. No person shall within the District of Columbia, manufacture for sale, keep for sale, sell, or offer to sell cigarettes, or display cigarettes for sale in vending machines, without having first obtained a license or licenses under this title for such purpose or purposes.

SEC. 5. The designated District agency is authorized to issue licenses to individuals, partnerships, or corporations, but not to unincorporated associations, on application duly made therefor for the manufacture or sale of cigarettes within the District of Columbia. The designated District agency shall keep a full and complete record of all applications for licenses and of action taken thereon.

SEC. 6. Licenses shall be of three kinds, namely:

A. Retailer's license: Such a license shall authorize the holder thereof to keep for sale and to sell cigarettes to consumers, from the place therein designated and to deliver such cigarettes to consumers in original packages: Provided, That cigarettes may be sold in number less than the number contained in the original package if such sales be permitted by regulations approved by the Commissioners. A separate license shall be required for each such place or establishment. Such a license shall not authorize the licensee to sell to other licensees for resale.

The annual fee for such license shall be fixed by the Commissioners at a rate not to exceed $5 for each retail establishment.

B. Vending machine operator's license: Such a license shall authorize the holder thereof to sell or offer to sell cigarettes from or by means of vending machines located in the place or places described therein. The Commissioners may by regulation require that a separate license be obtained for each machine or may permit a blanket license for one or more machines and may also prescribe that evidence of licensing of such machines be attached to each such machine by means of markers, stickers, or otherwise. The annual fee for such license shall be fixed by the Commissioners at a rate not to exceed $5 for each and every such machine.

C. Wholesaler's license: (1) Such a license shall authorize the holder thereof to manufacture or to purchase or otherwise to acquire and to sell cigarettes in original packages to any person holding a license under this title as wholesaler, retailer, or vending-machine operator, or to consumers.

(2) Such a license may at his election purchase from the Collector of Taxes and affix to original packages stamps denoting payment of the tax imposed by this title and, upon delivery to a vendee licensed under this title, of such original packages with such stamps properly affixed may add to the selling price of such cigarettes an amount equal to the face value of such stamps and collect such amount from such vendee. If a wholesaler licensed hereunder shall sell cigarettes to consumers, it shall be the duty of such wholesaler prior to the sale and delivery of such cigarettes to affix to the original packages the stamp or stamps denoting the payment of the tax imposed by this title.

(3) A license as wholesaler shall authorize the holder thereof to manufacture at and to sell cigarettes from the place or places in the District therein designated. The Commissioners are empowered in their discretion to authorize, by regulation and upon such terms and conditions as they may require, the issuance of such a license for a place outside the District. A separate license shall be required for each such place within or without the District

The annual fee for each such license shall be fixed by the Commissioners at a rate not to exceed $50.

SEC. 7. Licenses issued under authority of this title shall remain in effect for periods as may be fixed by regulation approved by the Commissioners, not exceeding 1 year from the effective date of such licenses or unless revoked prior to their expiration.

Licenses issued under this title may be suspended or revoked for any violation of this title or the regulations issued thereunder, by the Commissioners or by a designated District agency, after hearing held by a designated District agency.

SEC. 8. The taxes imposed and the licenses required by this title shall be in addition to the taxes imposed and the licenses required by any other act.

SEC. 9. This title shall be administered by designated District agencies except where specific duties are imposed upon specific officers by the terms hereof. The Commissioners are authorized to make rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 10. The Commissioners are authorized to employ personal services in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and to incur such other expenses as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and to include such amounts in their annual estimates.

SEC. 11. Whoever violates any provision of this title for which no specific penalty is provided, or any of the rules and regulations promulgated under the authority of this title, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not longer than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. Prosecutions for violations of this title shall be on information filed in the municipal court for the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants, except for such violations as are felonies, and prosecutions for such violations as are felonies shall be by the United States Attorney in and for the District of Columbia, or any of his assistants.

SEC. 12. Nothing in this title shall be construed as repealing any portion of section 7 of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 74, line 5, to strike out "15" and insert "13"; in line 8, to strike out "VI" and to insert "VII"; and in line 14 to strike out "VII" and to insert "VIII."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This completes the committee amendments.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and myself I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 4, beginning with the word "and," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "thereby," on page 74, and insert the following:

On page 1, line 4, beginning with the word "and", strike out all down to and including the word "thereby" on page 74, line 18, and insert the following:

"TITLE I

"PERMANENT APPROPRIATION

"SECTION 1. (a) There is appropriated for such fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, as the annual payment by the United States toward defraying the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia an amount equal to 25 per centum of all amounts authorized by the Congress as budgetary expenditures for the Government of the District of Columbia for each such fiscal year.

"(b) Of the amounts appropriated by subsection (a) for each fiscal year, the sum of $1,000,000 shall be credited to the water fund of the District of Columbia and the remainder shall be credited to the general fund of the District of Columbia.

"(c) Article VI of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1947 is repealed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, it will be noted that the amendment I have offered is in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill. Under the amendment the donation by the Federal Government to the expenses of the District of Columbia would cover practically the same amount the pending revenue bill would raise. I hope that in my discussion of the amendment I shall be able to convince the Senate that the Government is not at the present time doing its duty to the District of Columbia, so far as its portion of the appropriation is concerned.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a book having to do with the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia. In this report I find that section 5 gives a history of the fiscal relations between the District and the Federal Government. I think it very pertinent at this time that this chapter be read into the RECORD, and that will take some time. But if Senators will follow me closely, they will find it to be a fact that the Federal Government, from the beginning until about 1920 donated toward the expenses of the city on a 50-50 basis, that is, the United States Government gave 50 percent and the District raised by taxes the other 50 percent until 1920.

From 1921 to 1924, of the amount appropriated for the District, the Federal Government paid into the Treasury 40 percent and the District raised by taxation 60 percent. There was a statute on the books which made the Federal Government contribute 50 percent, until 1921. In 1921 the ratio was changed, and the city was to pay 60 percent and the Federal Government 40 percent. That law remained on the statute books until 1938, although the Congress failed to live up to it for several years. I wish to read into the RECORD exactly what took place in order that Senators may know what has happened in the past. I read from the book to which I have referred:

National allotments for the support of local government in the Federal District have passed through three main stages since 1790. Until 1878 there was no fixed system. From 1878 until 1925 Federal payments were made on a fixed-percentage basis. Since 1925 there have been annual lump-sum allowances. In addition to these basic provisions, however, there have been from time to time variations in the provisions for charging particular items of expenditure and for crediting particular local revenues between the governments. Also there have been various congressional acts retroactively changing the charge or credit of specified items. Consequently it is difficult to obtain precise statistics reflecting the Federal share in District costs. Such figures as have been made available for this survey are summarized in table 5A. Details appear in later tables and in charts 2 and 3.

I notice the chart covering expenditures is checkered, the Government appearing to have paid more at some times than at others. I resume the reading:

Formal monetary allowances and credits do not, however, cover the whole field of fiscal interrelationships of the Federal and District Governments. Various Federal departments perform services or make property holdings available directly for the inhabitants of the District, and others have contractual or informal service relationships which are not reflected in appropriation accounts. On the other hand, certain services are rendered by the District Government for the special benefit of the National Government rather than for the District constituency. Such intergovernmental services are discussed in section 8 of this report, and so far as adjustments can be made for them, this is done in section 12. Figures presented in the present section reflect only the formal monetary relationships.

The role of the Federal Government in local finance in the District has been the subject of frequent investigation and debate since 1800.

Extensive congressional debates and reports accompanied the changes made from time to time in the system of Federal grants. The results of each inquiry and the views expressed in Congress are summarized in appendix A, which includes the legislative background for adoption of the fixed percentage basis in 1878, the change in the percentage in 1920, and substitution of the lump-sum system in 1924. The conclusions drawn from this review are included at the end of this section.

The circumstances giving occasion for special official inquiry have varied, and the form of inquiry also has varied. In 1834–36 and in 1874 the objective was to save the District from the consequences of defaults upon its public debt; also in 1874 and again in 1876 the objective was to draft a permanent form of local government. More recently the investigations have been instituted usually for the purpose of seeking a formula to settle the Federal-District fiscal relationships, either upon some special point or generally. Sometimes the inquiry has been made by a special joint committee—as was the case with the Allison and Morrill reports of 1874, the Hunton report of 1875, the Chilton report of 1916, and the Phipps report of 1923. In two cases it was made by a select committee of the House—the Johnson report of 1892 and the Mapes report of 1931. The Poland report of 1874 was from the House Committee on the Judiciary. The Southard report of 1835 and Tyler report of 1836 were from the Senate Committee on the District, and the Stoddert report of 1834, the school lots report by Mr. Brown in 1856, the Starkweather report of 1872, Babcock report of 1896, and tax reports of 1912 and 1914 were from the House Committee on the District. Some of these committees employed accountants, fiscal specialists, or other outside assistants. For the most part they conducted hearings and received briefs and based their reports upon materials thus gathered or obtained through the researches of committee members. In two recent instances the whole investigation was entrusted to an administrative agency of the Federal Government. These were in 1929 and 1930, when the Bureau of Efficiency prepared two reports, and in 1935 when the Treasury Department made a study of comparative tax burdens. The present investigation is the first official inquiry by an agency outside the Congress without permanent administrative relationships to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the reason I am bringing these facts to the attention of the Senate is that the proposed legislation would change, to a large extent, the manner in which the fiscal operations of the District of Columbia have been conducted. I fear the adoption of a sales tax for the District will block the Federal Government forever from making its proper allotment to the District.

Let us go back again to the period from 1790 to 1878. It will be found that during that period there existed no fixed system.

In the absence of a definite plan of contributions by the Federal Government, residents of the District made repeated appeals to Congress during the period 1800 to 1871 for relief from a situation which they claimed was becoming intolerable. It was argued that the District, as the capital of the Nation, was laid out and was being developed on a scale beyond the means of an average municipality, and that, therefore, the Federal Government should share with the citizens the cost of its operation and maintenance. As a matter of fact, apart from the Federal buildings themselves, there was slight physical improvement of the District before 1871. Indeed it was partly as a result of local pressure for more speedy development that the Government of the District was unified in that year.

Even during this period, despite lack of a comprehensive policy, fixed rules were occasionally formulated for Federal contributions to particular items of expenditure. For example, an act of May 15, 1820, provided for the payment by the United States on a front-foot basis for street and sidewalk improvements along any Federal property. Payment was to be made from sales of lots owned by the Government in the city.

A Senate committee recommended in 1835 that the Federal Government pay a definite proportion of the local government expense, based upon its property holdings in the District, but no action was taken in this direction.' The expenditures of the Federal Government continued to be irregular, but were more liberal. It is impossible, however, to state accurately the amount of Federal allotments to District purposes during this period, chiefly because of the difficulties of distinguishing between payments for ordinary Federal operations within the District and payments for the special benefits of the District. In 1878 the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Sherman, prepared, in response to a request from the Senate, a detailed statement exhibiting "all appropriations and expenditures from the National Treasury, for public and private purposes, in the District of Columbia, from July 16, 1790, to June 30, 1876." Aggregate net expenditures after credits for repayments and other offsets, were reported at $92,112,396, but by far the larger part of this sum was expended within the District for the routine operations of ordinary Federal departments and for provision of Federal buildings. In the Chilton committee hearings of 1915, a representative of the joint citizens' committee of the District submitted tabulations said to have been derived by a selection of items in the Sherman report. These tabulations indicated that for the entire period 1790 through 1876 there were Federal payments of $26,628,728 for municipal purposes of the District. These payments were divided by periods as follows:

1871 to 1876, inclusive	12,722,490

The tabulation by years indicated that from 1790 to 1835 there were 22 years with no Federal payments, against 24 years in which there were such payments, and that there were Federal payments in every year from 1823 through 1876. By supplementing these statistics from the Sherman report with data from financial records of the District, the citizens' committee prepared a table, reproduced as table 5B, which indicated that the Federal Government met approximately 38.7 percent of all local governmental costs from 1790 through 1878. Based on this table, the aggregate Federal payment for the period 1790–1835 was 25.7 percent; for 1836–70, 41.2 percent; and for 1871–78, 38.6 percent. As the committee explained, however, the statement was only approximate.

It will be noted from the amendment now at the desk, submitted by me, that it calls for only 25 percent, which is less than any amount stated here that the Federal Government gave in those years. Later the 50–50 basis came into effect.

THE 50–50 BASIS

The flat percentage system was established in the organic act. After providing that the District Commissioners should submit annually to Congress, through the Secretary of the Treasury, estimates of their needs for current and other expenses of the District for the succeeding fiscal year, the law of 1878 provided as follows:

"And to the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates, Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 percent thereof; and the remaining 50 percent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia."

The 50–50 system continued as the basic arrangement until the fiscal year 1921, but Federal payments for District purposes were not precisely 50 percent of the total during this period. There were occasional departures from this percentage with respect to particular items of expenditure; moreover, some miscellaneous local revenues were credited on occasion to the United States, reducing the percentage of its net payments.

At various times Congress provided that specified appropriations should be paid entirely from revenues of the District. For example, expenses of the water distribution system were paid entirely from revenues of the District Water Department, which have formed a special fund for that purpose since 1880. Major additions, beyond the resources of the water fund, however, were charged on the 50–50 basis to the United States and the District in the fiscal years 1898 to 1920, inclusive, and on the 40–60 basis from 1921 through 1924, the expenditures being treated as general-fund expenditures of the District. For the fiscal years 1880 to 1916, inclusive, the expense of maintaining the Washington aqueduct was charged half to the United States and half to the general revenues of the Water Department; for the fiscal year 1917 and thereafter it was charged wholly to the water revenues.

For some years after 1878 the miscellaneous revenues of the District, other than those derived from licenses and taxes, were deposited in the Federal Treasury entirely to the credit of the District. Beginning with the appropriation act of 1889, Congress provided at various times that specific sources of revenue be credited half to the United States and half to the District Government. Some of the receipts of earlier years were subsequently recredited to the United States out of District revenues. The receipts thus reassigned were principally for fines collected in criminal cases in the supreme court of the District and fines collected in the police court. Appropriation acts from 1913 to 1919 provided for reimbursing the United States in amounts totaling $2,444,148.16, each item representing revenues improperly credited to the District or expenditures which, in the opinion of Congress, had been improperly charged to the United States. Another adjustment made about this time by the Comptroller of the Treasury without legislation was a charge against the District of $52,973.64 in settlement of payments made by the Department of the Interior for the education of indigent blind children of the District of Columbia.

Because of the retroactive application of these adjustments and their complicated character, it is not feasible to indicate their net effect upon the Federal share in District municipal expenditures. The recrediting of receipts was based in general on two different kinds of claims: (1) That the revenues (such as District supreme court fines) were essentially Federal, not local, revenues, or (2) that the Federal Government should be credited with half the revenues of activities (such as health department fees) for which it provided half the funds. The recharging of expenditures was based in general on the contention that the Federal Government had advanced money for the District or that the District had simply been undercharged.

Without adjustments of this sort, the year-by-year amounts and percentages of the Federal share in District expenditures from 1878 through 1920 are set forth in table 5C and charts 2 and 3. As indicated in the table, the records of the District auditor show that the Federal Government received credits for local miscellaneous revenues only in 1903 and later years, although there probably were such credits earlier. These are current credits for local collections, and do not include recredits of past receipts, nor do they reflect recharged expenditures.

The gross Federal payments during the 42 fiscal years of the 50–50 basis represent, on an average, 46.8 percent of District government payments for all purposes, including the water fund, and 49.2 percent of payments from the District general fund. It may be assumed, however, that the local revenues would have been available entirely to the District government had there been no Federal participation in expenses. If, therefore, the Federal share of local revenues, as currently credited, is offset against the gross Federal payments, the net contribution during 1879–1920 is found to represent on an average 46.1 percent of all District payments, including payments from the water fund, and 48.4 percent of payments from the District general fund. The net Federal payment varied from 54.6 percent of all District payments in 1879 to 42.2 percent in 1902.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to yield to me to permit me to request unanimous consent that I may suggest the absence of a quorum without having the Senator from South Carolina lose the floor. He is speaking on a very important subject, and I feel that a quorum should be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina may yield for the purpose of the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, without losing his right to the floor.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEELY. Then, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hunt	Maybank

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I was explaining that the Federal Government's allotment to the District of Columbia is not sufficient, and to support my argument I was reading from a report of an independent study of fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia, prepared at the direction of the President pursuant to Public Act 762, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, approved June 23, 1936. In this report there is information concerning what the allotments of the Federal Government have been from year to year. So I shall continue to read from the report, taking up where I left off. To bring it clearly to the attention of the Senate, the Federal Government's allotment is now approximately 11 percent. I call that fact to the attention of the Senate, to show how much the Federal Government's allotment is out of line with that of the past.

I now read from the report:

THE 50–50 BASIS

The equal division of responsibility for local governmental costs was abandoned in the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921. This act provided that, apart from certain items charged entirely to the District, there should be paid by the United States 40 percent of the expenses of the District, the remaining 60 percent to be paid from District revenues. In order to provide sufficient local revenue, the District Commissioners were authorized to increase their tax rate. The provision of the organic act, calling for equal contributions, was not repealed; the departure was enacted for the year 1921 only. Miscellaneous revenues of the District continued to be credited equally to the United States and the District, excepting revenues from the sale of surplus products of the home for the aged and the infirm and of the workhouse and reformatory, which were divided in the same proportions as appropriations.

Looking at table 5C, which I should like to have inserted in toto, and from which I shall read some of the totals, I notice that the total appropriations from 1879 to 1920, in the general fund, amounted, for the District of Columbia, to $349,841,000, of which the contribution by the United States was $171,096,000, which amounted to 48.4 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table referred to by the Senator from South Carolina will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

TABLE 5C.—Expenditures of the District of Columbia by funds and contributions by the United States—fiscal years 1879–1936

[1] General fund expenditures as shown here include payments from District revenues into the policemen and firemen's relief fund and a payment of $1,000,000 in 1936, which were shown separately by the auditor. They include also gross contributions by the United States. Expenditures from trust funds held by the District government are not included in this table.

[2] The deductions for receipts covered to the credit of the United States represent proportionate amounts of miscellaneous local revenues, as explained in the text of this section. Federal sharing in these local revenues was discontinued in 1924; amounts shown after that year are on account of revenues accrued in earlier years. Miscellaneous revenues released by the United States to the District of Columbia have been reported by the District auditor as follows (in dollars): 1925, $664,319; 1926, $786,358; 1927, $758,738; 1928, $865,340; 1929, $935,280; 1930, $968,761; 1931, $771,763; 1932, $885,301; 1933, $883,107; 1934, $663,190; 1935, $803,577; 1936, $700,000 (estimate) (74th Cong., 2d sess., hearings before the subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations, District of Columbia appropriation bill for 1937, p. 49).

[1] The Federal lump-sum for 1935 was reported by the auditor as $4,539,295. It is included in this table at $5,700,000. The difference of $1,160,705 represents repayment of a PWA advance for sewer and park improvements, this amount having been deducted before the Federal lump sum was made available for other District expenditure.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. From 1921 to 1922, the general fund for the District was $92,026,000. I noticed that the contribution by the United States Government was, gross, $36,446,000, or 37.27 percent. Then the lump sum started. The first year, 1925, it started fairly well in line, but I want to show how it got out of line. In 1925 the expenditures for the District were $29,000,000. The lump-sum contribution by the United States Government was $9,000,000.

In 1926 the general fund for the District was $30,246,000. The Federal Government's contribution still remained at $9,000,000.

In 1927, with costs still rising, and with the expenditures for the District, from the general fund, amounting to $33,524,000, the District received as its contribution from the Federal Government a lump sum of $9,000,000.

In 1928, it will be found that expenses were still rising, amounting to $34,716,000, and that the Federal Government's contribution was still the same, $9,000,000.

In 1929, with expenses of the District still rising, amounting to $35,478,000, the Federal Government's contribution was the same, $9,000,000.

In 1930, expenses were still rising in the District. The expenditures were $40,649,000. The Federal Government's contribution was still the same, $9,000,000.

In 1931 expenses, still rising, were $42,994,000. The Federal Government increased its contribution just a little, to $9,500,000.

Then, with expenses still going up, in 1932 the appropriation was $43,562,000 for expenditures by the District. The Government contribution was still the same as the year before, $9,500,000.

Then in 1933 everything was cut. Not only the Federal Government's amount was cut, but the expenditures of the District were cut to $37,346,000, a reduction of almost $6,000,000. The Federal Government cut its contribution to $7,775,000.

Again in 1934 the expenditures for the District were cut to $31,824,000, and the Federal Government allotment was cut to $5,700,000.

In 1935 a little more was spent than the year before, $35,288,000. But the Federal Government did not increase the amount it paid. The Federal Government's contribution was $5,700,000.

In 1936, the last year this report covers, the District's expenditures were $38,395,000. The Federal Government did not increase its contribution one cent; it kept it at $5,700,000.

Instead of $38,000,000, the general fund will now be, in round numbers, in the neighborhood of $100,000,000, a jump from $38,000,000 in 1936 to $100,000,000 at the present time.

It will be found that although in 1925 the Federal Government contributed $9,000,000 when the District was spending $29,000,000, today it contributes only $11,000,000, when the expenses of the District are $100,000,000. Are we doing our share?

Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the fact that approximately half the land area in the District belongs to the Federal Government. All of those who come here from other countries to represent their governments are tax-free. A drive out Massachusetts Avenue will make plain what I am talking about.

Moreover, there are approximately 200,000 Government workers in the District, and a very small proportion of them pay any taxes to the District. All of them, if they have children, send their sons and daughters to the schools of the District of Columbia. They have fire protection and police protection, and I think it is time for Congress to wake up and pay to the District the Government's pro rata share.

This report was made in 1936, through authorization of an act of Congress, and it shows what we should be doing. Let me read further:

The appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922 again adopted the 40–60 basis of division and provided that during that year and thereafter all fees, fines, and other miscellaneous items of revenue required by law to be credited to the United States and the District should be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the United States and the District in the same proportions as appropriations were paid by these governments. Similar provision was made for collections on account of special assessments.

The appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923 adopted the 40–60 basis as a permanent policy repealing the 50–50 provision of 1878 by implication but not expressly. The act further provided that in the case of revenues arising from property situated on land owned by the United States and improved at the joint expense of the national and District governments the United States should be first credited with a sum equal to 3 percent on the value of the land and the remainder of the revenues credited in the proportion that each government contributed to the improvement.

The 3 percent ground rents appear never to have been paid. In any case the requirement was terminated, according to a ruling of the Comptroller General, with the change from the fixed percentage to the lump-sum system of Federal allotment.

Despite the policy announced in the appriation act of 1923, the fixed-percentage system was last used for the fiscal year 1924. In 1925 Congress turned to the lump-sum method, though without specifically repealing the 40–60 provision of the appropriation act of 1923.

The yearly and aggregate share of the United States and District expenditures during the period of the 40–60 basis are set forth in table 5C.

I have already asked to have that table printed in the RECORD in full.

The total gross payments for the 4 years represented 37.8 percent of all District Government expenditures and 39.6 percent of general fund expenditures. The net payments after deducting local revenues credited to the United States equaled 35.6 percent of all District expenditures and 37.3 percent of general fund expenditures.

In the amendment which I have offered I am asking for only 25 percent. If any Senator will read this report and not come to the conclusion that 25 percent is certainly a low figure to set, then this report should not have been made, nor should the investigation have been called for.

The next heading is "Period 1925 to present."

That is when the lump-sum arrangement went into effect.

Under the lump-sum system Congress has provided in the annual appropriation act for the District that all the expenditures be charged against District revenues but has supplemented these revenues in each year with a fixed amount from the Federal Treasury. Certain local revenues previously credited in part to the United States have been credited entirely to the District government since the lump-sum method was inaugurated, excepting only that the United States has continued to receive its proportionate share of special assessments and other revenues arising as a result of expenditures from appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 and earlier years. These revenues on account of earlier years still accrue in small amounts annually, as shown in table 5C, where they are treated as deductions from the lump sums in determining net Federal payments to the District. In a footnote to the table are indicated the amounts of miscellaneous revenue which the Federal Government would have received if the earlier provisions of law had been continued. These amounts ranged from $663,000 to $969,000 a year.

I should like to say that the chairman of the District Committee has introduced a bill to give to the District a far larger amount than is called for in my amendment.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator from South Carolina agree with me that it would be much more prudent to pass the bill which the distinguished chairman of the committee has introduced than it would be to levy a consumer's sales tax on the inhabitants of the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I agree with the Senator from West Virginia 100 percent. Then what we ought to do is to authorize an investigation to be made, and determine what the allotment from the Federal Government should be. There is not a Member on this floor who, unless he has given more time to a study of the subject than I think Senators can give to it, can actually pass upon what is the proper amount the Federal Government should contribute to the District. I defy anyone to say that he knows today the exact amount the Federal Government should pay. The only thing we could go by would be a thoroughgoing investigation. We can also be guided by what has been done in years gone by. Senators will find that until the depression years the Federal Government was giving far more to the District Government than is provided by the amendment I have offered.

The first lump-sum allotment, for the fiscal year 1925, was $9,000,000—

Which was 34.53 percent.

The same amount was designated for each of the following fiscal years through 1930. In 1931 and 1932 the annual allotment was increased to $9,500,000.

Think of that, Mr. President. In 1931 and 1932 the Federal payment for each year was $9,500,000, and the payment for the present year is only $11,000,000. The Government pays only $11,000,000 now, whereas the District of Columbia expenditures are around $100,000,000 a year, while in round figures the District of Columbia government expenditures in 1931 and 1932 were around $30,000,000 or $31,000,000. Someone somewhere has done some incorrect figuring.

A depression year—

In 1933 it was reduced to $7,775,000; and in 1934 it was further reduced to $5,700,000. For each of the fiscal years 1935 and 1936 Congress again appropriated $5,700,000. The lump-sum was reduced further to $5,000,000 for the fiscal year 1937 with provision for an independent survey to establish guides for future action.

SUMMARY OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS

A definitive statement of the net amount paid from general revenues of the United States for local District governmental operations since 1790 cannot be achieved. Such a statement should take account of the variety of intergovernmental service relationships existing over the years. Some services rendered to the District are not covered in the District appropriations but in regular Federal departmental appropriations. Some services of special interest to the National Government are rendered by the District government. Adjustments for recent years, developed and applied in sections 8 and 12 of this report, indicate that such intergovernmental services do not necessarily cancel out. A definitive statement should allow also for various provisions of law retroactively revising the credits for certain revenues or the charges for certain expenditures. Neither type of adjustment is made in the data presented in the foregoing pages.

Waiving these adjustments, the record shows a steady growth in the amount of Federal payments for local purposes until 1925 but a generally declining tendency in the percentages. Under the flat percentage system, the Federal share grew in amount as District expenditures grew, although dropping off somewhat in 1921 with the shift from the 50-50 to the 40-60 basis. After the change to the lump-sum system, the amount of the Federal allotment was constant for a few years, rose in one year, and then declined. Under the lump-sum system there has been a continuing decline in the relative importance of the Federal payment as a source of support for the District government. In general, the Federal percentage share over an extended period was about the same under the irregular system of 1790–1878, and the 40–60 system. It was highest under the 50–50 system and has been lowest—averaging 23 percent of general-fund expenditures in the aggregate—under the lump-sum system.

Even under that lump-sum system since 1925 it has added 23 percent, but as it has gradually, from a percentage standpoint, been lower and lower.

CONCLUSIONS OF PREVIOUS INVESTIGATIONS

The review of previous official reports, in appendix A, indicates the diversity of issues and considerations entering into the problem of fiscal relations between the Federal and District Governments. Conclusions and recommendations, likewise, have exhibited a diversity, yet certain elementary doctrines have been so frequently accepted in the official reports that they call for more than passing attention. Mere repetition of particular views does not enhance their logical or moral stature, but it does suggest what assumptions and conclusions have appeared reasonable at various times to different men. It should be recognized, of course, that most of the official investigations have been made directly by committees of Congress, comprising men elected from particular districts other than the District of Columbia and operating under special pressure to hold down the taxes upon their constituents; yet it cannot be said fairly that any of the reports reflects concern for any interest narrower than the welfare of the Nation as a whole. Consequently it seems unlikely that repetition and agreement, so far as they occur, result from any persistent bias in the investigating bodies. They seem to represent, rather, a gradual clarification of the points at issue. In the more recent reports the problem of fiscal relations has been seen as comprising a number of subordinate problems rather than a broad question to be answered on a wholesale scale.

The Southard committee in 1835 took the position that Federal property should not be taxed, although benefits common to the Federal Government and the District should be met by mutual burdens. The Starkweather report (1872) held that the amount of Federal allotments should be related to the value of United States property in the District, and the Hunton (1876) and Babcock (1896) reports justified the fixed percentage system by reference to the relative values of exempt and taxable properties, but the reports of the Bureau of Efficiency in 1929 and 1930 were the first to suggest that the Federal Government should pay taxes to the District on the basis of the value of its properties and the local tax rate. With this exception there seems to run through the reports an unvarying assumption that the United States could not be taxed and should not be taxed by any regular taxing method. On the floor of the House, on the other hand, it has sometimes been proposed that Federal properties be, in effect, taxed for District purposes. In 1871 such a proposition passed the House but was rejected by the Senate.

Although opposed to a taxing method, the Southard committee held that the United States has a special obligation to improve the District in accordance with its special status as Capital. This view had been expressed by the Stoddert committee; it was echoed in the Poland and Chilton reports and indirectly in the reports of the Bureau of Efficiency. The Southard, Poland, and Chilton reports were referring, however, to direct Federal expenditures for improvements enhancing the beauty or grandeur of the Capital, whereas the Bureau of Efficiency was referring to burdens imposed upon the local government of the District by the presence of a greater amount of nontaxable property and the need for more parks than in any ordinary city.

That is something we should think about. The parks in the District are lovely to look at. They belong not only to the city of Washington but to the Nation. We take the land out of the heart of the city. Some of the parks are maintained by the District, a great expense. Many factors enter into the question of what is the proper amount to pay on the expenditures of the District. Only a committee investigating this subject for days, weeks, and months could come to a proper conclusion.

In no report was there explicit or even implied denial of the doctrine that the Federal Government should bear the expense of improvements designed particularly to advance the District in its relations as the seat of the National Government.

Frequently, however, it was argued in the congressional debates and suggested in some reports that any obligation on the part of the United States is, in effect, ended with provision for expenditures of predominantly national interest. In the reports, this was usually corollary to the doctrine that residents and property owners of the District could reasonably be expected to pay taxes for local purposes at least equivalent to the taxes paid by residents and property owners in comparable American cities.

Along that line, I notice that the citizens of the District of Columbia are not paying as high taxes as citizens of other cities. In some cities taxes are much higher than in the District of Columbia at this time. I have a list which shows that Washington, D. C., levies per capita $35.71; Baltimore, $40.14; Boston, $74.48; Buffalo, $64.29; Cleveland, $43.78; Milwaukee, $56.34; Pittsburgh, $59.78; San Francisco, $51.33. Only St. Louis, with a figure of $35.34, levies a lower tax per capita.

Although the view was probably advanced earlier in the halls of Congress, the Morrill report of 1874 was the first report to present the doctrine that the people and property of the District may fairly be taxed for local purposes about the same as those of other like communities, and that the Federal Government may be expected to defray local expenses not covered by such taxation. In the Morrill report this doctrine was intimately related to recommendations for close Federal control of the District government. The Chilton report in 1916 reiterated this doctrine without making special reference to the extent of Federal control over the local government, but Senator Works, in his supplementary statement, again connected the principle of taxes equal to those of other like communities with the principle of direct Federal administration of the local government. The main report of the Chilton committee emphasized that the responsibility of District residents in taxation should be as fixed and certain as that of residents of other comparable American cities, and particularly that tax rates upon property should be fixed and certain.

I desire to call attention to something that is in the law which should not be there. I think all Senators will agree that it is not right to say that in the District of Columbia, if sufficient funds cannot be found, a greater tax should be levied on property. Is that right? In effect, that is the law on the statute books at the present time. I am trying to explain that if the Federal Government's allotment were what it should be—and my amendment provides that it shall be 25 percent—then the District of Columbia will not need a sales tax or any more revenue. If Senators will study the issue, they will be bound to come to the conclusion that the Federal Government should make to the District of Columbia an allotment of at least 25 percent or more.

I continue to read from the report:

This form of statement, it should be noted, disregards the fact that in most jurisdictions where general property taxes are levied the rate is variable from year to year in accordance with budget needs.

Like the Morrill and Chilton reports, the report of 1914 on the tax system of the District asserted that there is no good reason why owners of property in the District should not be taxed at substantially the same rate as like individuals would be taxed on like properties in other similar communities. All reports on fiscal relations since 1914 have adopted this view either expressly or by implication. The Phipps report expressed a belief that the United States had overpaid and was overpaying for District government, especially in view of the relatively growing private interests of residents and property owners and the low tax rate on property. The Mapes committee took the view that the United States should continue to make allotments, at least temporarily, but believed that inauguration of new tax forms and heavier taxation of property would bring the tax burdens of the District more nearly into line with those of comparable cities and would justify reduction or possibly elimination of the Federal grant.

The principal points of disagreement in recent reports have been (1) how to compare tax burdens in the District with those in other municipalities, and (2) whether the District is in fact taxed higher or lower than other comparable cities.

Rough comparisons between taxes in the District and other cities were made in Congress at least as early as 1876 and perhaps earlier but these were almost invariably in terms of unadjusted property-tax rates without regard to variations in assessment ratios from place to place. The Bureau of Efficiency in 1929 and 1930 argued that assessment ratios used for adjusting property-tax rates are ordinarily too crude and uncertain to yield reasonably accurate comparisons between different communities. Consequently, the Bureau adopted a method which would obviate the use of assessment ratios. The Bureau assumed that the true value of property per capita is about the same in all cities in the population group more or less comparable with Washington, and that any differences in per capita assessments may be explained either by differences in the assessment ratios or by variations in the price levels of property in the several cities. Its comparisons of the tax burden in Washington with the burden elsewhere were made by determining for other cities what property-tax rates they would have extended if they had had the same assessed valuation per capita as the District of Columbia actually had. The hypothetical tax rates thus determined were used for comparisons between cities. The Mapes report in 1931 and the Treasury report in 1935 rejected this method of comparison and returned to the use of adjusted tax rates determined from assessment ratios. The Mapes committee declared its opinion that if any consideration were to be given at all to per capita taxation in different cities, it should be confined to the per capita taxes levied on real property. The Treasury made comparisons of the taxes of all kinds payable in the District and in other cities by a number of hypothetical taxpayers whose economic circumstances and social status were assumed to be constant in all the taxing jurisdictions.

The action of the Bureau of Efficiency in including Federal properties in the per capita assessments for comparative purposes reflects a contention frequently made by citizens' groups of the District.

Though expressed in various forms, this contention is to the effect that the Federal properties correspond economically to taxed industrial properties in other cities and therefore the Federal allotment of funds should be treated partly or wholly as tax revenue of the District in any comparison with other cities. Earlier reports did not consider this approach, since they either stated or assumed the doctrine that Federal properties should not be subject to any regular taxing method. The Mapes committee considered this adjustment of assessment data and declared it could not agree with the underlying contentions. The Treasury report recognized that arguments for such an adjustment might be advanced, but pointed out that the treatment given must depend upon whether the Federal allotments can be claimed by the District as a matter of right or are given by the Federal Government as a matter of grace, and observed that in practice Congress has apparently adopted the second view.

The different methods of comparison have yielded, on occasion, varying conclusions. The Bureau of Efficiency did not state its conclusions, but the tables in its reports show that if the 14 cities which it used for its comparisons had had per-capita assessments of real estate and personal property at the same level as the actual per-capita assessment in Washington, they would have needed on the average higher rates than the District in order to raise the amounts which they actually levied. However, if their per-capita assessments of real estate and personal property had been as high as the per-capita assessment in Washington plus the estimated per-capita value of Federal properties which the Bureau classified as taxable, these other cities could have employed on the average lower rates than were extended in the District. The Mapes committee concluded from its study of adjusted tax rates and other data that the property-tax rate and the general burden of taxation were below the average of other comparable cities. The Treasury Department likewise concluded that Washington taxpayers bore lower property taxes and a smaller total burden of taxation than were borne, on the average, in other cities of a roughly comparable size and character.

Another point upon which the reports of previous official investigations appear to reach no accord is in the underlying question whether Federal allotments for the support of local government are to be expected by the District and its inhabitants as a matter of right, or whether they are made as a matter of equity and grace. As the Treasury report suggested, the first view leads to certain definite conclusions as to the bases upon which Federal allotments should be determined. It is this view which seems to have been adopted by the Bureau of Efficiency. The second approach leads to less definite conclusions as to the form, basis, and amount of Federal allotments. This approach appears to have been adopted in the Morrill, Chilton, Phipps, and Mapes reports, but in some of these it was tacitly assumed rather than definitely expressed.

The Babcock and Mapes reports each recommended the continuance of the system of Federal allotments that was current when the report was made. In the case of the Babcock report, this was the 50-50 system. In the case of the Mapes report, this was the lump-sum system, but the report recommended a reduction in the amount of the allotment The Chilton report declared there was no reason for any abritrary rule of proportionate contribution, and the Mapes report declared that the best basis for Federal participation is a lump-sum to cover the difference, if any, between local needs and local taxes that are not unduly burdensome.

There has been in the reports no unanimity or even a clear consensus of opinion respecting the continuing basis for the allotment and, of course, the amount to be paid by the United States.

From this report, the part that deals with allotments and contributions to be made by the Federal Government——

Mr. LANGER. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. SMITH of Maine in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question only.

Mr. LANGER. Madam President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield for the purpose of calling a quorum? I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina may yield for that purpose, without losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for that purpose, provided I do not lose the floor.

Mr. LANGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hoey	Millikin
Anderson	Holland	Morse
Baldwin	Humphrey	Murray
Brewster	Hunt	Myers
Bridges	Ives	Neely
Butler	Jenner	O'Conor
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney
Connally	Johnson, Tex.	Pepper
Cordon	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson
Donnell	Kefauver	Russell
Eastland	Kem	Schoeppel
Ellender	Kilgore	Smith, Maine
Ferguson	Knowland	Sparkman
Flanders	Langer	Stennis
Fulbright	Long	Taft
Gillette	Lucas	Thomas, Utah
Green	McCarran	Thye
Gurney	McFarland	Tydings
Hayden	McGrath	Vandenberg
Hendrickson	McKellar	Wherry
Hickenlooper	McMahon	Williams
Hill	Martin	Young

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Madam President, I am discussing at the present time the allotment which the Federal Government should make toward District expenses. I am trying to show that the amount the Federal Government has been contributing in recent years is not the proper amount.

Mr. LUCAS. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question, providing I do not lose the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to have the Senator yield so that I may submit a unanimous-consent request which would in no wise jeopardize his rights.

Madam President, in view of the fact that there is in the Senate Chamber a very distinguished delegation from a foreign country, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to say a word?

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Madam President, a delegation of representatives from all the British Commonwealths is paying a visit to our country, and under the rules of the Senate are entitled to seats on the Senate floor. But there will be no speaking, and I thought it would be well to tell the Senate who they are and have a brief recess so that Senators may greet them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McGRATH. Madam President, reserving the right to object, I am interested in maintaining the parliamentary situation which I think probably prevails on the Senate floor at this moment. The Senator from South Carolina is addressing himself to an amendment which he offered to the District sales-tax bill. The Senator is entitled to make two speeches on the subject in one legislative day. He made his opening remarks, then had a quorum call, then he made another speech, and had a second quorum call, and now is making another speech. I make the point of order that the Senator is not entitled to address himself in a third speech to the particular amendment which he has offered. I do so reluctantly, but I do not intend to stand by and see a great deal of the time of the Senate wasted while a filibuster is conducted on a bill of this much importance to the people of the District of Columbia.

My reason for making the point of order now is that I would not want the recess which is proposed interfere with the parliamentary situation as I see it at the moment. Therefore I ask the Chair to rule as to whether or not the Senator is in order in making a third speech on the question which is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois was addressing the Chair.

Mr. LUCAS. Madam President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the parliamentary situation, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] asked unanimous consent that a quorum call be had for the Senator from South Carolina, and there was no objection.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. On the condition that the Senator from South Carolina should not lose the floor, or his right to the floor be prejudiced.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Madam President, I was not asking for the quorum. I shall continue speaking. I should like to accommodate the representatives of other countries, and I shall yield, if I may have unanimous consent of all Senators present.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator will yield, I am going to make the request.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield if I have unanimous consent.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for a period of 5 minutes in order that we may comply with the request of the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and on the condition that the Senator from South Carolina, who is now addressing himself to the sales-tax bill applying to the District of Columbia, shall not lose any of his parliamentary rights.

Mr. McGRATH. Madam President, reserving the right to object, and in order that the point of order made by me shall not be prejudiced by the recess, I shall ask the Presiding Officer to rule on my point of order when the Senate reassembles after the recess.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Madam President, if there is to be any question, the Senator may raise it now, or I shall continue to speak.

Mr. McGRATH. I ask for a ruling on my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina did not lose any rights by the raising of the point of no quorum. The unanimous-consent request so provided. The Senator from South Carolina will not lose the floor.

RECESS—RECEPTION TO REPRESENTATIVES OF BRITISH COMMONWEALTHS

Mr. LUCAS. Madam President, I renew my request that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none.

Thereupon, at 3 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m. the Senate took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

(During the recess the representatives of British Commonwealths were greeted on the Senate floor by the Vice President and Members of the Senate.)

The Senate reassembled at 3 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m., when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mrs. SMITH of Maine in the chair).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Madam President——

NOMINATION OF DAVID K. E. BRUCE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY TO FRANCE

Mr. CONNALLY. Madam President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for a moment without jeopardizing his rights?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield provided the Senator will obtain unanimous consent that I may do so without jeopardizing my right to the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from South Carolina may yield to me without losing his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Madam President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report favorably the nomination of David K. E. Bruce to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to France.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination, as in executive session.

The reason I take the liberty of interrupting the Senator from South Carolina is that this is a very important post. The Council of Foreign Ministers is to meet in Paris shortly, and it is highly important that Mr. Bruce's nomination be confirmed so that he may qualify and be able to lend his services in connection with the meeting.

Mr. DONNELL. Madam President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me with the same understanding?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Reserving the right to object, I ask the distinguished Senator from Texas if the confirmation of the nomination has been recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is unanimously recommended by the committee.

Mr. DONNELL. I take it the Senator knows of no objection by any Member of the Senate to the nomination.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know of none. Mr. Bruce is now the representative of the ECA in Paris. He is a very able and distinguished man. He was here recently and appeared before the committee, and made a deep impression. He is a former resident of Baltimore. He is the son of former Senator Bruce, who served in the Senate a number of years ago. He is an outstanding man.

Mr. DONNELL. Madam President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield for a further inquiry, with the same understanding?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Further reserving the right to object, will the Senator be kind enough to state what reason if any, there is for immediate action on this nomination?

Mr. CONNALLY. I undertook to state that a while ago. Evidently the Senator did not hear me. The Council of Foreign Ministers will meet very shortly in Paris. Preparations for that meeting and participation in the meeting would be greatly enhanced by the presence of an Ambassador who is familiar with the questions which may arise. The situation is unusual because of the facts which I have stated. It is important that the nomination be confirmed so that the Ambassador may collaborate with the American delegation and form his contacts with the foreign representatives in promoting the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers in Paris.

Mr. DONNELL. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in executive session, proceeded to confirm the nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of David K. E. Bruce to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to France.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed; and, without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his courtesy.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield provided that I may do so without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. McGRATH. I wish to clarify the RECORD so far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield on that basis.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, prior to the recess I raised the point of order that the Senator from South Carolina probably was making more than two speeches in one legislative day on one subject. I have checked the RECORD. The requests for the quorum calls which were made adequately protected the Senator. As I understand, the Chair has already ruled that the rights of the Senator are not prejudiced by the quorum calls. I merely wanted the RECORD at this point to show that the request for a quorum call contained the statement that the rights of the Senator would be protected.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I thank the Senator for his statement.

Mr. President, I was discussing House bill 3704. I have offered an amendment which calls for a 25-percent allotment from the Federal Government each year toward the expenditures of the District of Columbia.

I have already given to the Senate a statement showing that in previous years the Federal Government has contributed far in excess of that percentage to the District of Columbia over a period of years. However, it will be found that in recent years the Federal Government has reduced the percentage of its allotment to the District. The allotment first started dropping in 1934, a depression year. From 1921 to 1925 the Federal contribution was approximately 40 percent. From 1878 to 1921, it will be found that it was approximately 50 percent.

Mr. President, we all glory in our Capital City. We boast of the fact that we have a great Capital City, and justly so. But it has been made that way by the Federal Government cooperating with the District. If the Federal Government had not contributed the large amounts which it contributed in the past, we would not have the beautiful city we have today.

Since 1934 we have not been doing what we should for the city of Washington, because we have reduced the Federal contribution.

It has been said that the only way to increase taxes in the District is by a sales tax. It must be acknowledged that property in the District is not taxed as high as it is taxed in other cities of like size in the United States. So far as the whisky tax is concerned, it is only about one-fourth of what it is in my State. The income tax is less than half what it is in my State. No one can tell me that other sources of revenue cannot be found, when we have not taxed luxuries to the limit. Would it not be better to double the tax on whisky and let the people buy a little less?

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. McGRATH. Does not the Senator know that the bill which we are considering does double the tax on whisky?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. No. It does not double it. It increases it 50 percent. It doubles the tax on beer, but not the tax on whisky.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator's objection is that we are not levying a high enough tax on whisky.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think we ought to double the tax on whisky, and we ought to increase the income tax.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question only, provided my right to the floor is not jeopardized.

Mr. McGRATH. Does not the Senator know that the increase in liquor taxes in this bill raises the taxes above those which are payable in the surrounding States of Maryland and Virginia?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think it will be found that the tax on liquor contained in the bill is not quite as high as it is in Virginia. It is hard to arrive at the exact figures for Virginia, because Virginia has a system of State dispensaries. There is a different system of taxes.

Mr. McGRATH. Does not the Senator know that from all the testimony our committee received on this subject we concluded that the tax which we are now proposing would be at least as high as that in Maryland or Virginia, and that that is the reason why we arrived at these figures?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The committee probably did take action in that direction; but the Senator knows that we can raise far more taxes on whisky if we will but do it. As to the income tax, we can raise twice as much as the bill provides without hurting anyone, rather than compelling a little child who buys a pair of socks for 20 cents to pay a sales tax. That is what I am worried about.

Is it not true that the Senator from Rhode Island has introduced a bill providing for an allotment to the District of about $30,000,000?

Mr. McGRATH. That is correct. I introduced a bill providing for a Federal contribution of $30,000,000 to point up the issue which faces the Congress, namely, that either we must give the citizens of the District of Columbia the right to tax themselves and thus raise sufficient revenue for the District of Columbia, or else the Congress itself must provide sufficient funds for that purpose.

Of course, I did not expect the Congress to pass the bill providing for a Federal contribution of $30,000,000 to be made to the District of Columbia; neither did I think it necessary that such a bill be passed. But I thought it necessary to point up the necessity confronting us, namely, either to provide the means by which the citizens of the District of Columbia may raise sufficient revenue for their needs, or else to have the Federal Government contribute sufficient funds for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, my purpose is to have the Federal Government contribute 25 percent of the funds needed for the District of Columbia. Such a contribution would care for all the deficit. Then I would have a thorough investigation made—such an investigation has not yet been made—to ascertain what the Federal Government should contribute to the District of Columbia. If that is done, we shall be traveling in the right direction, instead of having a report presented to the Senate, after an exploration of only a few days, calling for the enactment of a bill which would change the entire picture so far as the District of Columbia is concerned. We should remember that if we ever get into the sales-tax field, it will be very difficult to pull out of it. I merely ask that a thorough investigation be made before we enter that field.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question only.

Mr. HUNT. Does the Senator from South Carolina feel that 3 months of hard work and many, many hearings and a great deal of study and time and effort are not adequate?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. My answer is that I commend the Senator for the time he has devoted to this matter, but I am sure he will acknowledge that at the time he did that work, he had many other duties to perform. Moreover, this matter was not the only one confronting the Congress in which the Senator or the committee was interested. In studying this question the committee did not have investigators to make an investigation similar to previous investigations which have been made. In 1936 an investigation was made over a period of many months; and, as a result, a report different from the one now before us was presented.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUNT. Is the Senator from South Carolina familiar with the fact that in 1939 the Congress appropriated $10,000 for an investigation, which was thoroughly made by Dr. Pond, who is considered one of the ablest experts on the matter in the United States, and that the bill which we have introduced at this time clearly follows the recommendations and findings made by Dr. Pond?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I know what is proposed at this time. If Senators will study the contribution the Federal Government is making to the District of Columbia, they will be forced to admit that the Federal Government is not contributing a proper share.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. I have never been a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia; therefore, I am not informed as to the share of the District of Columbia's expenditures which the Federal Government contributes. Does the Senator have that information at his fingertips?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I shall come to that in a moment. I do have information both as to percentage contributions and lump-sum contributions.

For instance, I note that over the entire period from 1879 to 1920, the general fund for the District of Columbia was $347,841,000. The Federal Government's contribution during those years was $171,096,000 annually, or 48.4 percent—almost 50 percent.

From 1921 through 1924, the general fund for the District of Columbia amounted to $92,026,000, of which the Federal Government contributed $36,446,000, or 37.27 percent. The amendment I have offered calls for a Federal contribution of only 25 percent.

Thereafter, it was decided that the Federal Government would make a lump-sum contribution. So in 1925, out of the District of Columbia general fund of $29,084,000, the Federal Government gave $9,000,000, or 34.53 percent.

But the next year, 1926, the District of Columbia general fund was $30,245,000, and the Federal Government still gave $9,000,000, or 29.52 percent.

It will be found that thereafter the District of Columbia continued to receive less and less from the Federal Government. During the depression years the amount of the Federal contribution dropped down and down, until in 1931 it amounted to 22.45 percent; in 1932, 22.25 percent; in 1933, 21.33 percent; in 1934, 18.34 percent; in 1935, 16.51 percent; and in 1936, 15.24 percent.

Today the Federal Government is contributing $11,000,000 out of total expenditures for the District of Columbia amounting to approximately $100,000,000. In other words, the Federal Government is not contributing about 11 percent of the total. Certainly we should not treat the District of Columbia that way.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, does the Senator from South Carolina mean that the amount he has just stated was the Federal contribution for the last fiscal year?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes; that was the contribution.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. FLANDERS. The question is this: Does the Senator from South Carolina mind my saying at this time that the minority report seems to me to be far more sensible and constructive than the majority report; and I ask whether the Senator agrees with my statement?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I agree, of course. I signed the minority report, and I am sure the Senator knows that I agree with what he has said.

Mr. FLANDERS. I simply wish to place myself on record.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, we are not alone in this matter. I hold in my hand a letter which the Young Democratic Club of the District of Columbia has sent to Senators. It reads as follows:

YOUNG DEMOCRATIC CLUB OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1949.

The Young Democrats of the District of Columbia adopted the following resolution by an overwhelming vote (over four to one) "to express opposition to sales tax for the District of Columbia."

Arguments were heard presenting both sides, and the consensus was that other means of obtaining revenue more in keeping with the Democratic idea of progressive taxation should be sought.

Since in the House a larger percentage of Republicans voted for sales tax than did Democrats, it is hoped that Democratic Senators will kill this regressive tax which might serve as a precedent for a national tax if passed.

In this declaration we are well apprised that we will be in temporary opposition to a few party leaders for whom we have the greatest respect. It is felt, however, that the strength of the Democratic Party is in freedom of expression, and since our stand is taken on an issue, without deference to personality or expediency, we feel an expression of our opinion on a local problem might be welcome.

Sincerely,

ELIJAH STEWART,
First Vice President.

I find here also a copy of a telegram from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, addressed to the chairman of our committee under date of April 5, 1949, reading as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., April 25, 1949.

Hon. J. HOWARD MCGRATH,
Chairman, Senate District of Columbia Committee, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On April 5 President Green sent you the telegram quoted below:

"APRIL 5, 1949.

"Hon. J. HOWARD MCGRATH,
"Chairman, Senate District of Columbia Committee, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

"Over a long period of years by unanimous action of many conventions, the American Federation of Labor has opposed sales taxes. It strongly opposes the adoption of a sales tax for the District of Columbia. Several alternative revenue sources are available which are more equitable and economically justifiable in which is included a larger Federal contribution. Adoption of a sales tax by Congress for the District of Columbia will not solve its revenue problem but will comfort and aid those who seek to place a heavier portion of the tax load for cost of government on low-income groups. The adoption by Congress of a sales tax for the District of Columbia will set a pattern which States and other political subdivisions will follow.

"WILLIAM GREEN,
"President, American Federation of Labor."

It registers the objection of the American Federation of Labor to the sales tax provided for in the bill which is now on the Senate Calendar. However, last Friday I endeavored to see you in regard to certain amendments to the bill and as you were in New Mexico I discussed the matter with the committee clerk, Mr. Al Wheeler, and furnished him a copy of the proposed amendments.

I attach hereto a copy of the amendments which are designed to avoid pyramiding the tax on such magazines, bulletins, etc., issued regularly under an established annual rate, printed in the District but not sold in the District. While we still oppose the infliction of a sales tax in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, we think it wise to present these amendments.

Sincerely yours,

W. C. HUSHING,
Chairman, National Legislative Committee, American Federation of Labor.

ADVANCE INTERPRETATION

In advance of any action by the United States Senate, enforcement officials of the District of Columbia have interpreted the provisions of the District sales-tax bill, H. R. 3704, as passed by the House, to mean that all printed matter produced in Washington would be subject to the tax.

Please contact Senators on the District Committee, or any others who may be in a position to define in the bill itself, a "retail sale" or "sale at retail" to forestall in advance any arbitrary action by District officials.

We see no reason why newspapers should be the only publications exempted from the tax. Any magazines, bulletins, etc., which are issued regularly under an established annual rate, except subscriptions in the District of Columbia, should be exempted.

To avoid pyramiding the tax, only the final sale at retail in the District of Columbia should be taxed.

Following are suggested amendments to H. R. 3704 to accomplish the above:

A. Definitions of "retail sale," "sale at retail," and "sold at retail."

1. Page 4, section 14 (a), line 9: Remove the period following the word "title" and insert "when sold to the ultimate user."

2. Page 33, title II, section 1 (a), line 15: Insert after the word "sales" the words "to the ultimate user."

3. Page 12, section 28 (g), line 8: Remove the period after the word "newspapers" and insert "and all publications by subscriptions."

4. Under "Definitions" insert an additional section to read as follows:

Page 9, section 24: "Publications by subscription means magazines, printed or wire services, bulletins, or such other publications as are issued regularly and sell under an established annual rate and/or provided for at regular annual rates in dues of educational, union, business, fraternal, or professional organizations."

5. Page 9: Change old section 24, title I, to section 25.

When this matter was presented to the committee, and hearings on the bill were being held, the committee called upon anybody qualified to be heard to appear and testify. That is the kind of investigation which was conducted and about which the Senator from Wyoming speaks. The committee did not have investigators examine the various and sundry questions involved in this matter, but had people appear before the committee to give information concerning the bill that was then pending before the Congress.

I now read the statement of C. F. Preller, president of the Central Labor Union of Washington, D. C., as follows:

There is no organization in the city more vitally concerned with maintaining the level of governmental services and public improvements than the Washington Central Labor Union. As citizens, we share in all benefits derived from the payment of taxes to the District government. We recognize and accept the fact that additional revenues must be found to meet the cost of the proposed budget for fiscal 1949–50. However, we are in complete opposition to the sales tax as a means of balancing the budget. In the strongest possible terms we wish to express our opposition to H. R. 2156 and H. R. 1937.

In general we ask that the Congress enact a tax program which will be fair and equitable; a tax program that will recognize the basic democratic aim of placing the heavier burden of taxes on those best able to pay.

Those workers in the lower income brackets would suffer a reduced standard of living from a sales tax as it is proposed, in that they spend all of their income to live. People in the higher brackets would merely experience a reduced rate of savings. In the present economic situation, with wages lagging far behind very high prices, and with increased opposition of certain groups of employers to adequate wage raises, the workers of the community cannot in justice be expected to submit to a wage cut, in the form of the sales tax, without strenuously voicing the conviction that they are being discriminated against by the imposition of such a tax.

Not only will the average wage earner have to bear a disproportionate share of this regressive tax but also he is faced with the probability of increased prices through retail establishments being forced to employ more personnel to assist in the collection and compilation of the tax. Such additional costs will be passed on to the consumer.

Today, as consumer demand for goods is declining, and producers are looking for new markets, the sales tax will depress the purchasing power of low-income groups at the very time purchasing power is most needed. Effective consumer demand is essential to prosperity.

The regressive effects of the sales tax are multiplied in the case of large families. Whereas under the income tax a larger family pays less tax, under the sales tax they are made to bear a very disproportionate share of the tax.

In a poll last year by the Washington Post, a majority of District residents expressed opposition to the sales tax. The imposition of this tax would be against the expressed will of the people of the District.

In the opinion of the 170,000 A. F. of L. members in the District area there are sources of revenue other than the sales tax which not only would be preferable in every way, but would also produce the required level of revenue.

According to the 1949 budget $23,394,500 will be spent for public works. This amount will not be sufficient to meet the need for new schools and for new bridges in the District. Let it be raised to $30,000,000, but let us recognize that in a city experiencing such phenomenal growth as the District during the past 9 years it is manifestly impossible to finance capital expenditures on a current basis.

At that point let me state that I have introduced a bill to give the District the right to borrow for permanent improvements, limited to a certain amount.

Under the circumstances not 1 fiscal expert out of 50 would advocate paying for all capital improvements out of current revenue. This $30,000,000 should be borrowed from the United States Treasury at 2 percent interest, on a long-term basis, with payments on the principal to begin in about 1951. By then the expansion in population may have leveled off. After paying interest of $600,000 there would be $29,400,999 to apply to capital improvements. Money now in the public works fund could be diverted to the general fund, to meet the anticipated deficit in the general treasury.

Mr. President, when we consider the financial affairs and requirements of the District of Columbia we should give deep and profound study to the question before adopting a new system of taxation. That is the reason I am advocating at the present time that we do something to tide the District over for a year. We should have an investigation and then pass permanent legislation, but not until the investigation is completed.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. For a question only.

Mr. HUNT. Is the Senator aware of the fact that for approximately 12 years the question has been studied each year and that practically every year something very similar to the bill recommended by the committee has been presented? Does not the Senator believe that 12 years of study is probably sufficient?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to answer that question by saying that the subject has been studied for 150 years; but I am talking now about bringing it up to date, having a study made by outsiders not connected with the United States Government or with the District of Columbia. Let us pass an act and establish a fund of $100,000, if necessary, to make the kind of investigation that should be made, and then have a report submitted to the Congress, which, with the information thus available, could enact a proper law in line with the recommendations. I am confident that if we should do that, and get unbiased citizens to conduct the investigation, it would be found that they would recommend that the Federal Government contribute at least 25 percent to the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUNT. Does the Senator feel that the exhaustive study and investigation already made as a result of congressional action, with an appropriation of $10,000 for the investigation, was an outside study, and was it not the study which the committee is following in the bill now before the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to answer that question by saying that $10,000 is not a sufficient amount in order to find out all the facts and details concerning the District. Neither can any Senator, who has been a Member of the Senate for only 3 months, bring forth a bill that is equitable to the District of Columbia.

I want to say, further, that an increase from $2,000 to $4,000 is not fair and just to add to the tax burden of persons who will probably be receiving money from the relief funds of the District when they have to buy handkerchiefs or socks for their children.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUNT. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks 14 years of experience in administering sales taxes and other budgetary matters on the part of one member of the committee, and at least that many years' experience on the part of another member of the committee in administering the same type of laws, is not sufficient to furnish a fairly comprehensive idea of taxation for the District?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I shall answer that question in this manner: I think the Senator will find that people look upon things differently, according to their own local environment. The Senator has to have taxes in his State to suit the picture there. In other States revenue laws must be passed to suit the picture there. I am glad to say that in South Carolina we do not have any sales tax, but we do get money from those persons who are able to pay. They pay a 20 percent tax on cigarettes. If a man wants to smoke, let him pay. About four times as much is collected from that source as is collected from liquor taxes. But let us not tax a little child who wants to buy a toy, or a pair of socks, or a handkerchief with which to blow his nose when he goes to school. But, to save my life, I cannot see why we should have a sales tax in the District of Columbia when there are so many other sources which can be tapped, such as incomes, whisky, and cigarettes. Of course the Federal Government should pay its share.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for another question.

Mr. HUNT. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think the Federal income tax is doing a very good job of taxing those persons who have large incomes?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Federal Government has had to impose higher income taxes because of the war. The Senator knows that. If it were not for the war the American people would not be paying so much. It had to be done in order to defend America. We shall have to continue to pay probably $5,000,000,000 in interest for many years, because of that war. If we continue spending and sending $5,500,000,000 out of this country to care for other people and other governments, and then pay taxes on that, we shall probably be paying a tremendous amount of interest for many years to come. Think of $5,500,000,000! Still we cannot give to the District of Columbia $25,000,000.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. For a question only.

Mr. HUNT. Does the Senator think the State of South Carolina, with a per capita income of $778, should contribute to a general over-all payment to the District of Columbia a greater amount than it is now paying, when the income per capita in the District is nearly 2½ times what it is in South Carolina, or $1,624?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to answer that question by saying that South Carolina wants to pay for what it gets. It is receiving its pro rata share from the District and is receiving more benefits for the money spent in the District than it receives from some other Government agencies to which it has to contribute. So I answer the Senator's question by saying that we are willing to pay it, because we feel we owe it to the District, because we are receiving benefits and we want to pay our pro rata share into the general fund.

I read further:

Another important source of revenue should be the income tax. The tricky concept of domicile as presently interpreted is grossly unjust to the taxpayers of the District. If those who are domiciled here on the last day of the taxable year and those who maintain a place of abode in the District for more than 7 months of the taxable year, whether domiciled here or not, are required to pay District income taxes, there will be an additional $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 in revenue.

We are pleased to note that both Mr. BATES and Mr. SMITH have included this provision in their bills.

Another difficulty of our present income tax is that it suffers from poor enforcement. Although only 85,000 District returns were filed in 1946, over 125,000 Federal returns were filed in 1939, when the Federal exemptions were the same as those in the present District law. With advances in income and population growth of today, the number of returns should be near 160,000. All employers in the District, including the Federal Government, should be required to file with the District government an annual statement of wages and salaries. Such a procedure would make the job of apprehending chiselers much simpler.

A great many persons are not paying taxes in the States and are not paying taxes in the District. I am for tightening up the law and trying to operate the District in a businesslike manner.

I continue reading:

As to District of Columbia income tax rates, we believe them too low in the upper brackets. They should be revised upward in the higher brackets until they are somewhat in conformity with Virginia rates.

It is strange, Mr. President, that it was said there should be an increase of the whisky tax in conformity with the taxes of Maryland and Virginia, but there was no inclination to increase the tax I have just been discussing up to that of Virginia. It was not increased to equal that of my State, either.

I read further:

With a change to residence basis, a thorough collection, and an increase in rate up to the Virginia level, estimates as to yield could be greatly increased.

In considering the Federal contribution we believe attention should be directed to the fiscal years 1925 to 1930 when the Federal contributions were 26.1 percent of the general fund.

Notice that that is 1.1 percent under what my amendment calls for.

Despite the increase of last year, we think the contribution an inadequate payment for the services received by the Federal Government.

I agree with that.

Turning to other sources of revenue, we oppose excise taxes in any form. The National Tax Committee of the American Federation of Labor has characterized such taxes as nuisance taxes. They are simply variations of the sales tax. We are in opposition to tax increases on beer, wine, liquor, cigarettes and amusements.

That is their position on that subject.

Musicians, bartenders, waiters, waitresses, truck drivers, cooks and other workers believe their jobs would be jeopardized by such increases.

I think they are wrong about that. I think the same number of people would be kept working if the tax were increased.

As a last resort in meeting the deficit, but infinitely preferable to the sales tax in any form, we suggest that the Congress increase the tax rate on income-producing property in the District.

Senator SCHOEPPEL. I believe you made the statement that wages were lagging much behind the living costs. Are you sure that the Department of Labor Statistics bear you out in that statement?

Mr. PRELLER. We feel that they are.

Representative BATES. Did you hear the old adage that figures do not lie? That does not appear to the Bureau of Labor Statistics to be the case, I suppose.

Senator HUNT. Let me ask you who participated in the policy that you have enunciated in your paper. Does it originate with your membership?

Mr. PRELLER. That is right. We have a membership of 170,000 in the District of Columbia in the metropolitan area. We include all of the labor unions, school teachers, building mechanics, and miscellaneous, truck drivers, and so on.

Representative HARRIS. Does that take in the Maryland-Virginia area?

Mr. PRELLER. Yes.

Representative HARRIS. What percentage would that be?

Mr. PRELLER. I would say that about three-fourths of that, or pretty near three-fourths of that would be in the city of Washington.

Senator HUNT. If there are no other questions, that will be all. Thank you very much.

Mr. PRELLER. Thank you.

I shall now read the statement of Mr. Thomas G. Walters, operations director of Government Employees Council of the American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C.:

Mr. WALTERS. • • • The Government Employees Council of the American Federation of Labor is made up of 21 national and international unions with a membership in excess of one-half million members who are Federal and District employees.

The Government Employes Council of the American Federation of Labor at its regular monthly meeting held on February 8 fully discussed the question of the proposed sales tax to increase the revenue for the District of Columbia. After this question was fully and completely analyzed, it was the unanimous opinion of this council that we vigorously oppose the proposed sales tax.

The working men and women of this country have over the years consistently opposed a sales tax because it imposes a tax upon a class of people who are less able to pay.

Mr. Chairman and members of this committee, I would like to include in my statement some excerpts from two editorials appearing in the national weekly newspaper, Labor. The first excerpts will be from the edition of January 15. Among other things, this editorial states "Tax the backs and bellies of the poor." That in plain language is what it does, because it hits the poor hardest. They spend their entire incomes on the necessities of life. The sales tax would not seriously affect the rich.

"Rich men and real-estate interests—not only in the District but all over the country—are pushing this iniquitous tax. They want it in Washington so they can say to all other cities:

"'Look, Washington has a sales tax. What's good enough for the Nation's Capital is good enough for you.'

"Two years ago, the Veterans' Administration sought land for a new hospital to care for men crippled in the war. It found the perfect location in the Nevius tract in Arlington.

"That tract was on the tax books as farm land, at a valuation of only $74,000. Yet, for only part of the land, 25 acres, the owner demanded and a court ordered VA to pay $1,600,000.

"That is $64,000 per acre, pretty expensive for farm land. As the hospital will have 500 beds, the land cost alone is $3,200 per bed.

"The Veterans' Administration protested the exorbitant price, and a higher court is expected to make a final ruling this week.

"The same sort of situation—land valued and taxed far too low—exists elsewhere, but Washington is the worst example. Property taxes in the Nation's Capital are much lower than in any other large city.

"Washington is the wealthiest city in the world. It's nonsense to say it can't pay its bills without a sales tax."

From the editorial of Labor, under date of February 5:

"All the American people, particularly those of modest means, will be affected by the outcome of a sales tax battle now going on in Washington.

"Big property owners and other wealthy interests in the Capital, richest city in the country, have resumed their drive to push through Congress a sales tax for the District of Columbia. If they get it here, it will be used as a 'good example' for other cities, States, and even for a Federal sales tax.

"As Labor has often said, the sales tax transfers the heavy burden of Government costs from the rich to the poor. It is clearly unjust. In the long run it would be economically disastrous even for the rich, because such a tax reduces mass purchasing power upon which prosperity depends.

"Big Washington property owners, particularly the holders of fabulously valuable land, are not paying their fair share of taxes now. Real-estate taxes in the Capital are only one-third to one-half as high as in other cities. But the Washington rich insist on the sales tax.

"Without it, they tell Congress, Washington will go bankrupt. Of course, that is not true. The richest city can pay its way without shifting the burden to the poor and moderately well-to-do."

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, we strongly recommend that this subcommittee give an adverse report on the question of the proposed sales tax for the District of Columbia.

I turn now to the statement of Mr. David Whatley, attorney, member of the District of Columbia Bar, and I read as follows from the record of the hearings:

I am an attorney and real-estate broker, specializing in Virginia properties. Therefore, I speak against my own personal interest in opposing the sales tax, since obviously it would drive many residents to locate their residences and businesses in Virginia.

I oppose the sales tax for the reasons that have been enunciated so effectively by other organizations, and I shall suggest alternatives which, I submit, will make it unnecessary.

First, as a long-term revenue measure, I should like to underline the excellent editorials of the Times-Herald in proposing that the original 10 miles square enunciated in the Constitution as comprising the District of Columbia be returned. Of course, Judge Smith will vehemently and ardently oppose it.

Representative SMITH. Well, that would be just about as easy as getting an adequate and fair income-tax provision.

Mr. WHATLEY. I do believe that some day it will be accomplished, in spite of the able objections of the members of the Virginia Legislature.

I think their objection might be tempered, if they could be convinced of my previous thesis, that their representation in the Congress in that particular area would not be affected and need not be affected under the Constitution, since under the Constitution they could continue to represent in national representation that particular area. As to local vote, of course, the people would vote for the local officials.

Representative SMITH. A lot of folks over there would like to see another Representative, you know.

Mr. WHATLEY. As a major revenue producer, as an alternative to the sales tax, I propose that the Federal Government, through legislation, direct the District of Columbia Government to operate all retail and wholesale liquor establishments in the District that sell "off sale," not including, of course, restaurants and taverns and hotels. I propose that the administration be patterned on that which is operating successfully in other States, where the State operates all off-sale establishments, leaving in the hands of private enterprise all on-the-premises sales.

Based on the gross consumption of alcoholic beverages in District of Columbia, which is estimated authoritatively to be 1,000,000 cases, only 5 percent of which is consumed in restaurants, and only 10 percent further consumed in hotels, that leaves a balance of 85 percent of 1,000,000 cases at the average retail sales price of $32,000,000. I estimate that if the prices on alcoholic beverages other than beer and wine were increased to be the equivalent of the prices now prevailing in Virginia and Maryland, the profits to the District of Columbia government would amount to more than the proposed revenue from the sales tax. It would be in excess of $10,000,000, certainly, annually.

That, of course, would be equitable as far as the States of Maryland and Virginia are concerned, which now see, year after year, their revenues from their State-operated stores drained off from purchases in the District of Columbia. It is estimated that 40 percent of the alcoholic beverages sold in the District of Columbia are consumed outside the District.

More important, I suggest, as a matter of public relations to representatives from foreign countries, that if the number of liquor stores in the city were reduced to conform with the average number prevailing in Maryland and Virginia, and that they be made less conspicuous, that that would be a most salutary benefit in our public relations with representatives of other countries, many of whom undoubtedly are shocked at the display of liquor dealers and liquor consumption and liquor advertising in the District of Columbia.

I speak not as a personal "dry," but just as a person who feels that the present system of retail liquor distribution in the Nation's Capital is certainly one not to be desired.

I suggest that if any sales tax is considered, it be postponed until after Virginia enacts a sales tax, and that it be limited to such strictly luxury items as those on which the Federal excise tax is now placed, plus other items that are sold in excess of an average price.

I wish to suggest that all clothing, for instance, have a graduated sales tax, over a certain average price on such clothing. For instance, all women's hats over $10, or all men's suits over $40, all men's hats over $10, all jewelry over a certain amount, and so forth, so as not to burden the average consumer; and incidentally, to bring down the prices of those luxury goods, which I believe are priced higher in the District of Columbia than in most cities, because of the higher per capita income prevailing here.

I suggest that if the committee change the income-tax provision of the present law, that it make it applicable only to those salaries above $10,000 primarily to eliminate the obviously inequitable feature which now exempts all Federal employees from the tax.

I should like to further suggest that a study be made of an adjustment in real-estate-tax assessments in the city, based not only on an ad valorem basis, but to combine therewith a factor which would be a criterion of the net income produced by that real estate. I think that would discourage the destruction of perfectly livable buildings in the District, in order to make way for parking lots. It would further penalize and discourage the development and retention of slum areas, on which the ad valorem tax is so low as to make it the most profitable type of real estate to own in the District.

The last suggestion is one which I made last year: that the District make a study, under your direction, of what areas might be returned to the private tax rolls, such as hundreds of acres of Rock Creek Park, which are nothing but forest preserves, and are not used for recreation facilities, and such as the Soldiers Home area, the National Training School for Boys, the National Arboretum, and other beautiful building sites, on which I propose that the Federal Government construct multiple housing apartment-type developments, and liquidate on a self-liquidating basis of rentals to veterans, giving preference to disabled veterans, and giving them the option to purchase on a cooperative basis.

I believe that that is an opportunity that the Federal Government has, to solve the housing problem to some extent at least in this area, one which, of course, would meet with far more opposition than in other areas. But under the plenary powers of the Congress, as regards this area, it could be done, I believe, politically and practicably.

Senator HUNT. Any questions?

I find that there also appeared a Mr. Jerome B. McKee, chairman of the Department legislative committee of the American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, Washington, D. C. Mr. McKee made this statement:

The American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, is composed of 59 posts, and its membership at the close of 1948 was 19,929 paid up members.

They have consistently opposed a sales tax for the District of Columbia.

At their last Department Convention, held in August 1948, they again, by resolution, opposed a sales tax for the District of Columbia, and at that convention authorized the chairman of the legislative committee, or anyone appointed by him to appear before any congressional hearing and state its opposition, as follows:

It is an unfair tax, in that those in the lower income brackets pay a larger proportion of their income than those in higher brackets. To illustrate: Our country is vitally interested in perpetuating this Nation, which can only be accomplished through marriage and the children born of those unions.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question only.

Mr. McGRATH. I take it the Senator attributes great weight to the recommendations of labor organizations with respect to the sales tax.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The last one to which I was referring was a recommendation of the American Legion.

Mr. McGRATH. I believe the Senator previously read some recommendations from various labor organizations.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I did.

Mr. McGRATH. Does the Senator place the same amount of stress upon the recommendations of those organizations with respect to the poll tax?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am glad the Senator brought up that question. I recommended the abolition of the poll tax in my State, and I am glad to say that by a two-thirds vote of the House and Senate the measure was passed, and it has now been submitted to the people.

Mr. McGRATH. The State of South Carolina still collects the poll tax, does it not?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It was put in the constitution of South Carolina in 1868, when the carpetbaggers and scalawags had charge of our government, and it has been there ever since.

Mr. McGRATH. I congratulate the Senator for his magnificent stand when, as Governor of South Carolina, he recommended the abolition of such taxes. However, there have been occasions on the floor of the Senate when recommendations for the abolition of such taxes have had the strong support of labor organizations and veterans' organizations, but I do not know that the RECORD shows that the Senator always supported those movements, or gave the same amount of credence to the recommendations of those organizations when they related to that kind of tax.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I appreciate the Senator's question. I do my own thinking on the floor of the Senate. I am glad to have the recommendation of any organization. I believe that the poll tax should be repealed within the States, but I believe that the Federal Government should have nothing to do with such repeal. I think we should regulate the qualifications for voting in the particular States, and that the Federal Government should have nothing to do with those qualifications. That is my position. That is the way I have felt. If I feel differently than does any organization, I cannot help that.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question only.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator believes that these matters of taxation are of local concern, and that each State should be the judge of the kind of taxation it has. I believe that is the Senator's position.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am glad to answer that question by saying that a poll was conducted by the Washington Post among the people of Washington, and, as I understand, they voted down the sales tax.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator realizes that unfortunately the voteless citizens of the District of Columbia have no way of expressing themselves on these issues. Therefore we must sit as their city council and judge these matters for them. Since that is our obligation, it seems to me that the Senator might see his way clear to support what is obviously the overwhelming decision of the people of the District of Columbia, so far as it is humanly possible for any of us to determine what their wishes are. They must speak through their newspapers and their civic organizations. As I read the RECORD, the overwhelming sentiment as expressed through these media seems to be that the bill here proposed, including the sales tax, is what the people of the District of Columbia would prefer, rather than an increase in the income tax, rather than an increase in the real estate tax, and rather than the other increases recommended in the minority report.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to answer the Senator in this way: That is the reason I am reading into the RECORD what the various organizations of the city have recommended when they met and the proposal was explained to them. It will be found that the Government workers met and voted against it. The American Federation of Labor held a meeting and voted it down. It will be found that there was a meeting of the American Legion, and that organization went on record against it. It will be found that the Young Democrats went on record about four to one against it. I am reading these things into the RECORD in order to show that the people of the District do not want a sales tax. That is my reason for bringing these things forward. The people of the District of Columbia have no spokesman. I am trying to speak for them on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUNT. The Senator has stated that the Young Democrats, by petition to the committee, opposed the enactment of a sales tax. I may say for the enlightenment of the Senator from South Carolina that the Young Republicans of the District did just the opposite. They wrote the committee recommending the sales tax.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I can see why the Senator followed them. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUNT. Does the Senator expect to read into the record a statement by the Federation of Women's Clubs of the District of Columbia favoring a sales tax? Does he expect to state for the record that the Home Builders' Association of Metropolitan Washington favors it; that the Northwest Council of Citizens Associations favors it; that the Federation of Businessmen's Associations favors it; that the Building Owners and Managers' Association favors it; that the Washington Building Congress favors it; that the Junior Board of Trade favors it; that the Federation of Citizens Associations favors it; and that the Washington Taxpayers' Association favors it, as does the Washington Board of Trade?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It will be noticed that most of the names the Senator read represent big business. We always find them in favor of it.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. Does the Senator wish to infer that the Young Democrats of Washington are not big business? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It did not seem that way when we were trying to raise funds last fall.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUNT. Does the Senator feel that the Federation of Women's Clubs in the District of Columbia represents big business?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator knows that many of its members are the wives of big-business men.

Mr. President, I continue to read from the testimony at the committee hearings:

> The newly married couple, in furnishing a room, an apartment, or a home generally, in a sense mortgage their future, as the stores all invite charge accounts to be paid in the future. Coupled with these obligations, come obligations for clothes that are needed. It generally takes 5 years, at a minimum, before a wardrobe is built to the point that one can have sufficient change of attire. Unfortunately, it often happens that these couples buy lower-priced merchandise that do not have wearing qualities, and as soon as an obligation is paid they find themselves back on the books with more obligations for both clothes and furniture. Frequently both husband and wife are employed. In the event of a family, it is necessary for the wife to either take leave of absence and, upon her return to outside employment, entrust her child to other care, or to cease outside employment entirely.
> For all these sacrifices, we penalize these two citizens and thousands of others like them by imposing a 2-percent sales tax on the furniture and clothes they so frequently must purchase. They then discover that the Federal Government has an excise tax of 20 percent on baby oil, yet the wife has known for years that the Federal Government has taxed her 20 percent over and above the cost of that cheap purse which every woman has to have to take the place of the pockets in men's clothes.

Mr. President, I used to criticize my wife for carrying so many things in her purse. But when I stop to realize all the things that I carry in the pockets of my suit, I am forced to admit that I should not criticize my wife about the contents of her purse.

I read further from the testimony:

Now let us look at the two proposed sales-tax bills.

As to sales-tax ratio, they are the same, namely, an exemption of purchases up to 14 cents, then, on all purchases of from 15 cents to 50 cents, a tax of 1 cent, then on all purchases from 51 cents to $1 a tax of 2 cents, and so forth.

Mr. President, we should notice that the bill does not provide exemption from the tax for articles sold for 15 cents or more. Of course, today so many things sell for 15 cents. If the bill is enacted, do Senators think any merchants will sell anything for 12 or 13 cents, from now on? The merchants will sell their articles for 15 cents or more, so that the tax will apply; and we shall find that the prices of a great many articles will be increased from 13 or 14 cents to 15 cents.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUNT. Is the Senator familiar with the nationally advertised prices of certain merchandise, which prevent the retailer from selling those articles at increased prices?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have tried to bring about such a situation in the District of Columbia. However, we should notice that such a restriction applies to very few articles sold in the District of Columbia. Most articles sold in Washington after the enactment of this bill, if it is enacted, will be sold at prices of more than 15 cents. I should like to have any Senator name a single article which will be sold for less than 15 cents if this bill is enacted into law.

Mr. HUNT. How about the Baby Ruth candy bar?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Of course the size of candy bars has been cut down to about half of what it used to be.

As to the Baby Ruth candy bar, which the Senator from Wyoming has mentioned, whoever heard of its being regulated in price? In some places such candy bars can be purchased at three for a dime. I have bought them at that price recently. In my home State, some of the stores sell them at three for a dime, and sell three packages of chewing gum for a dime.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUNT. Is the Senator from South Carolina aware of the fact that under the proposed sales-tax law, all candies will be exempt from taxation?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I was not talking about candies; the Senator from Wyoming brought up that subject, when he was trying to tell me about certain articles on which the retailer cannot increase the price over that advertised nationally by the manufacturer. Of coure, the price of Baby Ruth candy bars is not controlled by the manufacturer, and in some places they can be purchased at lower prices than at others.

I read further from the testimony before the District of Columbia Committee:

Both of these bills impose a greater sales tax than 2 percent. To illustrate: Five persons make purchases of articles costing 55 cents, 60 cents, 65 cents, 70 cents, and 75 cents. Collectively, these persons pay 10 cents on combined purchases of $3.25. However, if one person had bought all the articles, amounting to $3.25, he or she would have paid only 7 cents. Who gets this additional 3 cents? Not the District of Columbia.

At the hearings, the witnesses did not mention the fact that if a person walks into a store and buys a 15-cent article, after the sales-tax bill is enacted, if it is, a 1-cent tax will have to be paid; and if the same person thereafter goes to another store and buys another 15-cent article, he will have to pay another 1-cent tax. In other words, if he purchases three 15-cent articles at three different stores, making his total purchases amount to 45 cents, he will have to pay a total tax of 3 cents, which will amount to a tax of more than 6 percent.

I read further from the committee hearings:

Representative SMITH. Well, who does get it?

Mr. MCKEE. I would say the storekeeper, sir; the retailer. The State of Illinois has finally corrected this type of injustice and exempts the first 15 cents of sales, and imposes a 1-cent tax on purchases from 16 to 65 cents, and an additional 1 cent on sales from 66 cents to $1.15, and only 1 cent for each additional 50 cents or fraction thereof. This thereby gives a taxpayer a fairer break upon his purchase, rather than providing greater profits to the retailer.

Over the years, we have proposed a graduated income tax, along the same lines as the Federal income tax, with the percentage beginning at a base of 1 percent after exemption of $1,000 to a single person, and $2,000 for a married couple, plus $500 exemption for each child or dependent, and $250 allowed for donations, et cetera, on a short form of return.

A single person earning $3,000 a year, under the short form, would pay $17.50 a year. A married couple earning $5,000 a year, with one additional dependent, would pay $22.50 a year.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does the Senator from South Carolina object to giving the low-income citizens of the District of Columbia a "break" by exempting from the income tax all persons with incomes of less than $4,000?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am against the sales tax. I think, if adjusted properly, with an exemption of only $2,000, an income tax graduated up to at least 5 percent or 6 percent, with no sales tax, would assure that the necessary revenue would be obtained. That is the just and most equitable way of handling it.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I was asking the distinguished Senator whether he objected to the District income tax starting at $4,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I favor its beginning at $2,000, with a graduated scale, in order that most of the money may come from the higher brackets. That is what I favor. I think most people, if they will look into the matter, will find that it is being handled equitably. Reading further from the hearings:

It also requested that a study of the Philadelphia plan of taxation be made, but opposition to taxing pay rolls of those that reside outside of the District was expressed by Members of Congress, and no study has been made of this plan, to our knowledge.

The formula that existed prior to 1923, whereby the Federal Government paid 40 percent of our general budget and the taxpayers the remainder should again be instituted.

My amendment calls but for 25 percent. I am glad to say the chairman of the committee who is handling the pending bill has already endorsed a $30,000,000 contribution by the Federal Government. Then how can he object to my amendment, which would wipe out all the present headaches in regard to the sales tax? I continue the reading:

Since 1923 our taxable property has declined approximately 4 percent, which figures I feel you already have at your disposal.

The Federal Government, during the past fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, received from the citizens of the District the sum of $394,273,739.46, a sum equal to 0.94 percent of the total received by them during that year; yet our population in the District was only 0.60 percent of the Nation. The District of Columbia payment was greater in dollars and cents than that received from 26 States, and the percentage paid by populations was greater than that paid by 41 States.

Thus it will be seen from that if but 10 percent of the Federal Government's collections within the District were returned to the District, there would be an end to the District's headache about revenue.

Yet we in the District of Columbia do not have any say as to how the money collected by the Federal Government should be spent, and we find that the farmers and cotton growers are subsidized with part of that money, which in turn means an increased cost of living to us in the District.

That is another thing. The District of Columbia is made up principally of homes and stores. For that reason a sales tax would operate as a tax practically on all business within the District. The city of Washington is different from most of the other cities of the country. It is different from most of the States by reason of the fact that industries are located within the States, upon which they can depend for revenue. There are practically no industries within the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. HUNT. Does not the Senator from South Carolina consider that the Government of the United States is really a huge business operated within the District?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I consider the Government, placed here in Washington, to be the largest industry the District has, so far as that is concerned. I think as an industry it should pay its taxes. That is what I am advocating. That is why I propose 25 percent. The Government takes the place of industry; there is no question about that. The city of Washington would not be what it is today had the Capital not been built here. An area of 10 miles square was laid out for that purpose, and the Capital City was built. If the Capital were to be moved to another place, it would be difficult to maintain Washington as a thriving, progressive city. There can be no question about that. But that raises the further question of how much the Federal Government should allocate to the District by way of payment for all the benefits it derives. Those benefits are not restricted to the District; they extend to every part of the Nation. The Government agencies are located here. Hundreds of letters pass through my office daily inquiring about things that are happening, in which the people back home are interested. They inquire about matters being handled here by the various departments. Does any Senator think they would want to receive all those benefits for nothing? That is what I am arguing about. I should not take a minute's time of the Senate did I not believe thoroughly that the sales tax is the wrong way to try to balance the budget of the District.

I have been a member of the District Committee for about 5 years. On the basis of 5 years' experience on that committee, I am thoroughly convinced the Federal Government is not contributing its proper share to the District. If through my speeches upon the floor of the Senate I accomplish nothing more than to make the people of the District and an increasing number of Members of the House and Senate aware of my belief in that regard and cause them to share it, I shall feel that my time has been well spent.

Congress has been absorbed with various things. First, there was a depression. Later there was a second World War. Our time has been completely taken up with other matters. I fear we have neglected the thing which lies close at hand—the Nation's Capital. We have neglected our duty to our capital city. I am trying to awaken everyone to a realization of that fact. I want to let the people know. I want my people in South Carolina to know that we have not done our whole duty toward the District of Columbia. Reading further:

When floods and other disasters occur throughout our country, we have never raised our voice as to the appropriations by Congress to those areas. When the Congress appropriates money for foreign relief, we again raise no voice as to those appropriations. But for 20 years we have raised our voice as to the treatment of the District of Columbia by our Federal Government in its failure to pay its just share of the city's upkeep, the same as other taxpayers are compelled to do. If these pleas had been heeded then, many necessary improvements would have been made years ago, instead of still being sought.

It is a disgrace to the Nation. With the funds that are supplied to the District, how can the District do any better than it has done? Congress is the supreme authority in the District. I am glad to know that Congress is waking up, and will do something with reference to correcting slum conditions in Washington.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. HUNT. Does the Senator feel that had there been a sales tax established in the District 14 years ago, as was the case in my own State, there would not be slums in the District of Columbia today?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If we had started 14 years ago on that program, I think it would be found that the District would be receiving less from the Federal Government than it is now receiving, because it would be said the District had sufficient revenue. I am trying to get the money from the Congress, from whom it should come.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does the distinguished Senator believe, as I do, that when slums reach the point where they become unlivable, they should be torn down and removed, so they cannot continue to be used?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I thoroughly agree with the Senator that the slums should be torn down and new housing constructed.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Did not the Senate of the United States have an opportunity to vote on that proposition, and did it not turn it down?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I voted for it.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I say, the Senate of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As I recall, there is slum clearance provided for in the bill which passed the Senate.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Was there not an amendment which provided that in the event new housing was constructed from public funds in various and sundry cities, and the slum was not removed at that time, it should be torn down within a period of a year? Did not the Senate vote upon that amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not recall that. I should have to have the Record on that. But I do recall that we passed a housing bill which carried with it a section which provided for slum clearance.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I read further:

We realize that it is mandatory that we keep this city, the Capital of the Nation, in a state of repair and cleanliness unequaled by any other city in the Nation; as it is not the city of its inhabitants only, but it is the city of all the people of the Nation. Our water is of the best, and we believe we have as fine a fire and police department as any other city of its size. Our police have to give protection to the embassies and legations of foreign governments, all of which property is tax exempt, and to do this calls for men to work overtime, or leave our city short of the necessary protection that its citizens pay for. Our fire department has to be prepared to combat a fire in any of the Government buildings.

Under the proposed budget, we feel that the Federal Government should pay its rightful share of this burden for services rendered; not a grant, not a donation, but $32,000,000 as its share of the burden.

I am asking for only $25,000,000. I notice that $32,000,000 is suggested, but I think $25,000,000 would relieve them of the burden this year. We can then raise the income tax, and they should have no further difficulty with regard to the taxation problem in the District of Columbia.

I read further:

The $330 pay increase to the District employees, retroactive to July 1, 1948, should be paid by the Federal Government as a deficiency appropriation, thereby raising their payment of last year, or rather the present fiscal year, from $11,000,000 to $16,000,000.

Mr. President, I want the world to know that I am in favor of the $330 pay increase. I am in favor of providing the money for the payment, but I think that those who have stated that we must pass a sales-tax bill in order to meet the payment committed an error, because the payment should not be dependent on any kind of taxation. It should stand upon its own merits or demerits, as the case may be.

Mr. President, I read further:

This retroactive pay should be paid, but should not have anything to do with the budget for the coming year. We have not failed, however, to recognize that we have with us as citizens of this city, people of very low income, and many with no income; and the latter, to a large extent, are responsible for the large sum inserted in this budget for public welfare.

Business income has not only reached its peak; it indicates a falling off, and greater unemployment faces us. When unemployment increases, then, of necessity, public welfare increases, and the amount that would be needed in this direction, based on present requests, would equal combined appropriations of our Police and Fire Departments.

Frankly, the law, as to time of residence had better be changed to 3 years before the city is deluged with residents of other States, looking for work and subsistence here at the expense of the citizens of this city, as has been the problem for these many years.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that reference was made to the Pentagon Building. I have been informed that all the road work to that building was paid for at Government expense. That is the case as to any public buildings in Washington. The streets are paid for by the taxpayers through the budget for the street improvement.

Representative BATES. You are not correct in that statement.

Mr. MCKEE. I am so informed. If I am wrong, I would like to be corrected.

Representative BATES. The taxpayers of the District of Columbia do not pay for street improvements in that case.

Mr. MCKEE. That is correct, in a sense. But those who pay the gasoline taxes to the District and those whose cars bear the tags of the District pay into that separate fund for the new streets and repairing of old streets.

May I add that the Federal Government vehicles operating on our streets pay neither vehicle tax nor gasoline tax to the District. I believe they are exempt.

Representative BATES. Of course, Government vehicles are a very limited number, compared to the total number using the highways.

Mr. MCKEE. By the same token, taking our present ratio of assessed property, as it has declined, it is now about forty-eight and a fraction percent. I have been given to understand that approximately 50 percent, just over 50 percent, of those working for the Federal Government now reside in Maryland and Virginia. Yet we furnish all the facilities for them to reach their employment in the Federal Government.

We believe that a tax rate on property of the Federal Government along the lines of the O'Mahoney formula is not sufficient. We give more services to the Nation's Capital, being as it is such, than any other city generally gives. That is why we believe we should go back to the beginning of the city, when it was removed from Philadelphia, where it was designed to be, according to the intent of the Congress in those days.

Over the years, however, Members of Congress and others have come before you gentlemen of this committee with their requests, and that is when the damage was done. We believe the present Congress should recognize that damage which has been done and repair it by giving us back a formula along the lines that existed before 1923.

That is what my amendment does, except that it does not go quite that far, but it would give quite a bit of relief.

Senator HUNT. Thank you.

That finished Mr. McKee's testimony. I notice here also on page 261 of the hearings before the District Committee the testimony of Col. Charles I. Stengle, Federation of Government Employees, A. F. of L., Washington, D. C. I read from his testimony:

Colonel STENGLE. My name is Charles I. Stengle, and I am the legislative representative of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL.

Mr. Chairman and members of this joint committee, I realize, after having been here all day, that this audience has been levying a tax on the committee. We have levied a tax on your patience, and I want to thank you for continuing to patiently hear us.

Among the membership of our organization there are about 25,000 employees of the Government in the District. The average salary for those 25,000 is $2,850 per year. Most of them have to eat downtown. You have fixed a tax here, which would make you subject to paying a sales tax if you eat outside your home.

The bill has been amended so that if the food bill is less than $1.50, a tax does not have to be paid.

Nearly all of our membership eat their lunches downtown. They will have to buy them. They will have to pay a tax under this proposed plan.

Now, my friend BATES has been worried about where to find the money. He reminds me of another Member of the House who frequently says, "Where are you going to get the money?"

That is a question asked in the House of Representatives every time a big appropriation bill comes before that body.

Representative BATES. You may be able to help us.

Colonel STENGLE. Now, in 1920, the Congress of the United States broke the District debt, for cost, 50–50; and they didn't blush when they were doing it.

Senator HUNT. What year was that?

Colonel STENGLE. 1920. In 1923, when I came to Congress as a Member from New York City, it was a 60–40 proposition, until a gentleman from Michigan by the name of Crampton came out of the Appropriations Committee of the House with a proposal that he got out of the thin air, that $9,000,000 was enough for the Government to pay, as its share.

Since that time I have seen Constitution Avenue torn down and built up with Government buildings, knocking out all taxable values. Over here, just in sight almost, the General Accounting Office has taken an entire block. And right in front of my windows, across the park, you are now proceeding to take a half block for a second Senate Office Building.

We are circumscribed here by limitations of law. We can't go over into my friend SMITH'S district and tax them. We can't go out here in Maryland and bring them in as a part of the metropolitan area. We are all circumscribed by law, and we can only tax within those limits.

For the information of my colleagues I may say that on a recent visit to my home State I found city after city extending its limits. Some of them which had a population of 40,000 just a few years ago, have expanded until they now have 100,000, and some which had 30,000 just a few years ago, have more than doubled by extending their radius and bringing more people within the city limits. That cannot be done by the District of Columbia.

There are just about as many people living outside and around the District as live inside the District. Most of those who live in close proximity are working either for the Government or for the stores within the District. Practically every family is kept up either by the Government or some of the interests in the District.

And yet, not only does the Government have a large proportion of nontaxable property, but various organizations have also the same privilege by act of Congress.

Now, in heaven's name, where are we going to get the money from?

Representative BATES. Now you are coming back to my line of thought.

Colonel STENGLE. I am going to suggest that back in 1920, and in '22 Congress was wise when, instead of picking out of the air some lump sum and throwing it into the hopper, they thought it would be better to work on the basis of percentages. Because, as we go down and you go up, there ought to be an equal spot somewhere that we can meet, and that would be equitable.

Now, I am appealing in behalf of these people that I represent, because I know they are having a heavy strain—many of them, before the war, started buying homes. They have to pay so much a month.

My friend BATES said something about the cost of living.

Representative BATES. I am to blame for that too, am I?

Colonel STENGLE. No, sir. You are not. But we have an extremely high cost of living in the city of Washington. You can't go to the market now with less than a $10 bill, and bring back a bag or two to feed your family. That isn't true all over the United States.

So I say it is only fair and just that Congress recognize the situation and, instead of levying another tax on the poorly paid people, come across with your share and help us meet the load that was not of our making.

I don't care to extend my remarks any further. I am willing to answer any questions.

Representative BATES. Now, Colonel Stengle, suppose we do subscribe to your line of thought, that we should substantially increase, say, the Federal contribution to the full amount of the value of the buildings, and provide the rate to get the revenues: That would bring in about $5,000,000, we understand, over and above the 12; if we assess those buildings, all of them at their full value.

Now, $5,000,000 is just a small part of the 18. Where are we going to get the balance?

Colonel STENGLE. All right. I never have suggested that you assess any Federal property. My suggestion is that you come across the board with your share on a percentage basis, and not on any assessment of the property.

Representative BATES. Well, we would have to have some principle.

Colonel STENGLE. Back in 1920 we didn't. And nobody cried then.

Representative BATES. It was a hit-and-miss proposition then, as it is now.

Colonel STENGLE. Well, it is from our standpoint.

Representative SMITH. Well, Colonel Stengle, that is a very pretty speech you made, and I am in accord with pretty much of what you say. But I think you spend about as much time on the floor of the House as any Member that I know of, and you know perfectly well that Congress just is not going to do it.

Colonel STENGLE. Well, they are busy right now, over there.

Representative SMITH. Now, you want for your members this $230 pay raise, which is $5,000,000.

Colonel STENGLE. We certainly do.

Representative SMITH. And you want it retroactive.

Colonel STENGLE. We certainly do.

Representative SMITH. That is another $5,000,000. That is $10,000,000. And you know just as well as we on this side of the table know that Congress is not going to give it out of the Federal Treasury. So we will have to raise some taxes.

Colonel STENGLE. Of course, the minds of the Congress are a little different from mine. You are a little closer in than I am.

Mr. President, sometimes we cannot see the forest because of the trees. I fear that is the trouble with us here. We who are here do not see the needs of the District as we should see them. People who come from afar to visit the city of Washington see some of our slum conditions, and then can readily see the needs of the District.

Mr. President, I now turn to the testimony of Miss Dorothy Eldeen, representing the Women's Auxiliary, United Public Workers of America. Her testimony appears on page 262 of the hearings before the District Committee on Wednesday, February 16, 1949, as follows:

The Women's Auxiliary of the United Public Workers of America is in complete agreement with Congress that the residents of the District must pay more taxes. We feel that the residents of the District are willing to pay more taxes, providing the tax schedule is based on an equitable foundation. We are opposed to the sales tax as a means of raising the necessary funds for the District for the following reasons:

1. It is an unfair tax, in that it hits hardest those who can least afford to pay, the lower-income groups. We know that the lower-income groups spend a much larger proportion of their income for their immediate needs, whereas the well to do save a large portion of their income, which is not taxed.

2. A sales tax would extend existing inflationary pressures. A large portion of the District's residents spend every penny for rent, food, and clothing. Any additional increase on clothing or any other necessities would cut down the volume of sales, have an effect on employment, and generally add to our economic problems.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina be good enough to yield, with the understanding that by doing so he will not jeopardize his position on the floor, so that I may ask a question of the acting majority leader and the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who is in charge of the bill which is now before the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I shall be glad to yield. I ask unanimous consent that by so doing my position on the floor will not be jeopardized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may yield to the senior Senator from South Carolina for the purpose stated. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have no objection if I do not lose the floor thereby.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to ask the acting majority leader if it is not his understanding from what the majority leader has said, as well as what the chairman of the District Committee, in charge of the bill now before the Senate has said, that tomorrow, upon the convening of the Senate an opportunity will be afforded to consider the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill?

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, how long does the Senator from South Carolina think consideration of the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill will require?

Mr. MAYBANK. I should think perhaps 2 hours.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I had made an agreement last week, insofar as I could make an agreement with another Senator, that that bill might be taken up this afternoon.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McGRATH. The Senator then yielded his time, with the understanding that we might proceed with the District of Columbia sales-tax bill today and get as much debate on the bill behind us as possible. I certainly shall not object to the move to take up the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill tomorrow upon the convening of the Senate, with the understanding, of course, that, if the junior Senator from South Carolina has not concluded his remarks when the Senate takes a recess tonight, he thereafter will have the floor, and that the bill now before the Senate will be displaced only for the one purpose of taking up the Treasury-Post Office Departments appropriation bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes, Mr. President, it is distinctly understood that the bill now under consideration will be displaced only by the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, and by nothing else. It is understood that there will be no speeches on any other subject.

Mr. McGRATH. By way of further securing the position of the District of Columbia tax bill, I should like to ask the Senator if he will agree that if the consideration of the Treasury-Post Office bill is not concluded tomorrow—the Senator indicates it will take something like 2 hours—our present agreement will not run beyond the calendar day of tomorrow.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am glad to make that agreement. I would only make this observation, that if the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill should be before the Senate for more than 1 day perhaps it would be due to an effort to delay consideration of the pending bill, and I would not want that to occur.

Mr. McGRATH. I should want to reserve the right to resume debate on the District of Columbia tax bill some time tomorrow following conclusion of the consideration of the Treasury-Post Office bill, and if the latter is not acted upon tomorrow I should like to have it understood that debate on the bill now before the Senate will be resumed upon the convening of the Senate on Wednesday.

Mr. MAYBANK. With that I thoroughly agree, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the Chair that if, by unanimous consent agreement, the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill is brought up for consideration at the convening of the Senate tomorrow, at any time thereafter, upon call for the regular order, the Senator in charge of the bill now before the Senate can insist upon bringing it back for consideration.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request with respect to laying aside the unfinished business when the Senate convenes tomorrow and taking up the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask whether unanimous request has been made that the Senate now temporarily lay aside the bill before the Senate?

Mr. MAYBANK. No, Mr. President; I ask that the bill now before the Senate be temporarily laid aside when the Senate reconvenes tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. MAYBANK. And that when the Senate convenes tomorrow the Treasury-Post Office bill shall be the order of business.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the senior Senator from South Carolina that when the Senate convenes tomorrow the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill shall be taken up, and that the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. HILL. In other words, the pending business would be temporarily laid aside and the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the senior Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, all we are doing is temporarily laying aside the unfinished business, which is the District of Columbia tax bill, and making the pending business tomorrow, after the routine matters are out of the way, the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, which will be before the Senate for consideration at that time.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is the agreement I made with the minority leader this morning.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection. I wish to thank the Senator from South Carolina for permitting the Senate to proceed in that fashion, because it was understood by some Senators that we were to take up the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the senior Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the junior Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the junior Senator from South Carolina yield to me so that I may ask one further question of the acting majority leader?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield with the understanding that my right to the floor will not be prejudiced.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the intention as to how long the Senate is to remain in session today?

Mr. HILL. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] has not yet completed his speech on the pending bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the intention to remain in session a while longer this evening?

Mr. HILL. The idea was to continue for a while, so as to afford the Senator from South Carolina an opportunity to conclude his speech.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to know how long it is planned to keep the Senate in session this evening. I do not know exactly how long I shall require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I may require a couple of hours. I do not know whether Senators wish to remain here that long.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may ask a question of the leaders, with the understanding that the Senator's right to the floor will not be jeopardized?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield with that understanding.

Mr. HILL. The distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH] are in charge of the bill. I should like to inquire what their wishes are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from South Carolina yielding for that purpose? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I think we ought to remain in session for a reasonable time—perhaps 6:30 or 7 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. Could the Senator from South Carolina conclude his speech in that time?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not know. It may be possible. I am speaking on only one amendment. I have several other amendments. I shall speak on the other amendments when they are before the Senate. If this amendment were adopted, the other amendments would not be necessary; but if this amendment is not adopted, I have other amendments to offer, which would make the bill more workable.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to agree that within 1 hour after debate starts on this amendment, either some time tomorrow or on Wednesday, we shall have a vote on this particular amendment, if we can get a unanimous-consent agreement. I think we could probably make more progress toward reaching a final conclusion by that means than by remaining here indefinitely this evening discussing one amendment. If the Senator from South Carolina could conclude his discussion of the amendment within another hour, I would not care whether he made the remainder of his speech tonight, tomorrow, or Wednesday.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If I were the only Senator who was to speak, I could agree to fixing a time. However, I understand that several other Senators wish to speak on this amendment and the other amendments. That being so, I could not agree to a vote at any particular hour for that reason.

Mr. McGRATH. I understand that the Senator cannot bind other Senators who may wish to speak on his amendment. Therefore I believe that we ought to consume as much time as we can tonight, and remain in session for another hour or two.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I was reading from the statement of Mrs. Dorothy Eldeen. I continue to read her statement:

3. A sales tax is difficult to administer. The merchants become tax collectors and particularly for the small merchant, it becomes a real burden.

4. The adoption of a sales tax in the District will tend to encourage more shopping outside the District.

5. The majority of the District residents do not want a sales tax, as has been indicated by polls and surveys in the last few years.

6. We feel that there are more efficient and equitable measures to properly finance the District government and we would like to submit for your consideration a few suggestions.

1. There should be a large appropriation from the Federal Government.

Many of the other witnesses made the same statement.

When the District was first organized in 1878, the Federal Government's appropriation was 50 percent of the District budget. At the present time, it is approximately 12 percent.

2. The needed funds for capital outlays could be raised by the issuance of long-term bonds. This is a regular procedure throughout the country.

For the information of the Senate, I have introduced a bill to carry out the second recommendation.

3. Increase and broaden the income-tax base in the District. There are an estimated 861,000 residents in the District, of which only 88,000 persons paid income tax.

It will be found that throughout the testimony witnesses testified against the sales tax, and in most instances advocated the amendment I am now offering.

I now invite the attention of the Senate to page 250 of the record of the hearings, where will be found the testimony of Mr. Milton Kelenson, of the Washington Industrial Union Council, CIO. He had this to say:

I want to very briefly state what our entire program is on the question of taxation for the District of Columbia.

First, we are definitely opposed to the sales tax in all of its forms, completely. However, we do recognize that there is a serious fiscal problem here in the District, and we think it can best be met, first, by enlarging the Federal contribution to the District; second, having a graduated income tax, which would take in many more people than are included today; and third, considering other sources of revenue, such as issuance of bonds to cover capital outlays, and also an increase in tax rates on commercial property.

I would like to go back to the question of the sales tax and point out how it affects our members, the great bulk of whom are in the very low-income brackets here in Washington.

The larger part of our membership is included among the lower-paid Government employees, elevator operators, messengers, workers at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and other low-paid clerks, and people doing custodial work—the lowest-salaried groups in the Government service.

I think the same can be said for most of our affiliates outside the Government. Included are oil workers, brewery workers, porters, people who do the cleaning on the trains at Union Station, in the Transport Service Employees' Union, and several others, where the pay scales are very low.

To these people it would be a tremendous burden if they had to pay a sales tax on the very necessities of life.

I know when we brought some of our Federal workers up here last year, when the pay raise was being considered, we had among them one elevator operator who was the sole support of two boys, aged 14 and 12, and she was not able to afford fresh milk for her boys. They had meat once every 2 weeks, on Sunday. And I know that a sales tax would be a terrific burden upon a Government worker like that; and there are thousands of them right here in the Nation's Capital.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say that I do not like to have erroneous statements placed in the RECORD. The fact of the matter is that the sales tax we are considering does not apply to milk or other food products. So the poor woman referred to in the testimony just read by the Senator from South Carolina would not be affected by the proposal which is now before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I agree that the pending bill does not apply to milk or to meals costing less than $1.50, but it does apply to families of the sort referred to in the portion of the testimony I have just read, for when such families buy needed articles of clothing they will be required to pay the sales tax. So the sales tax will affect them, even though it will not apply to purchases of milk and some other food products.

Mr. President, I read further from the testimony of the same witness:

Because, for instance, even if food were exempted, clothing would be a terrific factor there. And there are other necessities of daily living that would impose a terrific hardship upon these people.

So we find that in his next statement, the witness stated exactly what I have said just now.

I read further from the committee hearings:

I would also like to point out that we have another question to consider here, in the over-all problem of financing the operations of the District of Columbia. We have in our group District school teachers who did not get the $330 increase that the Federal Government classified employees did get last year. We realize that as things stand right now, it is not possible to meet the justified pay increase for the District teachers and for the police, firemen, and other District employees, out of the present revenue. But we think the methods that we propose are the ones that should be used to cover this increase, and all other needed expenditures in the District of Columbia.

At this time I send to the desk several additional amendments, in case the Senate does not adopt my first amendment. The amendments can be designated A, B, or in any other way that is desired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina wish to have the amendments printed and laid on the table?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes; I should like to have them printed, and of course they will automatically go over until tomorrow. That will be satisfactory, because I am planning to rest a little between now and then.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator whether the amendments he has just sent to the desk are all of his amendments; or does he have others to submit?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have submitted several. Of course I shall be glad to have the Senator from West Virginia add his name to them, as cosponsor, if he wishes to do so. They carry out our recommendations, as submitted in the minority report. Would the Senator from West Virginia like to have his name added to them as a cosponsor?

Mr. NEELY. Yes; I should like to have that done.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Then I ask that that be done by the clerks.

Mr. President, I yield the floor at this time.

RECESS

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina has concluded, unless other Senators wish to take the floor, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 10, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 9 (legislative day of April 11), 1949:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

David K. E. Bruce, of Virginia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to France.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 9, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Again, O Lord God, we would remember Thy tender mercies and loving kindnesses. We praise Thee for Thy immortal care, which gives strength to the weak and encouragement to the erring. We praise Thee for the memory of mother, which challenges us to mold our characters after the pattern of her sacrificial life.

Help us to give forth today a message of faith and good cheer, and grant us the courage to labor as we understand. Help us not to think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think, but to think soberly according as Thou hast dealt to every man a measure of faith.

Abide with our President, our Speaker, and the Congress, and be in all their counsels. We pray in the name of Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 5, 1949, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on May 6, 1949, the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by him over the Columbia Broadcasting System on Friday last.

Mr. BREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Mr. Vincent M. Gaughan at Ohio Wesleyan University on Democrat Day, April 28, 1949. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $175, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARMATZ asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include testimony submitted by Mr. D'Alesandro before the Committee on Banking and Currency on May 6.

Mr. CLEMENTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article with relation to the thirtieth anniversary of the flight of the NC–4, and other newspaper articles.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances and include certain statements and excerpts.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include extraneous material.

Mr. MERROW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include an editorial and two resolutions.

Mr. ARENDS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in each a newspaper editorial.

Mr. GRAHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post.

MILITARY AID TO WESTERN EUROPE

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, the Congress will soon be considering the question of enacting legislation for the purpose of implementing the North Atlantic Treaty. The initial cost of an arms assistance program to the nations of the Atlantic community will be between one and two billion dollars. I favor legislation to provide military supplies to the members of the North Atlantic Treaty and will vote for such a measure when it reaches the floor of the House.

It is now generally recognized that European prosperity, solvency, and ability to resist encroachment cannot be accomplished by ECA alone. A sense of security is lacking. We must provide the funds required to make available sufficient military aid to western Europe—aid that will enable the countries to maintain their integrity and to develop the strength capable of resisting a possible armed attack upon them.

We are face to face with the problem of developing greatly increased military strength not only in the United States but also in the countries who are members of the Atlantic treaty. Our safety as well as the safety of all free peoples lies in united and defensive preparations of such magnitude that any potential aggressor will be deterred from the temptation to start a conflict. It is my hope that an adequate program of arms aid to the North Atlantic Treaty nations will soon become a reality. Such action is imperative in maintaining our security.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, this morning the newspapers carry a report of a statement by a Truman administration stalwart in the other body saying that the current economy drive in Congress may touch off a depression. I challenge that statement.

A lot of us so far have said little about present unemployment, the slacking off of business, and the collapse of farm prices because we do not want to contribute to the national difficulty.

However, statements like the one above cannot go unanswered. Everyone should know that excessive and wasteful and extravagant spending by the Federal Government coupled as it must be with increasing taxation is one of the major contributing factors to lack of confidence on the part of consumers and producers alike. That means increasing unemployment and economic stagnation.

It is about time that we begin to understand the effect on employment, business, and agriculture of the Truman administration demands for more spending, more taxes, more socialization, more regimentation, and more control.

If we do have a depression, which certainly I want to avoid, no amount of fantastic economics, buck-passing, or alibiing can hide Truman administration responsibility.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. KEEFE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permisison to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by Mr. Knight, publisher of the Chicago Daily News.

PROSTHETIC APPLIANCES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a statement on the program of a committee on artificial limbs from Canada, Great Britain, and the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to report to the House some very fine work that has been done as a result of $1,000,000 which the House appropriated in the last Congress for research in prosthetic appliances—artificial limbs, legs, eyes, and ears. As a member of General Gray's and Dr. Magnuson's advisory committee on prosthetic appliances, of which Col. Robert Allen is the chairman, I had the privilege of attending a conference at Toronto, Canada, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of last week. This was a meeting of the respective committees of Great Britain, Canada, and the United States. During that conference there was a marked unanimity of thought and desire to work out the best possible prosthetic appliances for the veteran. Behind that thought was the general feeling that in easing the plight of the disabled veteran the general public would be served as well. It was a meeting of distinguished persons of three governments. Represented were those from the official world, the scientific, medical, business, and engineering world, the artificial limb makers, and, most of all, the disabled veterans themselves, who demonstrated their newly perfected appliances. We had an opportunity to observe much of the work accomplished as a result of the research provided by the appropriation of that million dollars. That was done in the United States, Mr. Speaker. If you could see the men walk with their new legs, which have been developed with the help of that research money, and if you could see what has been accomplished in the field of artificial arms, I know the Members would rejoice that the million-dollar appropriation for constructive work has been so successful. We have appropriated so much money for work which in one way has been constructive and yet has been most destructive, that I know you will be glad that this work is entirely constructive. This meeting demonstrated clearly the wisdom of Congress in making the appropriation a continuing annual one, for it must be appreciated that there is much more research and work to be done in this field, especially in artificial arms and hands. Following is a program of the conference:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a petition on statehood for Hawaii.

Mr. HILL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from Hoard's Dairyman.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. JUDD asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances; in one to include an address given by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE] at a rally in New York City on last Thursday on Peace Without Appeasement; and in the other three instances to include an article, an editorial, and a resolution, respectively.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include copy of a letter from Assistant Secretary of the Interior C. Gerard Davidson, to E. M. Weston, president of the Washington State Federation of Labor.

Mr. FORAND asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement submitted to the Ways and Means Committee on the subject of social security by Mr. John Carson.

Mr. SADOWSKI asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include excerpts.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain excerpts of a speech he made in New York City on May 5.

Mr. CROOK asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a table of rates in regard to residence exchange service in cities of 100,000 population and over, notwithstanding the fact that the additional cost will amount to $262.50.

Mr. BONNER asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a report of the Superintendent of the Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, Long Island, made to the Board of Visitors on May 7.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands may hold a session this afternoon during the general debate in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

There was no objection.

COMMEMORATIVE STAMPS

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the attention of the Members of the House to a resolution passed by the Post Office and Civil Service Committee at our last meeting. This resolution states, in effect, the committees will not consider bills providing for commemorative stamps. A similar resolution has been adopted by the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

The selection of commemorative stamps has, with the exception of the last Congress, been handled by the Postmasters General under their general authority to issue stamps. In the more than 50 years since the first commemorative stamp was issued in 1892, in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America, Postmasters General have carried out this responsibility fairly and satisfactorily. The many meritorious subjects on which bills for stamps have been introduced have been brought to the attention of the Postmaster General for his consideration when making up the commemorative-stamp program for this year and next year.

I may say that so far there have been introduced by Members of the House 73 bills or resolutions calling for commemorative stamps. All of them are deserving and meritorious. It is only practical or feasible for the Post Office Department and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to get out about 12 commemorative-stamp issues per year. Your committee does not feel like taking the responsibility of choosing 10 or 12 issues out of the 73 stamp bills that have been introduced by Members of the House. For that reason we have adopted the following resolution:

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives hereby agrees not to consider any pending bill or resolution or any that may be introduced in the Eighty-first Congress providing for the issuance of commemorative stamps.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

THE PRESIDENT'S SIXTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Members will all join with me in extending felicitations to the Chief Executive of the United States, who celebrated his sixty-fifth birthday on yesterday. I am sure the Members of the House on both sides of the aisle will join me in wishing him a very, very happy birthday. Certainly all of you will agree with me that we are mighty fortunate that the report of his physician discloses that the President up until this minute is enjoying the finest of health. When we consider the responsibilities and burdens that are placed upon the shoulders of the Chief Executive, then certainly we are fortunate in finding that he is enjoying good health up to this point. There is only one answer to that; that is, that he comes from good, sturdy Missouri stock.

I sincerely hope that the good Lord will continue to give him good health so that he may continue to serve the United States for many years to come.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a bill which he introduced.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the New York Times.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech made last Saturday by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIS] before the State Young Republican Club at Portage, Wis.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two separate instances.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

[Mr. McCORMACK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this morning I read in the press that the chairman of the Democratic National Committee yesterday bluntly said: "A Dixiecrat has no future in the Democrat Party."

That latest statement tells the Nation not only how badly split the so-called Democrat Party is, but reveals the dual personality which marks the speeches of spokesmen for that party today.

Only 10 days ago the President was quoted on this floor as saying in a press conference that the way Members voted on the administration's labor bill would measure their eligibility to receive patronage.

That brought from the distinguished majority leader a remark to the effect that Dixiecrats should remember they were holding their position in the party by sufferance. Then came Mr. Truman's statement that Members of Congress should vote as their conscience guides them. That might have cloaked party pronouncements except for Mr. McGRATH'S statement yesterday that jobs should be awarded on the basis "of the appointee's record and an estimate of his future value to the party" coupled with the statement that there is "no" future value to the party in a Democrat who will not go along with the party platform, and that on that basis "a Dixiecrat has no future in the Democrat Party."

Mr. Speaker, this kind of double talk endorses codes of conduct which cannot be reconciled. They certainly do not contribute to the statesmanship stature of the man from Missouri. They indicate that the Democratic national chairman has bowed to the lash of the patronage whip. In effect, this line of double talk says that the loyal followers of the President can have a conscience only when it belongs to him.

POPE PIUS BLASTS CAPITALISM

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have never seen anything in public print that distressed me so greatly as a news item bearing a Rome date line and carried in the Washington Post on its front page yesterday.

Referring to an interview that the Pope had with a group of European businessmen, the statement said:

The Pontiff's words coincided with publication of a fierce denunciation of capitalism in the Vatican's daily newspaper.

The Vatican paper said that communism shorn of its atheism would be less un-Christian than capitalism.

Mr. Speaker, if this publication represents the views of the Pope, then the great work he has done in opposition to the spread of communism has been entirely canceled out. If this statement represents the views of the Pope, then millions of kind-hearted and right-intentioned people have been brought down to the threshold of the quicksands of Marxism.

Mr. Speaker, this statement is both a private and a public wound. I feel baregnawn, and I know that the public must feel canker-bit.

I regret the necessity of having to make this statement. I never made one that I regretted more.

Mr. Speaker, the stand that the Catholic Church has taken between a peace-loving world and the agents of Moscow has brought down upon it much abuse, but up until now the church has given no ground, and I trust that no representative of this great church will ever indicate a willingness to treat for terms of peace with these Communist agents from hell.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NORBLAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I just want to say in reply to the gentleman from South Dakota that a Rhode Island red is not going to rule the roost so far as the southern Democrats are concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

DECENNIAL CENSUS OF HOUSING

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 189 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of th Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2203) to provide for a decennial census of housing. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

DECENNIAL CENSUS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order consideration of the bill (H. R. 2203) to provide for a decennial census of housing in conjunction with the regular census. This census provides a method of properly showing the number and geographical distribution of dwelling structures and units owned and rented in the United States. It will include the utilities and equipment in the dwellings. The census will also include statistics with respect to the veterans, and the cost of this census will be about $15,000,000.

CENSUS AID TO HOUSING PROBLEM

Mr. Speaker, we all recognize the great shortage of housing. We know that the ex-servicemen—the veterans—have been unable to obtain housing or living quarters for themselves and their loved ones so that they can live respectably and decently. This situation is due to the fact that Congress, when President Roosevelt in 1940 and 1941 urged appropriations for housing to relieve the shortage then existing, did not approve his recommendation. It was a majority of the private builders, contractors, and real-estate operators who succeeded in influencing Congress and brought about a coalition—the same coalition that exists today between the Republicans and some reactionary Democrats who call themselves Dixiecrats. The coalition during the time when Nathan Straus headed the housing agency was also responsible for the defeat of the housing bill, and had the bill passed when construction costs were cheaper, the housing shortage that exists today would have been virtually eliminated. Many of us at that time urged and defended that legislation. It was the failure to pass that legislation which resulted in lack of proper housing accommodations, the building of which would bring about conditions that would inure to the benefit of not only the ex-servicemen but of the American people as a whole. I feel that notwithstanding the fact that we heard a great deal from time to time from gentlemen on the floor and in the newspapers about the shortage of housing, this census will clearly demonstrate the unfortunate conditions and actual facts that exist in the United States, and that something must be done to remedy it. Of course, time has gone by. This census will be taken in conjunction with the regular census next year. The House and the country will not get that report until June 1950, so I have been informed. But in the meantime, I believe this census will have a wholesome effect and will aid in bringing about early action on the housing bill now pending in the other body. I am hopeful that this census will expedite the passage of much-needed slum clearance and low-income housing legislation.

Nevertheless, I hope that it will have a constructive effect upon the country, and that it will bring about relief to deserving men—relief to which they are entitled. Consequently I feel that this bill which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service should be adopted.

PRESIDENT LEADS IN BENEFICIAL LEGISLATION

I hope that in the future, when legislation will be recommended by the President, it will be approved, because the President at all times has really more facts than we individuals possibly can have and because he receives his reports from men all over the United States whose duty it is to keep him informed.

Of course I realize that some of these people do not always inform him correctly, and sometimes they fail to report on conditions that actually exist. Notwithstanding that fact, I hope that when this bill is passed it will to some extent expedite, as I said before, the passage of the housing bill now pending, and that we will in the future recognize that the recommendations of the President are always in the interest of the entire Nation and not sectional.

POLITICAL IMPORT OF REPUBLICAN SPEECHES

And now I wish to answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]. Of course, I differ with my colleage the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], who made a speech a little while ago criticizing the President. It is easy to criticize and find fault, but every sincere and well-informed individual must admit, whether he is opposed to the President politically or not, that he aims to do everything and anything within his power to help the extant situation. Our President has clearly demonstrated that he has the interests of the country and the people at heart. Mr. HALLECK'S criticism reminds me of the old saying, "But for the grace of God, there go I."

Certainly, it is not the President's fault that some of the legislation that he has recommended has not passed, but I hope that in the future people will insist upon Congress' passing legislation that he has recommended and urged.

ENORMOUS PROFITS OF BIG BUSINESS

Personally, I disagree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] that conditions are not favorable in this country. I read last night in the New York Times, and also read in the monthly statement of the National City Bank of New York, that business has succeeded in earning more in 1948 than it did in the palmy days of 1946 and 1947, and that business in the first quarter of 1949 is in many respects better than in 1948. The New York Times of May 8, 1949, carried the following substantiating report:

INDUSTRIES SET 1948 EARNINGS MARK—$6,537,963,951 BY 815 CONCERNS

(By C. M. Reckert)

American industrial manufacturers last year passed a fantastic production and earnings milestone. The gradual adjustments in output, demand, and prices in the last 6 months from the sharp financial distortions of and following the war, will be reflected in substantially lower earnings for 1949. The extent of the decline will depend on the international situation, Government expenditures and policies affecting taxes, employment, and world trade. A few industries will continue at a sustained high level, but the majority will have a more checkered career.

While the economic atmosphere may be clouded by uncertainty and caution, favorable characteristics of this leveling-off period are the strong working capital position of companies and the high purchasing power of the Nation. Companies generally are reducing inventories and making only short-term commitments during the adjustment to lower prices, while buyers are holding out for price cuts induced by competitive conditions.

The total net income of 815 companies included in the survey of 70 manufacturing fields came to a record $6,537,963,951 in 1948. This exceeded their previous peak returns of $5,190,222,641 in 1947 by 26 percent. Largely responsible for the over-all improvement was the vast demand for products at higher prices which since have reached a saturation point.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not encumber the RECORD with the complete statistics covering the profits of these 518 companies, but for the information of the House I insert the comparative figures of 1948 and 1947 of several of our leading industries:

	1948	1947
Steel, machinery, railroad equipment, etc	$1,082,869,041	$840,887,474
Mining and petroleum	2,063,906,481	1,451,145,439
Chemicals, paper, glass, newsprint	750,203,640	672,167,174
Automobile, tires, aviation, shipbuilding	887,955,058	616,301,364
Furniture, household supplies, building materials, radio, etc	950,308,489	916,136,849

In addition, may I say to my friend, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] that the hue and cry about unemployment comes from those who are trying, it seems to me, to scare American labor, and the people of our country. We have today about 2,000,000 unemployed, but you will always find that number and twice that number in most normal times due to the turn-over in positions, illness, and because of people who for one reason or another are trying to improve their status and condition in life.

EMPLOYMENT ON THE INCREASE

I am satisfied with the record. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] has observed yesterday's newspaper showing a report published in the financial and commercial section of the New York Times, and other reports, he will find that employment has been on the increase in the last 2 months. I hope that the people of the United States will continue to be employed and that the wages which they are receiving in many instances will be increased so that they can exist, always bearing in mind the high cost of living.

FARM PRICES STILL ABOVE PARITY

Oh yes, farm prices received for farm products, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] stated, have gone down some—yes, by 1½ percent or 2 percent. But they are still above parity. The consumer has not really derived much benefit as yet, but I hope they will because the prices that the consumers are obliged to pay for meat, milk, butter, eggs, and in fact all the necessaries of life, are still much higher than conditions justify. Still, I have always been in favor of the farmers making a fair living and a fair profit and being well compensated for their services.

WAGES OF WORKERS INADEQUATE

On the other hand, the man who makes the farmer's business possible by building the required farm machinery and tools and which helps to increase production and reduce the cost of farming, is entitled to fair compensation even though he resides in the cities and industrial sections. I hope that these people will not be in the unfortunate position of having to skimp so as to be able to get along on a meager salary, especially in view of the fact that the report in the New York Times that I have inserted indicates that industries last year made net over $7,000,000,000. I want to make a correction in my remarks. I should have said that the earnings were not $7,000,000,000 but only $6,537,963,951, and that is only by 815 concerns. These are not my figures. These figures were carefully prepared by Mr. C. M. Reckert, of the New York Times.

Consequently, I hope that the minimum wage bill now pending in committee, will be enacted shortly.

Naturally, the workers feel that they are entitled to a fair compensation. In spite of the Taft-Hartley Act, we have had some strikes. We were promised that that law would eliminate strikes, but it does not.

FACTS BELIE RECESSION

Taking everything into consideration, I hope that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] and our other colleagues, will not try from time to time, to indirectly call attention to the alleged fact that we might have a recession in business. Every well-informed economist, every financier who knows about the existing conditions, is confident that there will be no recession, notwithstanding the fact that a few manipulators and speculators would like to bring that about. But it will not happen, because the Administration under the leadership of President Truman, is watching closely and will offset anything that they possibly may try to do to bring about a recession. I have the utmost confidence that we will continue to be prosperous. Perhaps some of the corporations will not make three or four or five hundred percent profit, and perhaps the farmers may have to be satisfied with a little less price, but still they will make more money than ever before. But it has always been that way under a Democratic Administration, which has always safeguarded, protected and led the country to prosperity and better times.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a few of those articles that I have on this subject.

I reserve the balance of my time, and I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague [Mr. ALLEN].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. No. I regret that I cannot yield to my colleague for I feel that he cannot enlighten me in any way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

I was very sorry that my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], did not discuss the proposed rule, but proceeded to berate the able gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]. If I had been the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] I would have explained something about this bill, something that is before us for consideration. In the report and everywhere, they insist how urgent and how acute the housing shortage is. All the testimony before the committee emphasized how much this information on housing is needed. Then they proceed to wait until the election of the year 1950 to take this census, to take care of this acute emergency. They are not doing it now, but they are going to do it next fall, the fall of 1950, an election year, when they will hire hundreds and hundreds of snoopers running around this country on the taxpayers' pay roll. In other words, next fall, next September, if you please, there will be one group of snoopers running around the country taking a population census. Next fall, in September, there will be thousands running around at several hundred dollars a month, just before election, taking the agricultural census.

Now, we come here today and we find the gentleman from Illinois and others emphasizing how important it is that this census be taken. We want to do so much for the veterans, but unfortunately we want to do more for them in about September 1950, just before the election than we do in May or June 1949.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I believe this legislation, if passed, will aid in bringing about the legislation that is pending, the housing legislation. As to a separate census, this will be taken in conjunction with the regular census. It will cost the country less money. We desire to save everything we can, and that is the reason we did not feel it should be taken now but should be taken in conjunction with the regular census, for which our Constitution provides.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes. I know what it is being taken in conjunction with. About 25,000 or 30,000 snoopers running around the country a couple of months before election, receiving high wages to talk New Deal politics. That is what it will be in conjunction with.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. We just passed a bill in this House appropriating around $48,000,000, which is a part of the $70,000,000 to take the decennial census, the population and agricultural censuses.

We were told by Mr. Capt, Director of the Census, that he would employ approximately 140,000 people to take that census beginning in 1950. Would the gentleman tell the House how many more employees are to be added because of the housing census which is to be taken in conjunction with the decennial census, and how much additional money it will cost above the $70,000,000 requested by the Census Bureau?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Answering the gentleman I may say that the general population census is but one; there will be three groups of snoopers all working separately a few months before the election in 1950: One group to take the population census, one group to take the agricultural census, and a third group to take the housing census. This will be at a total cost of $85,000,000 for all these censuses. It seems to me we could much better and more effectively use this $85,000,000 to build houses for the veterans than to send snoopers around the country just before election.

There are now six agencies working on the housing census, and now it is proposed to add a seventh agency under this bill. We might much better spend the money building houses for the veterans.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Did the gentleman take into consideration the number of people and the amount entailed in the business census which is being taken separately?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I may say to the gentleman from Nebraska that nearly all of this money will be used for payrollers. There is not much expense involved in the way of equipment and material. Of this $85,000,000, probably $82,000,000 will go for snoopers' salaries throughout the country just before election.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman mentioned the figure of $85,000,000 as the cost of the decennial census for population. Agriculture is $10,000,000——

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. This is $15,000,000 more.

Mr. STEFAN. This will be $15,000,000 in addition; and then there is the additional business census that is now being taken.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I would say that it would probably take $15,000,000 for that also.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was exercised over the relief question. I assume he means political relief. It seems to me what he is most concerned with is relief of these snoopers who will be added to the pay roll by this bill to the extent of an additional $15,000,000. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois who has kindly yielded to me, that we could much better use the money for building houses for veterans instead of for this political pap, as I choose to call it.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. If the gentleman will yield further, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] another question: He proceeded throughout his remarks to attack the sincerity of the gentleman from Indiana who has temporarily been called from the floor. I wish to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that the gentleman from Indiana was not only sincere but entirely accurate in the remarks he made this morning on the floor? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] questioned the sincerity of the gentleman from Indiana. Does not the gentleman from Illinois believe that the gentleman from Indiana was sincere and accurate in every word he said? I do.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] will permit me to answer, perhaps the gentleman from Indiana may have been sincere, but he did not have the facts and did not give the facts that exist.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] certainly did not give the facts.

Mr. SABATH. I have reports from reliable sources that business during the last quarter, this first quarter of this year, is better than it was in 1948.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In regard to that let me say——

Mr. SABATH. All right; I will put it in the RECORD for the gentleman.

This article was published in the Chicago Sun-Times on May 7, 1949:

FIRST-QUARTER EARNINGS BETTER THAN EXPECTED

American industry, as gaged by earnings, showed up better in the first quarter of 1949 than was anticipated, according to the National City Bank of New York.

In its monthly letter on economic conditions, the bank said 500 corporations reported an increase in composite net income of 6 percent over the first quarter of 1948. The corporations were listed in 19 different industry groups.

The total net income, however, was 18 percent below that of the final quarter of 1948.

The latest quarter's increase over the like period last year resulted chiefly from gains reported by 48 automobile and truck makers and steel companies, the letter said.

Even with those companies excluded, however, the remaining 452 companies' earnings came within 8 percent of the level of the first 3 months of 1948.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Anybody with the slightest familiarity with business and business management can see from the signs and events of the past several months that there is a recession coming on; and I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that if this administration does not stop legislation like the socialization of medicine and the other socialistic schemes they have up their sleeves they are going to have a real depression rather than a recession. They will have it if they try to bleed more taxes from the people to the tune of $4,000,000,000. It will not be prevented, nor will it be cured by adding another group of snoopers to the three already provided for. You will have three men asking questions instead of one man asking them: Three separate men will go to a farmer. The first will ask him how many people are in his family; the other will ask him how much he makes on this farm; and the third will ask him if he has a house or if he needs lumber. Keep on with this sort, and you certainly will have not a recession but a depression.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I know the gentleman desires to be correct.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I may say that the population census, the agricultural census, and the housing census will all be taken by one individual; there will not be three groups. Certainly this thing is not inspired in any part by politics; and as evidence of that, let me say that the American Legion passed a resolution at the national convention in Miami last fall asking for this census. They were the sponsors of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Here is a statement taken from your own report. It states that hearings were conducted and that "their testimony demonstrates the necessity for obtaining accurate and reliable housing information, particularly at the present time when our country is faced with a critical housing shortage."

You say here "at the present time." This is to be taken in September 1950. Is it going to be so critical then?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. As the gentleman well knows, we have been taking a general population census in this country since 1850, for 100 years. In 1940, 10 years ago, we took a population census, an agricultural census, and a business census. I do not see why there is so much fury being raised about this proposition when the housing situation is so acute and so critical now.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Does the gentleman contend that the housing situation is critical now?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Certainly I do.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. If it is so critical, why wait until 1950?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. If we took a housing census now, it will entail an additional expense. We are trying to hold down the cost. That is why the housing census would be taken in conjunction with the population and agricultural census by the same enumerators.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Does the gentleman know that this present acute situation will be in existence 2 months before the next election? Maybe we will not need it in September and October 1950.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I may say to the gentleman that this census of population, agriculture, and housing will start in January 1950 and will be completed before the summer is over.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if these statistics we have had on housing are up in the air. We ought to know about that, because we have been told how many people have beeen doubling up and how many houses we lack for the last 3 years. Either somebody has been lying to these committees or they had not had the right information.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. There are six agencies now, the members of which are drawing big salaries, six different separate units trying to get housing information. If they would use some of the money with which they are paying the salaries to clear up housing it would be much better.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I am particularly impressed with language that appears on page 2, lines 6 to 9 reading as follows:

The Director of the Census is authorized to collect such supplementary statistics (either in advance of or after the taking of such census) as are necessary to the completion thereof.

Is that not a very broad charter?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It is very broad.

Mr. HALE. Does not the gentleman think that would authorize the Director of the Census to go on spending money indefinitely?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It appears that way to me.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JONAS. The gentleman made reference to the fact that five or six agencies were making an over-all survey in reference to housing conditions. Is it not true that in the State of Illinois for about 2 years we have had an agency in connection with Chicago and the balance of the State making a complete survey of the housing situation in Illinois and is this not a duplication and a going over of what we have already paid for out of the treasury of the State, merely a duplication of work already done?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am in accord with the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I fully appreciate my colleague is familiar with our Constitution but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] seems to forget that there is such a thing as a Constitution that provides a census shall be taken every 10 years. This will require only one more line in the report and questionnaire which will be made by these census takers. That is all there is to it. There will not be two or three different enumerators, it will be done by one person.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I understand about the election year. There probably will not be anybody on the pay roll, according to the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Forget about the pay roll and politics.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I say, there probably will not be.

Mr. SABATH. I am amazed at the gentleman.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman, in conclusion, I think it is about time that this Congress start cutting down some of these expenses right now. With our national income the biggest in history, with high tax rates, we are still going to go in the red this year, even though our national income will probably be at least the first or second biggest in the entire history of the United States. We owe over $250,000,000,000. Now, that is more than the total assessed valuation—I say "assessed valuation"—of all the property west of the Mississippi River. But still, here, with the biggest income in history, this Eighty-first Congress is going to go in the red by several billion dollars. So I say, perhaps, we better try to stop some of these expenditures.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYLE].

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was first called to the attention of the Committee on Rules it occurred to me that it was an approach that for a housing census that would probably save a great deal of money if incorporated in the regular census. As I understood at the time, it was not contemplated that more employees would be used but that the additional information would be secured by the regular enumerator. When my delightful friend, the former chairman of the Committee on Rules, was discussing this matter, I could not tell whether he was calling the proposed employees snoopers or doopers. I assume he meant they were snoopers. If the Republican Party had won control of the Presidency and of the Congress for this year, I wonder if they would also have been snoopers, because you certainly would have had the same type of census taken. I think the only difference would have been that they would have been Republican snoopers instead of Democratic snoopers.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The gentleman may have something there.

Mr. LYLE. In all sincerity, I think this is a very good approach to the problem of a housing census—it is essential that we know about our housing conditions in this country. The questions, I think, that are contemplated to be asked are whether or not the people own the home, what the facilities are there, and so forth, and it will take only a few seconds longer than it would to ask them about the number of people living there.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Then why should it take $15,000,000 if they are just going to ask one more question? This is 25 percent as much as the other bill for the whole agricultural set-up.

Mr. LYLE. I am very pleased that the gentleman asked that question. I think that is a mistake; I think that it will cost but little if any additional money. The estimate is likely based on a cost accounting system. As you know, in the Post Office Department, for instance, they say that a first-class letter costs so much and a parcel-post package costs so much and a seed catalog will cost so much, but that is all figured on a cost accounting system. In my judgment—and I called this to the attention of the committee when they were considering it—that the estimated cost is high and purely speculative. Perhaps it will take a few seconds longer for each enumerator and consequently a few weeks longer.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am sure, if the gentleman would offer an amendment compelling them to take both census by the same individuals, that it would have support over here. What we are fearful of here is that we are going to have two or three different groups. If the gentleman will put in the bill that it can be taken along with the census of the general population, I am sure he will have nearly unanimous support on this side.

Mr. LYLE. If the Bureau is going to take three different groups and make three different surveys, I will oppose it, too, because that would be a very foolish thing.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. The bill states that this census shall be taken in conjunction with, at the same time, and as a part of the population inquiry of the decennial census.

Mr. LYLE. That is my understanding of the bill.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I have two children, both veterans. They both live with me when they are home. If they were asked the question, "Do they own the house?" they would say "No." But they do own the house; that is, my house is their house. These two children of mine will be doubled up with their father and mother on this census proposition, will they not?

Mr. LYLE. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON. That is what I am afraid of. You will not get an accurate picture of housing, because those two children are just as welcome in the house today, after they have attained their majority, as they were when they were 1 or 2 years old.

Mr. LYLE. I think the gentleman is very fortunate to have them with him. I hope I can keep my little daughter with me for a long time. Nevertheless, I think this bill will give us a needed picture of housing, and will cost very little more money than if we left it out altogether. It will take only a few minutes per home if the matter is intelligently handled, and we must assume, of course, that the people we employ will not be partisan but will be interested in the job they are doing.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. I am interested in the gentleman's statement that he hopes it will cost very little money. The chairman of the committee said this work would be done at the same time as the taking of the population census, but an additional cost of $15,000,000 is contemplated, according to the committee report. How does the gentleman reconcile that statement with the fact that there is this $15,000,000 additional cost? I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] is concerned with the "duper" part. The "duper" part is duping the taxpayers. With respect to the $15,000,000, I wonder why that amount will be necessary, if it is merely a question of adding another line to the report and so forth.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CHURCH) there were—ayes 36, noes 2.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2203) to provide for a decennial census of housing.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2203, with Mr. LYLE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, H. R. 2203, provides for a much needed census of housing in the year 1950, to be taken in conjunction with the population and agriculture census.

This bill, which was unanimously approved by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, authorizes and directs the Director of the Census to take a census of housing in each State, the District of Columbia and the possessions of the United States in the year 1950. The statistics derived from the housing census are to show the number, characteristics, including utilities and equipment, and the geographical distribution of owned and rented housing.

In addition, the bill provides that the statistics with respect to veterans of World War II shall be shown separately.

Extensive hearings were conducted by our committee, and representatives of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Bureau of the Census, veterans' organizations and the housing industry appeared in support of the measure. Their testimony demonstrates the pressing need for obtaining accurate and reliable housing information, particularly at the present time when our country is faced with a critical housing shortage.

It is clear that a complete census of housing as provided for by the bill is important to National, State, and local agencies in determining the magnitude and nature of the housing problem and also in determining action to be taken to meet that problem.

The statistics secured by this census of housing will be of value to the large number of small businessmen in the housing industry who depend upon such information from the Bureau of the Census to locate new markets for their products and services.

A census of housing was conducted for the first time in connection with the general population census in 1940. Today the statistics of the 1940 census, which incidentally was the only complete housing census ever taken in our country, are out of date. New statistics must be secured so that we may take inventory of the housing situation in the light of existing conditions.

The question of housing and its adequacy is of vital concern to the Nation. The fact that home-building construction was suspended during World War II and that our population was disclocated during and after the war presented a problem of extreme importance, not only to the housing industry but to the Government's program of encouraging the construction of housing units where they are needed.

Officials of the Bureau of the Census estimate that the census of housing authorized by this bill will cost the Federal Government about $15,000,000. However, this item has been included in the President's budget for fiscal year 1950, and in my judgment is fully justified by the need for a housing census which was clearly demonstrated to our committee.

At the present time, Congress has authorized decennial censuses of population, agriculture, irrigation and drainage, Government revenues and expenditures, and religious groups. In addition, it has authorized quinquennial censuses of business, minerals, industry, transportation, and manufacturing. I believe that at the present time the necessity for a 1950 housing census is equal to the need for the censuses which I have enumerated. I urge the Members of the House to support this bill.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has the unanimous support and endorsement of all the veterans organizations. The representatives of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans and the American Veterans Committee appeared before our committee in behalf of the enactment of this legislation. This bill is also supported by the National Association of Home Builders, the Building Products Institute, the United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the United States Savings and Loan League, and the Mortgage Bankers Association. These concerns had representatives before our committee in behalf of the measure. There also appeared before the committee representatives of the Bureau of the Census and the Housing and Home Finance Agency supporting the bill. This census is of great importance to the planning, construction, financing, and management of housing. The census data on the size, quality, and general characteristics of housing is essential to Federal, State, and local agencies. Such information is of importance to the housing industry and business engaged in housing equipment and housing appliances who sell various utilities of all kinds to houses.

As I have already stated, this bill has the unanimous support of the entire committee. There was first a subcommittee of seven appointed to hold hearings on this bill. On my left is the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] the former chairman of our committee. There were two other members of the minority party on this subcommittee. We had extensive hearings on the bill. I am surprised to hear some say that there are any politics involved in this bill. As I have already said, this bill was sent to me by the American Legion. Mr. John Thomas Taylor, the national representative of the Legion, sent the bill to me and asked me if I would introduce it since the bill carried out a resolution adopted by the National Convention of the American Legion last October at its meeting in Miami, Fla.

So I introduced the bill. I had no partisan politics in introducing this bill. Politics did not enter the minds of any member of the committee in considering this bill. This bill has been sponsored by the veterans' organizations and it has the backing of the Government agencies involved, and also the representatives of the housing industry and the building industry and the mortgage associations of our country.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we all realize that to take a census is a very good thing for the country, but will the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, state for the RECORD, so we will have it, just what the qualifications are of those who are going to take the census, and who appoints them?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I may say to the gentleman that I have no control over the appointment of the supervisors or the enumerators. As you know, they are appointed by the Director of the Bureau of the Census.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will they have a civil-service rating?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I understand not.

Mr. JOHNSON. So that the supervisors, then, are the ones who appoint the enumerators in the local areas?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. And who appoints the supervisors?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. They are appointed by the Director of the Census, as I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is he under civil-service rules?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. No. The supervisors meet certain tests and qualifications prescribed by the Bureau of the Census, but, naturally, there would not be time to hold extensive open competitive civil-service examinations for the selection of supervisors.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, would the gentleman, or some member of the committee, place in the RECORD the regulations that the supervisors of the census have, that govern them in picking these enumerators? We would just like to know how they are being picked out, so that we may expect that they will be good personnel and will do a good job and will refrain from mixing partisan politics in their work.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Yes; I will be glad to request the Director of the Census to furnish that information, and I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. GOLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GOLDEN. Is it not true that before our committee it was made very clear that the census on housing would be taken at the same time and by the same persons who take the census on the general population?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kentucky, who is a valuable member of our committee, is absolutely correct. The same enumerators will take the population, agricultural, and housing censuses.

Mr. GOLDEN. Was it not brought out in the committee that this necessary information would be of vital interest to the industries of America?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. GOLDEN. And all businesses which are engaged in housing?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two additional minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think perhaps it might be wise, just in order that the record may be clarified, to ask at this point if it is not a fact that from the beginning of the taking of all censuses the census supervisors and enumerators have been appointed as political patronage, and that supervisors are appointed upon political recommendations? It has been done by both parties, according to which party is in power. I might say that as far as I am personally concerned, I rather suspect and expect that the supervisors of the coming census will be members of the majority party. They will be appointed as political patronage, and I do not expect to be consulted in my district as to who the enumerators or the supervisors will be. We might as well have the record clear and frank.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from Ohio has given a very clear and frank picture with regard to the selection of enumerators and supervisors.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I sit on the Committee on Banking and Currency. We have had the Bureau of the Census and the Bureau of Labor tell us for the last 3 years just how many veterans were out of homes and how many were doubled up. Are those figures wrong?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I will say that those figures are just guesses or estimates, and not based upon real figures, because there has been no complete housing census taken in this country since 1940.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. As I understand it, in 1946, when these housing measures and rent-control measures came before the committee, we were supposed to take those figures as being correct.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I may say to the gentleman that they took certain sample censuses in a few sections of the country and used them as a base for their entire calculation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. This is the situation, is it not: That these supervisors and enumerators will not be covered by the Hatch Act? Is not that correct?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I may say to the gentleman that it probably would be, but I will also say that the work of these enumerators and supervisors will be completed long before we get into the fall election of 1950; these enumerators will start their work after the first of next year, in January. They will have their work finished by the middle or end of summer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman tell us what was the cost of the last census? And will he explain why we have the total of $15,000,000 for this one purpose which brings the total cost up to $85,000,000? What was the cost of taking the last census?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. The cost of the last census, as I remember, was about $42,000,000; and the cost of the housing census was about $7,000,000.

Mr. CHURCH. That is $49,000,000, and now the complaint comes that costs are doubling for this admittedly political pap bill, as I call it, doubling.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. This is the first time I ever heard anyone charge that the taking of the decennial census was a political matter. We have been taking the census of the population every 10 years since 1800 regardless of whether Republicans were in power or Democrats; and certainly it should not be charged that this is a Democratic partisan matter this year.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman please tell me why there is a doubling of cost?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Because probably it will cost more in 1950 than it did in 1940. Living costs have increased and salaries have increased.

The figure $15,000,000 for the census this year was recommended in the President's budget. He sent up the figure $15,000,000 through the Budget. That is why this figure is here. Personally, I do not believe it will cost anything like that much because we are going to have the same enumerators who take the population census ask a few questions about housing.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of California. Before this money is made available it will have to be provided by the Committee on Appropriations, will it not?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Yes; of course our committee has no right to do other than authorize that certain things be done.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. CAMP. I wish to know if the gentleman's committee has discussed with any of the census officials the question of whether or not these different censuses will be taken by the sampling method or by the genuine old-fashioned house-to-house canvass?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. This census will be taken by the old method of house-to-house, person-to-person canvass by enumerators.

Mr. CAMP. And no sampling will be considered in this particular census?

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Absolutely not. I may say to the Members that if there ever was a need for information about housing conditions it is now. We know the plight of the World War II veterans, that they cannot secure homes. It seems to me there should be no opposition to this bill, because it is highly deserving not only in the interest of the veterans but also in the interest of the entire home-building industry and every industry connected with the construction and building of houses.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us, as the distinguished chairman of our committee has stated, has the approval of all members of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House. I agree there have been too many duplications of census during the past few years. In fact there have been too many duplications of other activities, and, as our distinguished chairman has stated, this is one census where we expect to actually count all of the houses and those who reside therein, thereby securing as accurately and definitely as can be information with regard to the housing situation.

It might be interesting to note that a number of agencies have been taking various kinds of censuses on housing. As the distinguished gentleman from Illinois said awhile ago, the State of Illinois has taken a census in Chicago and in other large cities of Illinois. The Housing Expediter has been taking a census of housing in some instances. Then the Housing and Home Finance Agency has also been taking a housing census. The Department of Agriculture has been taking a census of houses on farms. The Veterans' Administration has a housing unit and has also taken a census.

You may also be interested to know there is a bill dealing with housing in another body that contains a provision for taking a housing census. I am not sure just what the status of that bill is at the present time. However, it is my hope and the hope of a great many others that once and for all we can take one housing census and prevent the excuse of any other agency than the Census Bureau taking a census as provided in this bill.

If properly administered, this measure should save millions of dollars for the taxpayers because the taking of this census ought to prevent and preclude any other agency taking a census of any kind on housing. It should be added that censuses taken by other agencies are incomplete and are what may be described as spot check or sampling.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. These censuses that have been taken have all been taken by the so-called sampling method, which is a hit-and-miss proposition and is not very much better than a good guess.

Mr. REES. I am sure the gentleman is correct. They have been done through the sampling method. Some of them have been rather accurate; many of them quite inaccurate.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Of course, we all know that every community has a housing authority and they have housing commissions. Every veterans' organization has a housing committee to determine the needs of the veterans. They have all of that information already. Is that not true?

Mr. REES. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In other words, in every community they can tell you how many permits have been granted during the past year or past month. They have all of this information. So I say this is a real pork barrel in its real form. There is no need for it. A private firm could go out and get the information for practically $1,000,000 and get it more accurately because they understand how to get it. Why do they not have the census now if it is so important? Why do they wait until election time if they need it now? Do you not think we are more apt to need it now than 18 months from the present time?

Mr. REES. I agree it would be better if we could have the information now. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SADATH], suggested that we ought to have it before considering the housing bill that is presently in committee. I want to remind the gentleman, however, this is part of the regular census that is taken every 10 years. If you take this census separate and apart from the regular 1950 census it would cost a tremendous amount of money. In my opinion, the amount of $15,600,000 estimated in the President's budget is too much. I do not think it will cost nearly that much.

This census on housing in 1940 cost, according to the figures submitted to me, about $7,000,000, and the entire bill in 1940 was $42,971,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself eight additional minutes.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. How would the gentleman explain that; a double jump?

Mr. REES. Well, as I just stated, I think the amount estimated is too much. But that is an estimate, and it will be for the Committee on Appropriations to determine how much they are going to allow for this service. Fifteen million dollars is not a figure that this committee is proposing. There is no amount authorized in this bill. I am sure the distinguished chairman of our committee will agree that $15,000,000 is too much. I hope the distinguished gentleman from Illinois will submit his views to the House Committee on Appropriations to hold this particular item in line when this appropriation is considered. I think it ought to be stated to this committee, again, that this is just a part of the regular census that will begin in January 1950. I hope taking of the census will be out of the way long before fall. I have no control over that any more than the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

In all probability, since the majority party in power is Democratic, that they will have the opportunity to select the enumerators. We hope that they will all be well qualified. I would like to suggest an amendment that would give disabled qualified veterans first preference for jobs as enumerators. Other veterans who apply would have next preference before other people are selected. I understand such amendment would be germane to the bill. I see no reason, however, why there should be any opposition to such proposal. In other words, I think the Census Bureau, in selecting enumerators, should as nearly as possible follow the Veterans' Preference Act. It would be most helpful if they would also appoint, where feasible, persons who have qualified under civil service but not properly employed. Such procedure will take it out of politics to some extent and it is the fair thing to do.

This bill does have the support not only of the Director of the Home Finance Agency, and others, but also has the support of the United States Savings and Loan League, whose representative appeared before our committee. It has the support of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America. It has the support of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. It has the support of all veterans' organizations, and it is one piece of legislation before the House, so far as I know, that has not very great opposition. The bill ought to be passed. I agree with others here, that we ought to keep the cost to a minimum. I believe it can be done. I do not go along with the gentleman from Illinois that you can ask for all of this information in one question. I did ask the Director of the Bureau of Census, Mr. Capt, approximately how many questions would be asked. He said he did not believe more than 20 at the outside. The cost of the bill was reduced considerably by our committee to provide that questions concerning housing of veterans will relate to veterans of World War II. This for the reason that complaint on behalf of housing for veterans is nearly all on behalf of those of World War II.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. I am very much interested in the gentleman's willingness to advocate a lesser figure than $15,000,000. Let me ask the gentleman, was not that the figure placed in the present budget at a time when it was expected to be a separate project?

Mr. REES. I believe such estimate is in the budget.

Mr. CHURCH. And not connected with those additional questions to be asked in this 1950 census?

Mr. REES. The figure of $70,000,000, I think, proposed by the President in his budget, is too much for the general expenses, even excluding this item. I do not think the whole thing, as the gentleman suggested should cost as much as $70,000,000. Although there is an estimated item in the budget for $15,000,000 to take the housing census in addition to $70,000,000 for the regular census, there is no good reason why the House should not reduce these amounts just as we should reduce the amounts of any other estimated items in the budget.

I would like to repeat that if this bill is properly administered, it ought to save the taxpayers of this country many millions more than it actually costs. It ought to prevent a half dozen other agencies from spending money and employing people to take census after census, all of which will be absolutely unnecessary and expensive.

I hope the Appropriations Committee of the House will take notice and see to it that none of the other agencies I have enumerated herein shall be allocated funds for the purpose of taking any kind of housing census.

With respect to those who are to be appointed to take the census, I have just suggested that the disabled veterans ought to be in the first preference in taking the census and that other veterans should also be given preference when the selections are made. I make this statement, since I do not intend to offer such an amendment, to call that to the attention of those in charge of taking the census, trusting that they will follow the Veterans' Preference Act in appointing those who are to take the census, and I hope that at least with reference to veterans they will not be appointed on a political basis but that there will be appointed first the disabled veterans who are able to take the census and, second, other veterans of either war.

I should like to offer such an amendment, but I am not sure such amendment is germane to this bill.

I believe a statement by this committee on this subject matter complying with the provisions of veterans' preference in selecting appointees should be observed by the Census Bureau and others concerned in carrying out the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. I concur heartily in the statement just made by the gentleman from Kansas. I do not believe such an amendment to this bill would be germane, but I hope and believe the Director of the Census will give preference first to disabled veterans and then to nondisabled veterans in the selection of the supervisors and enumerators, and that he will comply with the Veterans' Preference Act in making these appointments. I certainly hope he will do so, and as chairman of the committee I shall urge and insist by letter that that be done.

Mr. REES. I appreciate very much the fair statement of the distinguished chairman of our great committee. I shall urge and insist with him that in the selection of employees for carrying out the provisions of this bill when enacted into law that disabled veterans who are qualified shall be given first opportunity for employment, and that nondisabled veterans who may apply shall be given next preference in the selection of supervisors and enumerators, and that the Veterans' Act will so far as possible be complied with when employees are named.

Again I want to express my appreciation for the fair manner in which the chairman of our great committee has handled this bill on the floor and for his fairness in conducting the hearings thereon in our committee.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, the taking of a census is an inventory of the population, and inventories are necessary in business and in our own lives for our own thinking. I may point out that this is not new matter, and it is the taking of the sixteenth decennial census. We have been taking a census every 10 years since the initiation and inauguration of this Republic.

As has been pointed out by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], one of the reasons we delayed taking this housing census until now is that it can be taken more cheaply in conjunction with taking the regular census than it can if we set up a separate group of enumerators, solicitors, statisticians, and so forth, to do the job.

Since the last census, it is estimated, there are an additional 15,000,000 people in the United States. In my own State we have had a population increase of nearly 40 percent, which has thrown out every calculation and estimate as to housing facilities. The location and what we need in line of housing to serve these people have been thrown out of balance. That has had a terrible effect upon us. By this decennial census we will have a sampling of the location of veterans throughout the United States, so that this vexatious problem of the location of veterans hospitals may be approached in a more orderly fashion than it has been up to this time, when all that we had to go on are the imperfect estimates made as a result of sampling tests by the Veterans' Administration and others. There have been thorough hearings on the bill. I think the committee did an excellent job. It exhaustively went into the matter. Of course the sum of $15,000,000 is merely an estimate and the Committee on Appropriations will have to finally pass on the cost. I am certain that any of the questions which may have arisen relative to the necessity and desirability of taking this census are pretty well dissipated by now, and I urge that it be passed at once.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, there is no better indication of the need for this housing survey than the hearings of the Banking and Currency Committee. The hearing will show that we do not know how many houses are needed to meet the needs of various income groups in our economy.

Within a very brief time the House of Representatives will be called upon to consider the Housing Act of 1949. At this hour every one of us is being flooded with demands to vote against public housing, and "save the American way of life." Most of the arguments have been worn threadbare. However, there is a new strategy. Those who consistently obstructed the enactment of comprehensive housing legislation in the Seventy-ninth and Eightieth Congresses are now proposing a series of crippling amendments. While that strategy was a splendid failure in congressional action so far, those of us who have studied the RECORD know that it took 15 roll-call votes to defeat the carefully laid plans of the real-estate lobby.

As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I believe it is my obligation to alert the House to beware of certain amendments to the housing legislation which will be proposed on this floor. Spokesmen for the real-estate lobby in the Congress have begun to recognize that the American people are fed up with the housing situation. They have learned that a frontal attack on housing reform is bad politics. Instead of honest out-and-out opposition you will find them offering numerous and complicated amendments, whose sole purpose is to sow doubt and confusion and by unworkable administrative requirements to paralyze any program enacted. They will be skillfully drawn up to sound as plausible and even well-meaning, as possible.

While these tactics have failed to date, it must be remembered that in recent years there have been many record votes on housing in the Senate. The real attitude toward housing progress of those offering amendments was well known. As a consequence they were defeated by large majorities.

Now we shall undoubtedly be confronted by the same kind of drive in the House, with redoubled intensity. But the Members of the House of Representatives have been given little or no opportunity to debate these issues on the floor. We have no substantial voting record on housing in this body to illumine the real motives of those who propose amendments. This statement is therefore an effort to point out some of the fallacies that lie behind one of the proposals likely to be put forward most vigorously.

THE SQUEEZE PLAY ON PUBLIC HOUSING VIA COST LIMITATIONS

An issue sure to come up is the question of lowering the cost limitations for public housing. As passed by the Senate, the bill puts a ceiling of $1,750 a room on the cost of dwelling facilities, with an additional $750 allowable by the Public Housing Commissioner under special local circumstances. These figures were not pulled out of a hat. Careful analysis of the current cost of minimum housing for veterans produced under various State programs proved that lower limits would prevent construction in some of the very localities which need it the most. Responsible local testimony from all over the country substantiated this finding.

Nevertheless the question will be asked: Why should public housing cost this much while the FHA boasts of "economy houses" reputedly selling for $6,000 to $8,000? A great deal of time and trouble has been spent trying to twist Housing and Home Finance Administrator Foley into admitting that if a $6,000 house can be produced, then that should be the top limit permissible for public housing. All the organizations and interests behind the real-estate lobby took up the cry. The country was combed for miracles of cheap home construction and, judging solely from the opposition record in House hearings, it would appear that anybody could go right out and find the home of his dreams today for a mere pittance.

The basic fallacy is not difficult to uncover. Isolated examples of exceptionally low costs are used as an argument for a maximum limitation to cover all conditions everywhere. Suppose this principle were applied to private housing. The speculative builders and FHA, with all their new-found enthusiasm for cheap homes, would hardly want mortgage insurance restricted to dwellings priced at six to eight thousand. Their current operations would be cut to a mere fraction. In actual practice, of course, and quite properly so, the FHA insures a great many houses that are far more expensive than any public housing will be permitted to be.

HOUSING COSTS VARY GREATLY FROM ONE LOCALITY TO ANOTHER

The fact is that this is a vast and varied country, and that building conditions and prices differ greatly from one region to another. In certain sections the climate permits lighter construction. And in some areas the whole level of prices and incomes is considerably lower than others. This means that while both private and public housing will be relatively cheaper in certain localities, any over-all limitation that would practically prohibit construction except in those areas would be grossly unjust and unreasonable.

This situation is also the reason, incidentally, why specific dollar-income limitations for the occupants of public housing would be neither realistic nor workable.

Apparently it has been decided that no over-all national limitation of the kind, of this type, would be acceptable. So instead the opposition offered an amendment to limit public housing costs to "the costs"—as estimated by FHA—"of new privately built dwelling accommodations then currently being insured in the area by the Federal Housing Administration." And this might sound plausible enough at first glance. But it has not been accepted. Why? Because it was recognized that this complicated subject of housing costs presented most serious problems. Here are some of them.

FIREPROOF APARTMENTS COST MORE THAN COTTAGES IN THE COUNTRY

Most of the homes insured by FHA, and practically all the cheaper ones, are located in small towns or in outlying suburban districts. Indeed, although the fact is rarely if ever mentioned in promotional publicity, many of these houses are semicompleted—that is, mere shells in which the occupants hope later to install modern plumbing equipment, and so forth. And in some cases, with plenty of land around, this may be a quite defensible procedure. But public housing is usually located within the city limits where such practices would be illegal and against the public interest. And many public projects must be located on central sites in big cities, where fireproof multifamily construction is often unavoidable. And, obviously, even though it might not prove more expensive in the long run, the original cost of such construction will be greater than that of a light wood-frame dwelling.

This does not mean that low-income families will be living in pampered luxury by contrast with the suburbanites. Far from it. The accommodations provided hitherto under the United States Housing Act are as simple as could be—"decent, safe, and sanitary," in the terms of the law, but no more than that. Some are even pretty grim. Many, if not most, of the occupants would doubtless prefer a suburban cottage. But transportation costs must be taken into account in planning for low-income families. And in any case real-estate interests would be the first to claim that if public housing is to be constructed at all, it should be on central sites involving clearance, rather than outside the city in open country.

PUBLIC HOUSING MUST BE DESIGNED FOR LONG LIFE AND LOW MAINTENANCE COSTS

It is true that permanent public projects have on the whole been well constructed, sometimes better than the typical speculative product. But most speculative homes are financed for 15 to 25 years, while these buildings will have to be occupied and efficiently maintained for at least 45 years, the term of the financing, but probably far longer than that. And, like any other long-term, large-scale investor, the local authority has a special interest in construction quality that will insure long-term operating economy with minimum upkeep. Such construction will be cheaper in the long run to the community and also to the Federal Government than the flimsy homes too often encouraged today under the economy-house slogan.

As a matter of fact, public housing projects are cheaper, even in first cost, than private developments designed and built under similar conditions. Indeed, it was the successful public-housing experience of the late 1930's which paved the way for present progressive trends in private rental housing. The current movement by insurance companies toward long-term equity investment in garden apartments, one of the hopeful signs on the housing horizon, would hardly have taken hold if local authorities had not demonstrated practical economies through efficient large-scale construction combined with sound modern neighborhood planning.

PUBLIC HOUSING MUST MEET THE URGENT NEEDS OF LARGE FAMILIES

A special responsibility devolves upon any housing program supported by public funds and committed to social purpose. It must take care of those low-income families who suffer the most from shortage and slum conditions—families with several small children. Such families require more space than the average, although they must spend a bigger share of their income on food and clothing. But private landlords have everywhere multiplied the "No Children" signs since the war. The New York triplets who had to be installed in a damp 12 by 12 basement costing $50 a month made headlines. But this was merely a dramatic example of a very general situation. A recent report of the Housing Committee of the Archdiocese of Boston gave special emphasis to the critical housing problems of large families, including those of moderate means as well as the poor. This excellent report, which was recorded in the Senate hearings by Monsignor O'Grady, also quoted from an encyclical of Pope Pius XI, as follows:

> If families, particularly those in which there are many children, have not suitable dwellings * * * it is patent to all to what an extent married people lose heart, and how home life and the observance of God's commands are rendered difficult for them.

Most local authorities agree that in the future a larger proportion of their new homes must include three or more bedrooms than in the past. Such a necessary and desirable policy would be seriously obstructed by too stringent over-all limitations on the cost per dwelling.

THE ARGUMENTS ARE UNANSWERABLE, BUT THE CONTROVERSY CONTINUES

The case against lowering the cost limits for public housing is in any event conclusive and many-sided; the illogic of translating an exceptional minimum into a flat over-all maximum; the wide variation in local costs and building conditions; the fact that public housing must often be built on central sites which require fireproof construction; the need for construction standards which assure long life and minimum maintenance; the special responsibility to care for large families. Any one of these arguments should clinch the point. But the debate continues, and we are flooded with propaganda about $6,000 homes. So perhaps we should take a real look at these famous economy houses.

WHAT'S BEHIND THIS ECONOMY-HOUSE PROGRAM, ANYWAY?

It is clear from the clip sheets on the Nation-wide meetings organized to promote this campaign that the motives behind it are somewhat mixed. Selfless, wholehearted devotion to the interests of American home seekers is doubtless one ingredient, but it is hardly dominant.

The primary ingredient seems to be fear. There are strong signs that the market for speculative homes at current high prices is already drying up, and the builders have every reason for honest concern on this score. But the fact that private home building is falling off while the shortage is just as bad as ever is also a matter of direct personal concern to every desperate home seeker and to the Nation as a whole. It suggests that bold action is needed, as quickly as possible.

The promoters of the economy house drive are also acutely aware of this fact. But they have used it mainly to whip up fear into outright hysteria. The whole campaign has become a political instrument directed against the housing legislation now before Congress. And the general tenor of the pep talks is a very simple little tune indeed: "Build a $6,000 house, any kind, anywhere, or else." The AMVETS put it crudely but not inaccurately, at their March 1949 convention when they condemned the economy-house program as "being designed to further kill public housing" and as in effect merely a "slum-building program."

AND WHAT ABOUT THE RESULTS?

The achievement to date is as mixed as the motives. There is some real and honest effort to reduce costs and profits while maintaining decent standards, and this worthy effort is earnestly encouraged in numerous publications and exhortations by the Housing and Home Finance Agency. But the reported local discussions seem to center rather more on how to cut corners in construction, or evade building codes, or use smaller lots, or nick the building workers, than on greater efficiency.

And the tangible results are in any case few and far between as yet. One reason these cheap houses are so famous, no doubt, is just that they are pretty scarce, and practically nonexistent in large cities. But there are some examples, and doubtless there will be many more before the campaign has run its course. So the real point is: What kind of homes are they?

The ideal models set up for the economy-house campaign may be studied in a rather elegantly printed brochure issued jointly by the Housing and Home Finance Agency, the Federal Housing Administration, and the Home Loan Bank Board. It gives plans, pictures, and descriptions of a number of homes constructed in various towns, mostly quite small, around the country. And it also includes a model plan devised by FHA.

The prices listed are low, no question about that. But it might be mentioned in passing that a New York newspaper editor looked up the house illustrated from Long Island, and found that it had actually sold for almost $1,000 more than the price listed in the brochure, and that in any case it was an "unfinished" house to be completed by the purchaser, a fact not mentioned in the description.

However, quite apart from the accuracy of the figures, let us look at the houses themselves. One's first reaction with respect to most of them is: Well, they certainly ought to be cheap. They look cheap, and flimsy too. But the main thing about these houses which should be brought to your attention is their size.

THE MIRACLE UNCOVERED: CUTTING DOWN SPACE STANDARDS

One of the major necessities for decent wholesome family life is adequate space to move around in and to offer the chance of privacy once in a while. Our relatively spacious homes in the past in America were a matter of national pride and satisfaction. Some of them were probably too big, by modern labor saving standards. But the plans in this brochure make one wonder if we are not moving rather too rapidly in the opposite direction.

It is the over-all area that tells the story. Homes began to get smaller back in the 1930's, but just a few years ago a house of 900 to 1,000 square feet would still have been generally considered about minimum, by lending agencies as well as purchasers.

Today? Well, most of the homes in the promotional pamphlet contain about 600 to 650 square feet, and some go down to 24 by 24, hardly more than half the prewar standard. The plan devised and proposed as an official model by FHA contains 612 square feet. This is of course far smaller than anything normally encouraged or even approved by FHA previously, even in wartime. As an enthusiastic Assistant Director of FHA put it: "The size of the house must be cut down"; and he added, "but not the quality." But how can the quality be maintained if its most important element, space, is lacking?

HUMAN BEINGS VERSUS COWS—AND CARS

Something about the scale and general aspect of these houses arouses one's curiosity as to how they would compare with the housing standards considered essential for lower orders of animal—a subject on which far more scientific work has been done, incidentally, than on human housing requirements. So a little research was done on cow barns. And here is the very latest gospel, from the Doane Agricultural Digest for April 1949. For every cow you need 75 to 100 square feet of stabling plus another 75 to 100 square feet for hay and bedding storage. The model plan shows 180 square feet of building per cow. This would make 720 square feet for four cows, or 900 feet for five, almost 50 percent more than the space allotment for a family of five in an economy house.

Now, it is quite true that a cow is somewhat bulkier than a human being. But, on the other hand, she leads a much simpler, quieter, and more carefree life than a modern American female of the human species. Most of a cow's eating, sleeping, and sitting is done in approximately one spot, at least when indoors. And for her sterner duties, a good up-to-date barnyard offers separate structural appurtenances not included in these minimum-space standards: a milking parlor, for instance, and a bull pen. Incidentally, according to Farmers Bulletin No. 1830 of the United States Department of Agriculture, a good bull pen alone should measure about 12 by 18, or 216 square feet, which is a lot more private lounging space than the most ruthless father could carve out of any economy house.

Like a lily of the field but unlike an American housewife, the cow sews not, neither does she spin, cook, wash dishes, launder, rock the baby, make Johnnie do his homework, keep up with the outside world, entertain the PTA, nor stay pretty to keep her husband home. The work in cow barns is not done by cows but by human beings, who, if they live in economy houses, must sometimes ponder the curious logic of a great white father who, through the United States Department of Agriculture, encourages bovine luxury, while beating the drums through FHA for ever more cramped accommodations for the cows' owners, masters, and ultimate consumers.

My comparative researches did not end here, however. I also asked a well-known architect what would be the normal area for an ordinary double garage. He replied that the standard size used to be 20 by 20, but that now, what with longer and wider cars, 22 by 26 is just about right. But that is almost exactly the area of some of the houses now being promoted and sold for whole families to live in. Not a garage for every family, but a family in a garage, is apparently our new motto.

SCIENTIFIC HOME PLANNING FOR SMALLER FAMILIES

The accommodations necessary for happy healthy family life have never received the minute official attention devoted to cow barns or chicken coops. On the latter point, it may be worth quoting from Farmers Bulletin No. 1554 on Poultry Houses and Fixtures, as follows:

> Growing chicks and laying hens need comfortable houses that are dry and roomy, with plenty of fresh air and sunlight. It never pays to overcrowd them.

But human space requirements have been studied, nevertheless. Detailed minimum standards have been devised and tested by hundreds of able technicians, home economists, and health experts, and promulgated by numerous responsible agencies and organizations, including the American Public Health Association. And by these standards practically every one of the plans shown in the FHA brochure would be entirely inacceptable for an average-sized American family. Indeed, our prewar public housing units were generally considered too cramped by the experts, although they were considerably larger in most cases than these economy houses now being sold with such fanfare to the veterans.

Kitchens and living rooms are tiny, often too small to permit a comfortable family meal along with their other functions. More important, however, is the fact that not a single plan in the lot shows more than two bedrooms, while many only have one. A family with one child when they moved in would certainly have to think twice before they had another. And how on earth could a family with three or four children manage in such a house? These are "models" indeed, not for the spacious American way of life which requires some degree of individual privacy, not at all for meeting the urgent and special needs of large families, but rather for a society that wanted to commit suicide by controlling and cutting family size.

Mr. Foley may be right insofar as his personal intentions are concerned when he says:

> It is not an effort merely to bring into existence a lot of little houses.

But that is very likely to be the main result nonetheless. In all fairness and for the record, however, it must be noted that the Housing and Home Finance Agency has itself seen some light on this issue since the original and basic economy-housing brochure was distributed. There is now an addendum on three-bedroom houses, with over-all areas up to 800 and even 1,100 square feet. But, of course, these larger houses will cost more money to build. So let us bear in mind that the fabulously cheap homes repeatedly praised by our opponents in their efforts to paralyze the public housing title, are tiny shacks hardly suitable for families with children.

THE IMMINENT DANGER: A PERMANENT REDUCTION IN AMERICAN HOME STANDARDS

In a period of high building costs on the one hand and severe housing shortage on the other, the pressure to lower standards is very great indeed. But it must not be forgotten, above all by the agencies of Government which devise and administer long-term public policies, that the homes built today will still be here long after costs have come down and the shortage is met. Ours is the responsibility to protect future citizens and taxpayers from the effects of opportunist exploitation today. If we merely encourage the building of a lot of shacks, the outcome must be one of two things. Either they will ultimately be abandoned to rot by the wayside, eating up the Federal insurance and guaranties that produced them while they add to the slum problem. Or, even more serious, they will reduce permanently the standard of demand of the American people to a level of living never before envisioned. The first alternative would ultimately cost the country more than an equivalent amount of subsidized public housing, without providing any of its benefits along the way. And the second, it need hardly be emphasized, would be the worst situation imaginable for American industry, whose hope and vitality must rest on an ever rising standard of living.

MANY COMMUNITIES BALK AT LOWERING STANDARDS

Despite all the promotional pressure, the economy housing program has not by any means taken the country by storm. According to newspaper accounts, it was only gingerly embraced even by the National Association of Home Builders in convention assembled. In a great many cities the welcome was distinctly cool and skeptical. According to the Milwaukee Journal, the group called together by FHA in that solid city, including more than 90 representatives of the building and allied fields in southeastern Wisconsin, unanimously rejected proposals for minimum or core housing as inadequate to meet the living standards of American citizens. More than half left the room before the meeting adjourned. The president of the Milwaukee Builders Association told the meeting:

I'm not willing to let my name be attached to anything like that. I'm proud of my housing. After they tell you what you can leave out I don't know how you're going to get a house out of what's left.

Most Americans just do not cotton naturally to the idea of encouraging a systematic reduction in housing ideals and living standards.

WHAT THE ECONOMY HOUSE REALLY PROVES

This program does, however, have enormous immediate significance, if somewhat different from that intended by its promoters. Instead of providing the real-estate lobby with an effective weapon against the housing bill, it demonstrates conclusively the urgent need for a bold and comprehensive national housing policy.

For here is the best, the very best, that the speculative builders can do for American families under present conditions, even when insured, guaranteed, promoted, threatened, needled, and otherwise bolstered up by the Federal Government. And do not forget that the prefabricators were likewise given a big boost several years ago.

So here is the test before our eyes. What is the net achievement?

A house that is inadequate for normal family needs here and now, and a highly dubious investment for the future.

A house which, even so, barely reaches American families of average income, and that only under very exceptional local conditions. "The median income of the American family is around $3,000," says the FHA, and admits that even the $3,000 family cannot always afford a $6,000 house. And the Veterans' Administration loan guaranty officer for the New York area estimated, at an Economy House meeting, that the average income of veterans is around $3,200, and calculated that they should pay no more than $5,600 to $6,400 for a house. He also added that there are no $6,400 houses in the New York region.

Private home building already is on the decline, with half to two-thirds of the potential housing market still untouched, with the shortage entirely unsolved, and with all the slums still extant and more than fully occupied.

CLEARLY, WE NEED A BOLD NEW HOUSING PROGRAM RIGHT AWAY

We must have public housing for low-income families from slums, and we must take special care that it maintains decent standards in this critical period. And we must also pass the rest of this bill, H. R. 4009, including aids for clearance and redevelopment, for rural housing, and for research.

But we will still need something else besides. For what the Economy House dramatizes most particularly is the need to encourage new kinds of efficient nonspeculative private home-building enterprise, including cooperatives, to reach the middle-income group. This could be accomplished by the direct Federal loan program set forth in a number of bills now before Congress, including my own (H. R. 4458).

Then and only then, after we have adopted all these measures, will we have the instruments to solve the American housing problem. Then and only then will we achieve that steady rate of home production, year in and year out, which is the prime necessity for a more efficient building industry. Then and only then can we expect progress toward a real economy house, worthy of America's hopes and possibilities.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ELLIOTT] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, I believe that a census of housing in the United States is necessary at this time. The housing problem in this country in all its many phases has been acute now since the war years.

I am hopeful that this Congress will pass housing legislation. If it does, I think the housing census proposed in the bill now before us will provide much valuable information.

The proposed housing census will not cost much money, in that it will be taken at the same time the decennial census of 1950 is taken. I feel certain that the service to this Nation will be many times the cost of the census.

Such housing census will give us up-to-date information with respect to those communities that are solving their housing problems, and with respect to those communities in which the housing problem is most acute.

We have made some efforts to solve the housing problem, but, Mr. Chairman, they have been very feeble. This Government provided GI loans for veterans living in the cities of this country, enabling them to build or buy homes at a greatly inflated cost, and I shudder to think what will happen to these veterans, saddled with these mortgages, when business recedes or a depression comes and the veteran finds himself without a job.

I do not know how the system of GI loans worked in other areas of the country, but I do know that in the rural counties, which I have the honor to represent here, very few GI loans have been made. In some counties of my district not a single GI loan has been made.

Mr. Chairman, the home is the bedrock of our democracy. It is the basis of our Americanism. It is the foundation upon which our free-enterprise system rests.

When we make it possible for our people to own their own homes, we strengthen the fabric of our democracy.

The census of housing proposed by this legislation will be helpful. I hope the bill will pass, and following soon in its footsteps I hope this Congress will enact housing legislation that will in effect bring the benefits of the loan provisions of the GI bill of rights to the veterans who live in the rural counties of this country. I hope that we will pass legislation providing for rural housing, that is, providing farmers, whether owners of land, tenants, share croppers, or farm laborers, with the opportunity to acquire by long-term credit and low interest rates a home for themselves and their families.

I hope this Congress will put emphasis upon opportunity for the ordinary citizen of this country to become a home owner.

America must continue to be a land of opportunity—opportunity for all its citizens to enjoy the blessings of liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

I believe that these goals can be attained within the framework of our democratic system of free enterprise.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROOK].

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Chairman, it has been claimed here this afternoon that a census is not necessary. I contend that a census of the housing situation is necessary. The three greatest institutions in the United States are the home, the church, and the school. If I were going to put the highest appraisal on any one of them, I would place it on the home. The home is the seat of our democracy. If you build a good home, you reinforce democracy. If you build a bad home, you destroy democracy. It is from the home that our future citizens will come. I spent 35 years in the educational field in the State of Indiana. Some of the most serious problems that came to the schoolroom originated in homes which were not much more than pigpens. When you drive over the country today and see the mansion on the hill and the little squalid buildings at the foot where you look through one side of the building and see the sunlight coming through between the siding boards, we realize the deplorable situation which exists in America with all the wealth that we have, the most outstandng nation in the world, where we, today, treat humanity as we do and expect a good citizenry to develop from what might be called, for all practical purposes, pigpens. It is time that we had a good comprehensive census and not one on a hit-or-miss basis. We need to get the facts, authentic facts, to ascertain what we really need in the way of adequate homes. If we reinforce this great democracy of ours by building better homes, we know we will never have to suffer in the future as people are today, and a better America of contented citizens will be the fruition.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk may read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the Census is authorized and directed to take a census of housing in each State, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Alaska, in the year 1950 and decennially thereafter in conjunction with, at the same time, and as a part of the population inquiry of the decennial census. The statistics of the decennial census of housing shall show the number, characteristics (including utilities and equipment), and geographical distribution of dwelling structures and dwelling units, both owned and rented, in the United States. Such statistics shall show this information for veterans of World War I and separately with respect of veterans of World War II. The Director of the Census is authorized to collect such supplementary statistics (either in advance of or after the taking of such census) as are necessary to the completion thereof.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after "1950" strike out "and decennially thereafter."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 8, after the word "of" at the end of the line, strike out the words "the decennial" and insert the word "such."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 2, line 1, after the period, strike out "Such statistics shall show this information for veterans of World War I and separately with respect to veterans of World War II" and insert "In addition, such census shall include statistics showing separately the same information with respect to veterans of World War II."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HALE: On page 2, lines 6 to 9, strike out all of the sentence beginning with the words "The Director of the Census."

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how much attention the committee may have given to this particular language of the bill, but I must confess that it troubles me and rather shocks me. The language does not indicate what the "supplementary statistics" are to be. It does not provide how long after the taking of the census the collection of these "supplementary statistics" is to go on. It does not even give any intimation as to what the nature of the supplementary statistics is to be. So far as the language of the bill goes, they would not have to be statistics about housing. It simply says, "as are necessary to the completion thereof." Of course, one man's idea of necessity may be very different from another's.

It seems to me that this is very rash and loose language to incorporate in this legislation. I must say I entertain considerable doubt about the legislation, because I had supposed that statistics about housing were already available to the Government. If they have not been, then, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. NICHOLSON] said earlier this afternoon, I do not know on what authority the statements have been made as to the lack of housing in different parts of the country. But certainly it seems to me that the final sentence in section 1 of the bill should be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This is form language used in connection with all legislation pertaining to the taking of all censuses. It simply provides that the Director of the Census shall have the right to compile and gather together the statistics from the general data obtained during the taking of the census and to make certain checks and tests before and after the taking of the census. Of course, as you know, after the supervisors send in their reports from all sections of the country to the Director of the Census, he then compiles and summarizes all that data, and he will make this up in a form so as to submit to the various agencies of the Government, to the housing industry, or to anyone interested. It gives him authority to compile separate statistics and make subsequent tests, checks, and samplings about the housing situation. It also gives special data as to the housing owned and rented by World War II veterans.

There is certainly nothing wrong with this language. It merely gives the Director of the Census the right to complete and verify the census which is taken person to person and house to house by the enumerators. All of those statistics are brought to Washington. They have to be compiled and gathered together and then sent out by the Director of the Census to the interested parties.

I think the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] is unnecessarily disturbed about the language. Certainly the Director of the Census should have the right to compile these statistics and make supplemental checks and tests after the census is taken—after the census is completed in the field. If not, the census will have little effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MURRAY] has expired.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the distinguished gentleman who just offered the amendment, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE], is not unnecessarily concerned, but has plenty of evidence to support him in his statement that this is a very necessary and wise amendment; and I, for one Member of this House, will not only vote for it, but will also hope that enough Members vote for it to put it in the bill.

If you will read the Congressional Directory you will see that I am by profession a business analyst; that is as near as one can come to saying what I used to do in the days before I came to public life. I know what can be done with a statement of that kind; I know what has been done by Federal agencies since I have been in Congress with broad provisions which do not define the work they are to do. It has not been so very long—I see two of my California colleagues sitting here in front of me—it has not been so very long since investigators of another agency went into California and on an authorization which was not as broad as this one, interpreted it to mean that they had the right to gather statistics on the religious backgrounds of everyone who lived in the community, on the people they called upon, the number of times they called on them every week, the interests of those people, whether they had changed their religious views during the year, and a broad and very amazing list of questions which led to what? I have no idea to what they were intended to lead, but they led to exactly nothing except the expenditure of the taxpayers' money. That was because the publicity thrown upon the investigation was so great that it was hastily withdrawn.

I, for one, think it is time we called a halt. This is a very doubtful bill at best. It is perhaps a coincidence that this bill will be operative next year, and would give employment until after election, the election of 1950.

I urge support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposion to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure that the distinguished gentleman from California who is always alert to matters of this kind was on the floor of the House when this bill was explained, because I am concerned about his statement.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I said it was purely a coincidence that we should have a bill of this kind operating in the same year with a national election.

Mr. REES. Oh, I agree; that is a coincidence; I agree. We discussed that a while ago. But the law requires we take the census every 10 years. The census was taken in 1800 and has been taken every 10 years since. It so happens that we are going to take one in 1950. That phase of it has been discussed on the floor. As to the language which would be stricken out by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, that language I am informed has been carried in similar bills for years, and it is included so that the Bureau of the Census can test the statistics every year as we go along, because a great many groups are always asking for revisions of the census information from time to time.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. In just a moment. As the populations shifts from time to time the Census Bureau makes adjustments in its figures and tries, as nearly as can be done by using sampling and other methods that were talked about, to keep its information up to date.

I hold no brief for the Census Bureau, but because of experience they have done a pretty fair job and have kept the census figures pretty accurate, and can do the work and furnish the information much more accurately than other agencies who try to do it. They have been able to furnish the information so that it has been helpful not only to the various groups we are talking about, but the States and the cities have asked for this information. It will, in the long run, save a considerable amount of money.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. If we do not allow the Census Bureau to keep this thing progressively up, is it not true that you will practically destroy the whole value of it at the end of the year?

Mr. REES. It certainly will destroy a lot of it. Your census information will soon go out of date. Then you will have groups and organizations coming to the Congress wanting to take another census—a special census. Last year we had a business census authorized. As chairman of the committee handling that matter I tried to get proponents of the legislation to go slow because it was going to cost so much to take it, but they would not wait another year and they are taking that special census on business now at the expense of the taxpayers. They could have taken it in 1950 and saved considerable money, but they would not do it. The Appropriations Committee was asked to appropriate funds right away to take this special census so without prior authorization from our committee or the House the appropriation was made and the census is under way.

Mr. GOLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, a member of our committee.

Mr. GOLDEN. Is it not necessary to have this language in here in order that all these statistics we are spending so much money to acquire may be made available to the people of America who need them?

Mr. REES. The gentleman is correct. We are spending $70,000,000 for this. Now you would want to cut them off and say, "From now on you do not need to revise it, and we do not want anything more to do with it."

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I want to suggest the gentleman is not discussing the specific amendment under consideration.

Mr. REES. I am discussing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. There is no objection to the taking of the census; there is no objection to the Census Bureau keeping their figures up to date. There is objection apparently on the part of the gentleman from Maine, as on my part, to the introduction of the words "to collect such supplementary statistics."

Mr. REES. I appreciate the gentleman's statement.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is not what the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. REES. Yes; I believe it is what we are talking about.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. We think it should be made a little clearer as to what is meant by "supplementary statistics."

Mr. REES. The gentleman from Maine does not ask for any clarification. He strikes it out.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is a good idea.

Mr. REES. He strikes the whole provision out. You do not clear it up that way. What I am saying is that the Census Bureau ought to have the right to go ahead and keep its information down to date.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California is one who usually gives these matters very careful consideration and I want him, if possible, to understand that this is language that has appeared in similar legislation during several years. It is not new. All in the world this language is intended to do is to permit, authorize, and grant power which you have approved in a former bill to the Census Bureau to go ahead and secure information from time to time with regard to this particular matter of housing. There will be samplings as he goes along. It would cost but very, very little to provide this information in 2 years from now or 3, 4, or 5 years. You voted to do this very thing with respect to population and other information in a bill that passed this House some time ago.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I would call that bringing the statistics up to date, not getting supplementary statistics.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished Member from Maine who is familiar with such problems generally, but I believe he is mistaken on this occasion.

Mr. HALE. I thank the gentleman. I want to reiterate my objection to the idea of "supplementary statistics" after the taking of the census because you do not indicate what supplementary statistics are going to be taken. It might be supplementary statistics about almost anything. As far as the language of this bill is concerned, you can go on after the taking of the census and secure information about almost anything for the next dozen years. There is no limitation to that charter at all. You have given them carte blanche authority—the Director of the Census at least—to get supplementary information as long as he likes. Either that language should be stricken out or the gentleman should introduce an amendment of his own which sharply limits and defines those powers; otherwise I think the bill is wholly inadmissible.

Mr. REES. I will say to the gentleman that this same proposal has been brought out for the last 50 years. We have had the same proposal continuously. I hold no brief for the Bureau of the Budget, but I do not know that the Bureau of the Budget has violated any power granted to them on this particular subject matter. People in the State of Maine, people in the State of California, and people in the State of Kansas have frequently requested additional information in addition to what they have already obtained under the 1940 census. They will do it concerning the 1950 census.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts who has been giving this matter a lot of consideration since we began discussing it earlier today.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts not only gives this matter a lot of consideration, but everything else a lot of consideration.

Mr. REES. He certainly does, and we appreciate it, too.

Mr. NICHOLSON. We have been taking the census from 1790 up until 1940, and there never was a great necessity for telling any State or city or county in any State what the difference in the population was from that time on, because it is based on just the proposition of proportional representation in the several States. What I want to say is in reference to what the gentleman from Maine has offered here. He wants them to start there and not keep having all these estimates and estimates and estimates, which the gentleman's committee says are not any good, anyhow, but merely samplings.

Mr. REES. In reply to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, it is understood that we will have as nearly as possible an accurate census in 1950. But, we all know from experience that populations shift, and there will be changes in the years following. Now, it is to be hoped that we will permit the Bureau of the Census to go ahead in the following years as it has always done in the various States and bring the information down to date as nearly as can be done, probably by sampling or whichever way the matter is handled.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Is not the difficulty here the fact that nobody is going to know what supplementary statistics will be necessary until after the main census has been taken?

Mr. REES. Well, that is about correct.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. So if you allow this amendment to be adopted and take away the power of the Director to take supplementary statistics after the main census has been taken, and supplementary statistics are necessary, he will not be able to make those supplementary statistics.

Mr. REES. Well, I would say I really think it would be a grave mistake to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine. I have all the respect in the world for his views on various propositions, but it is my view we should not support this amendment.

You will not save any money by adopting this amendment. It is my opinion the reverse will be true.

For the record it should be understood this amendment applies only to housing information. Congress has approved, from time to time, authorization for the Census Bureau to furnish information from year to year with respect to population, number of farms, livestock, and numerous other items of information. Why not do likewise in housing?

It is my hope that the adoption of this bill as proposed by our committee will prevent any and all other agencies from taking censuses of various kinds concerning housing. There is no excuse for a half dozen agencies duplicating this effort at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. This measure, if properly administered, should save a lot of unnecessary expense and unnecessary employment in Government. This matter of gathering statistics by various agencies has been carried too far.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, because he prohibits the Bureau of the Census, whoever it is, from doing any more after the census is taken in 1950. I do not object to taking the census of housing in the United States; not at all. But, we perpetuate this same thing. The gentleman from Kansas or any other gentleman cannot stand up and say that the decennial census needs to be revised until the next 10 years have gone by and do it for a partition of the Members of the House of Representatives. Now, then, if we are going to have this thing, we ought to have it as one proposition and not mix it up with a decennial census at all, because we have been told repeatedly before committees and before this House just what the situation is. We got it from three different sources. First, from the Department of Agriculture. They made a survey of it. We got it from the Bureau of the Census. They made a survey on it. Further than that, Congress has made one. Why should we have another one here? Let us say to the other three, "You quit as long as the Bureau of the Census is going to do it." I do not care anything about politics in it, because I know what will be in there. The gentleman from Massachusetts, who is addressing the House, will not have anybody to propose to take it.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, certainly the gentleman from Kansas does not expect to have any appointees.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Then the gentleman is not fooling himself about it.

Mr. REES. That is right, but that is not the important question before us. We are today talking about spending several million dollars to take a census in 1950. Very little additional expense will be required, and that expenditure will be controlled by the Committee on Appropriations. By using this provision, we will certainly be able in a year or two or in 5 years from now to furnish the information as nearly as we can to bring it down to date. The gentleman from Massachusetts, the gentleman from Kansas, and the rest of us will probably want that information. It will not cost us very much more. After all, we are spending several million dollars for the regular census. We are setting up here the expenditure of only a small amount in order to bring it down to date. That is all there is to it. The Committee on Appropriations will determine how much is to be spent. We hope in the long run to save money by reason of this legislation and prevent the seeming necessity of other agencies attempting to secure similar information.

Mr. NICHOLSON. All we are trying to find out is where the people are. We have vital statistics in every State of the Union. We know how many people died in the last 10 years, we know how many were born, and we know how many are left, and how many have come in. Any mathematician could figure out within ten or a hundred thousand how many people there are in the United States from year to year.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman from Kansas has just made a point that has been made here before this morning by the other side, that there is still the second step—that we still have to go to the Committee on Appropriations. I am speaking only as one member of that committee, but let me say that all too often authorizations are made and considered as a directive to the Committee on Appropriations insofar as costs are concerned. All too often these amounts are not reduced in our committee, and the bills come out of that committee with the full amount in spite of the efforts of some of us to reduce them. Then here on the floor we are unable to reduce the amounts because those of us favoring economy do not have the votes.

Mr. REES. If the gentleman will yield, I might suggest that the business census started last year, came right out of the Committee on Appropriations. We had the proposal before our committee. But the Committee on Appropriations thought it was a good thing, and went ahead and approved it before our committee authorized it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. We have statistics on practically every house that is built in the United States. There is a housing authority in practically every city and town. All they have to do is ask how many new buildings have been constructed in a town, whether they are 4-room or 6-room houses or apartments, and so forth. That is not difficult. It seems to me we ought to go along and try to perfect the bill. The gentleman from Maine has offered a real, substantial amendment, in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HALE) there were—ayes 13, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. All of the provisions, including penalties, of the act providing for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved June 18, 1929, as amended (U. S. C., title 13, ch. 4), shall apply to the taking of the census provided for in section 1 of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LYLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2203) to provide for a decennial census of housing, pursuant to House Resolution 189, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HALE) there were—ayes 49, noes 12.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 225, nays 50, not voting 156, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 176)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

During the past 3 months, the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch, established in July 1947, has submitted a series of reports containing its recommendations on steps which should be taken to improve the organization and operation of the Federal Government. These reports, together with a summary statement now in preparation, are the product of extensive work by distinguished private citizens and members of the Government. They represent a challenge to the achievement of better government based on the fundamentals of sound organization and management. While there will be honest differences of opinion concerning many of the Commission's specific recommendations, I believe that the Commission's work as a whole represents a landmark in the field of Government organization. The highest commendation is due the membership of the Commission.

The Commission has stated—and I believe quite correctly—that the basic requirement for achieving effective management in government is to grant to the men upon whom responsibility is placed by the Constitution and the statutes an adequate measure of authority and flexibility to perform their jobs. To this end, the Commission has proposed that the Chief Executive be given the authority and resources which he must have to fulfill his constitutional responsibility for directing the Executive Branch of the Government. Without such authority and resources the President cannot be held accountable for the conduct of Federal administration. The Commission has further urged that there be a clear line of authority from the President to and through each department and agency for which he is accountable and responsible; that the executive functions of the Government be grouped under the smallest practicable number of departments and agencies; and that the ability of the President and of department heads to carry out their responsibilities not be impaired by numerous detailed statutory regulations.

With these general propositions of the Commission I am in full accord. My approval and acceptance of them springs not alone from my personal conviction but equally from the compelling mandate of my oath of office to support the principles of the Constitution.

The creation of clear lines of responsibility and authority within the Executive Branch does not weaken—but instead strengthens—the constitutional position of the Congress to determine the scope and character of activities in which the Government shall engage and to prescribe the policies which shall guide their execution.

With the completion of the Commission's work, we should now consider the specific reorganization steps which should be taken at this time. The reorganization of the Executive Branch is a complicated and difficult task. Its accomplishment requires an orderly and systematic plan of action and close cooperation between the President and the Congress.

Certain reorganization measures are now before the Congress. Bills to improve the organization of our national security and foreign-affairs activities are under consideration. Action in both of these areas was recommended by the Commission on Organization and endorsed in my earlier messages to the Congress. There are also pending in the Congress bills dealing with the establishment of a National Science Foundation, the conversion of the Federal Security Agency into a Department of Welfare, increased pay for top Federal officials, and the creation of a General Services Agency with improved arrangements for property management. The objectives of these bills have been generally endorsed by the reports of the Commission on Organization, and I have previously indicated my support of action in these fields.

These specific bills are important and cover major areas of the Commission's work. Of equal importance is the general reorganization bill now before the Congress. There is no need in this message to recapitulate the compelling reasons for enacting a general reorganization statute. These were fully stated in my message to the Congress January 17, 1949.

In keeping with past experience, the pending bill provides that reorganization plans, submitted to the Congress by the President under the reorganization authority, must lie before the Congress for 60 consecutive days without congressional disapproval, if they are to become effective. Because of this 60-day waiting period the bill should be enacted soon if any reorganization plans are to be submitted to the present session of the Congress.

It is neither possible nor wise to proceed simultaneously in all areas on reorganization. When reorganization authority is enacted reorganization plans will be submitted to the Congress as rapidly as it is feasible to do so. I shall also submit additional recommendations for action on matters which cannot be covered by reorganization plans. Such plans and recommendations will represent the most carefully considered judgment of the executive branch of the Government. In their formulation I shall give careful consideration to the recommendations of the Commission.

The Commission on Organization has served the country well by pointing the way toward achieving continued improvements in Government operations. The most effective recognization of their work will be the vigorous application of the principles which they have stated.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 9, 1949.

REPORT FROM RULES COMMITTEE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file the report on the Commodity Credit Corporation legislation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

JOINT SESSION OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Con. Res. 59) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Thursday, the 19th day of May 1949, at 12:30 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of hearing an address by His Excellency Eurico Gaspar Dutra, President of the United States of Brazil.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF THE SWISS GOVERNMENT

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 204 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution, notwithstanding any rule of the House to the contrary, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4392) to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by the United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of H. R. 4392, a bill providing for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses incurred and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during the war.

It is consistent with good international law. All of the claims have been investigated and certified. The amount involved is not to exceed $16,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYLE], I have not found anyone on this side who is opposed to this legislation.

The claims amount to less than $16,000,000. I think we all admit that the United States Government, by misdirected bombs and forced landings in Switzerland, did injure some 5,500 people. From a legal standpoint I think it is generally recognized that where a belligerent nation does damage to a neutral country and its citizens, it is liable for those damages.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising on this occasion is in connection with the message from the President of the United States, which was just read to the House, in relation to the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, many weeks ago the House of Representatives passed legislation authorizing what could be effective reorganization of the executive branch of the Government. Unfortunately, the bill has not yet passed the other body. The American people are very deeply interested in this legislation. To begin with, the members of the Commission, known as the Hoover Commission, did a very effective piece of work, and they worked very diligently for well over a period of a year, and under very adverse conditions to themselves, working long hours in their business or in their legislative duties, and at the same time performing the arduous duties which fell upon their shoulders as a result of being members of the Hoover Commission.

The American people are deeply interested in the results that will flow from this reorganization. So are we. There is no question but what tremendous sums of money can be saved as the result of effective reorganization. Yet, as I see it, the success of any reorganizatioh in the executive branch depends upon the passage and final enactment into law of the reorganization bill which passed this House substantially in that form.

In any event, it depends upon the enactment into law of an effective Reorganization Act for the executive branch of the Government. I am glad to see the people of the country interested in this matter. Committees are being formed in different sections of the country—properly so, and I am glad to see it—to try to formulate public opinion to see that the recommendations of the Hoover Commission are finally brought about. It will be interesting today to note that unless we get a reorganization bill through Congress and enacted into law in the very near future that there will be no reorganization of the executive branch this session, because if the President submits a reorganization plan it does not go into effect until 60 days after, to give the Congress 60 days in which to act adversely, or in any event, to act upon any recommendation made by the President.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. What the distinguished majority leader has said is true of reorganization plans which would require the shifting of functions from one department or agency to another; but it is not true of reorganizations within a department, because those can be handled by the various committees responsible for the departments. The gentleman will remember that tomorrow we shall have before us a bill for the reorganization of the State Department reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs which will handle those recommendations of the Hoover Report in that field. The bill contains provisions designed to improve the organization and the efficiency and economy within this one department.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and I am glad to have the observation; but I do not think it is inconsistent with what I said, that the major part of any reorganization in the executive branch of the Government will be dependent upon what kind of organic reorganization act is finally enacted into law; and if anything is going to happen before this session is over, such a bill has got to be enacted into law, in my opinion, on or before the end of this month, because any recommendation sent up has to wait 60 days, and Congress has to be in session at least 60 days or more after a plan is sent up. It cannot go over, as I understand, into a special session of Congress. So something has got to be done in the very near future if any of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission are going to be finally brought into effect before the present session of Congress is over.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish the gentleman would expand a little bit on his statement. Is it the gentleman's idea that we are going to have one general reorganization bill covering all of the executive departments?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; there will be several plans, one or more that might be recommended, dependent upon the passage of an effective reorganization act giving the President the authority to make reorganizations, of course, sending such plan or plans to Congress, and Congress having a veto. In my opinion to lodge the veto power with one House of Congress would be ineffective; I think it has got to be vetoed by both branches of Congress. But in any event my purpose is to call attention to the fact that an effective reorganization bill has got to be passed very shortly if anything is going to be done in this session of Congress in relation to the Hoover Commission's recommendations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I am in complete accord with what the gentleman has stated with respect to the urgency of this whole situation. The other body, of course, has the legislation which was passed by this House.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true.

Mr. KEEFE. Unless they act on it and act with some degree of diligence we may find ourselves confronted with the fact that there will be no legislation in this session of Congress that would permit the President to send down reorganization plans.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. And that would be a real calamity, in my opinion, in view of the tremendous expenditure of money and the great amount of work that was done by the Hoover Commission, but exactly how is that to be accomplished? Has the gentleman any suggestion as to how this thing can be stimulated?

Mr. McCORMACK. My purpose in taking the floor was to let the country know what my views were. The gentleman's expression and those of other Members will be of assistance so that those interested can direct their attention toward the Senate in the hope that the Senate will act very speedily, as that distinguished and honorable body should act and, when it wants to, can.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I join the gentleman in hoping that the other body will act, but there is an implication in the remarks which the distinguished majority leader has made that I think many of the Members of the House would like to have the gentleman clarify. If effective implementation of a reorganization order contemplates that the Houses of Congress will be in session for 60 days following the end of this month, that would imply that the session will run through June and July.

There has been some suggestion, in view of the repair work that has to be done on the overhead part of these chambers, that the Congress might take a recess through July. Would the gentleman want his remarks to be interpreted as meaning that the House will be in session in the month of July?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has a very penetrating mind and we admire him for it. What I said I shall permit to stand. I would like to see the bill passed within a week or 10 days, so that the 60 days would start running very rapidly. While the House will be through with its business in June, I am inclined to think the Congress will not be through. If we are through by August 1 I shall feel very, very happy. Have I answered the gentleman's penetrating question?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I hope the House is through with its business in June and that the Congress will be, too; or at least will recess through July so that the carpenters can do their work and that we will be here just marking time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the majority leader, and I fully agree with him in the statement he has made as to the great necessity for an early enactment of the legislation now pending before the Congress to confer upon the President the power and authority to submit reorganization plans for the Government to the Congress. As a member of the Commission on Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government, I realize fully that there have been a great many recommendations and findings made by that Commission. Those recommendations and findings are such that, according to the best estimates the Commission can make, possible savings of around three and a half billion dollars per year in the operation of the Government can ensue and also greater efficiency in the Government can be obtained, provided we have proper reorganization, and provided also that certain necessary legislation is enacted.

In order to clarify the matter, I should point out the Commission is a bipartisan one. As all of you know, the Commission is made up of six members from each major political party. Also six members are from the Government, and six members are private citizens. I am very happy to be able to say there has never been a single division on any matter or issue before the Commission along either party lines or between the individuals who were from the Government, on the one hand, and those who were private citizens, on the other. Ours has been an absolutely bipartisan or nonpartisan attempt to solve the problems which confronted it. We have had a great deal of evidence of the President's sincere interest in the great work of the Commission.

Now, the House has passed legislation to give to the President certain powers to put into effect reorganization plans in view of the Commission's reports. These Presidential plans, of course, as you know, must wait until legislation is approved by the Congress, and the President cannot move until he does have proper authority. As the majority leader has so ably expressed it, until and unless that authority is granted the President, there is not going to be very much done on reorganization.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. Might I say that at a meeting this morning the President expressed great concern over this very proposition; that he would be unable to get any proposed reorganization through unless Congress acted very quickly.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I listened with a great deal of interest and attention to the President's message which was just read here. I have not had an opportunity to study it or to be informed upon it, but I am happy that he saw fit to send that message to the Congress. I hope it will impress upon the leadership of another legislative body other than our own that it is necessary to take early action, so he may submit his reorganization program to this session of Congress and permit the Congress to pass upon it. I am sure if he uses his influence ably and well, that he perhaps can and will get action.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I will be happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I thought it might be in order to suggest, not altogether facetiously, that if the President cannot get through this Congress what he wants, that is kind of a surprise to some of us.

But, in any event, I want to commend the gentleman who is now addressing the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] who was coauthor of the Reorganization Act that was passed in the Eightieth Congress. I want to commend him for his foresight in offering that resolution. I want to commend him for his work as a member of the Commission.

Certainly I shall not at this time express any doubt of the sincerity of the President in asking for the accomplishment of these reorganization proposals. I think, however, that it should be pointed out that the House of Representatives is not without authority in the matter regardless of the Reorganization Act, because any of these proposals can be drafted, put in legislative bill form, and the Congress can then proceed affirmatively to enact into law the recommendations of the Commission. I hope the underlying Reorganization Act is speedily enacted. That should facilitate matters. But we in Congress have a job to do and I for one, plan to work at that job.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I want to thank the gentleman from Indiana for his kind and complimentary remarks relative to myself.

I agree with him that it is necessary for the Congress to proceed as rapidly as possible in the consideration of necessary legislation to make a real reorganization of the executive branch of the Government effective. However, I think I should point out that in my opinion the exercise of the President's power of reorganization must move along in double harness with the work of the various legislative committees of this Congress. I want to congratulate the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] is a member, as in the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], and others, for their splendid efforts in behalf of the establishment of the Commission and in support of the work of the Commission. I understand that committee has now created a special subcommittee on reorganization matters which has been working on many of these problems. The subcommittee has not always seen eye to eye in every instance with the Commission reports, but the Commission realizes—at least, I do as one member of the Commission—that Congress, after all, will have to use its own judgment, wisdom, and discretion in considering how best to make effective the Commission's recommendations and findings.

I want to say one other thing to the gentleman from Indiana and to the Members of the House, if I may, and I hope it will not be misunderstood—but honesty and candor compel me to say it—I, too, am firmly convinced the President wants to put into effect these reorganization plans; he wants to see the Government made more efficient, and have it conducted in a more economical manner. But I am not so sure, I am not convinced in my own mind, from some of the things I have seen and heard, and the experiences I have had as a member of the Commission, as well as from some of the information which has reached me, that every individual official in the executive branch is as deeply interested in an effective reorganization of the Government as is the President of the United States.

May I say further I am convinced, from my limited experience in public life, that if any reorganization plans are to be made effective, if these recommendations and findings of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government are to accomplish the good we wish, the President of the United States is going to have to crack the whip over some of his own officials and some of his own appointees. Following the recommendation, suggestion, and desire of the Commission that we establish a line of command from the President down through the various department, division, and agency heads of the Government, so that the President may have the power to administer, as well as the responsibility, he must insist on having the support of those under him for his reorganization plans. Perhaps he may have to exercise his every power now, to the very best of his ability, to compel the cooperation that I think he deserves from his subordinates in connection with putting through the Commission recommendations and his reorganization plans.

If the efforts of the Commission fail, it will be because of the sniping, because of the underneath cutting, the sabotage of this great effort by some officials who, in my opinion, owe their loyalty to the President of the United States and should be supporting him in the position he has taken.

I want to express my appreciation of this message of the President today. I say to him, "Go through with it. More power to your good right arm. See to it that the legislative bodies, with which you have great influence, perform their duty, and also that all the officials under your supervision, Mr. President, back up your efforts in this direction."

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Listening to the gentleman's able speech leads me, at least, to believe that there might be more power above the President than there is under the President in this regard.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I do not want entirely to agree with the gentleman. I hope we do not reach the place where we have any power or influence in the executive branch of the United States that is above the President in connection with important governmental matters. I want to have the feeling, and I do have it, that the President of the United States will be able to have his way in this matter because, after all, it is his responsibility. He is the head of the executive branch. If he does not have the authority to reorganize it, as we must give it to him, and as this House has tried to do, then, if the reorganization fails, certainly the Congress is not responsible. It will be because of failure somewhere else.

Mr. JENSEN. Under this plan we give the President complete power to reorganize.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. But the whole Congress has not acted as yet, as the gentleman from Massachusetts so well pointed out.

Mr. JENSEN. It is the intention to give the President complete power.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It is the intention of the House, let me say.

Mr. JENSEN. If he has that complete power, then certainly as President of the United States he should exercise it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is his responsibility.

Mr. JENSEN. He should not be dictated to by the powers above the President.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Up to date he has not been given that legislative power from the whole Congress. As I say, I think he should have it. That is exactly the point the gentleman from Massachusetts has made.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I am glad that these remarks have been made for the RECORD, because I am sure the gentleman will recall many of us in the Eightieth Congress initiated this whole procedure, and this Congress, the Eighty-first, we were very active in bringing about, as far as the House of Representatives is concerned, the enactment of the basic underlying legislation, the reorganization bill, which would make it possible for the President to move in order to effectuate these plans.

However, I believe it should be said, for those of us, who, as I say, worked in the initiation of this whole program in the creation of the Commission, the reports of which are now receiving such acclaim from the public, generally, that we who started out in this fight are not going to relax our efforts in any degree whatsoever to try to bring about the final and ultimate accomplishment of reorganization in the executive branch to the end that our Government may be more efficient and to the end that the economies to which the gentleman referred may be effected. Of course, I do not know in detail every proposal, and may not agree with all particular features, but on the whole we shall fight vigorously for the over-all plans.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Indiana very much for his splendid statement. For the RECORD I want to say the gentleman from Indiana, as majority leader at the time this legislation was passed, was extremely helpful and zealous in seeing that the legislation creating the Commission was enacted. I also want to give complete credit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at that time, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], who made at least one splendid appointment from our side of the aisle, when he appointed former President Hoover to the Commission. I also want to pay my respect and tribute to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], who, as minority leader then, and as a very powerful member of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, gave his voice and help to lead the fight for the Commission bill. We all worked together as members of a team. I also wish to pay my respects to our present Speaker the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], who, at that time was minority leader; and to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] who was then chairman of the House Committee on Expenditures. Certainly no one in the country can say the House of Representatives has been in any way derelict. Certainly no one can say there has been partisan politics in any degree in connection with the enactment of the legislation which created the Commission on the Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government, or in the endeavor which has since been made to expedite the passage of the law to put into effective operation the recommendations and findings of the Commission.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I was very glad to hear my friend, during his able remarks, make reference to the necessity of department heads and heads of other agencies in the executive branch of the Government cooperating with the President and not trying to drown out or impair or destroy any plans that he may send up here. My friend used the phrase that he hoped the President would "crack the whip." I was glad to hear my friend from Indiana, the former majority leader, agree with the gentleman from Ohio in all respects and especially in that respect. I hope that when recommendations are sent up to us and when the President exercises the courageous leadership which we all know he does exercise, and he does, in common parlance, "crack the whip," that from no side of the aisle will there come the cry of dictatorship.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I agree with the gentleman, so far as his statement about dictatorship is concerned in connection with those whom the President of the United States appoints. I am just old-fashioned enough in public service and in politics to believe that an appointing officer, and especially the President, is entitled to the loyal support of those who serve under him. I have contended from the very beginning, as a member of the Commission, however, that the Commission should never attempt to direct or in any way tell the Congress as to what it should or should not do. The Commission should only give the Congress the benefit of its findings and recommendations, and its best judgment, and then permit the Congress to use its own judgment and discretion in working out the best methods of reaching the objective which we are all seeking, and that the Congress should decide whether our recommendations and findings are worthy of its consideration.

However, I believe as an individual Member of Congress, I not only have the right, but the responsibility, and the God-given duty, to vote as my judgment and my conscience dictates is right. I am hopeful every reorganization plan the President sends here will be one I can support wholeheartedly. I will lean backward to give him that support, because I realize how important the overall objective to properly reorganize the executive branch of the Government really is. I hope every legislative committee which has anything to do with legislation that will help effectively reorganize the executive branch of the Government will lay aside partisanship and will work only for the best interests of the country. Yet I do not expect every one of the legislative committees to agree in every detail with every recommendation of the Commission because sometimes we were divided ourselves. I hope that we will work with the right spirit and the right will. I know from the leadership we have had on both sides of the aisle in connection with this great endeavor that that effort will be made.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not care to unnecessarily prolong this discussion except to say that I think it will be helpful in the accomplishment of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

I cannot let this opportunity pass, however, without again calling to the attention of the Congress and the country the splendid, able, and patriotic service done by Mr. Herbert Hoover as Chairman of this great Commission. I think hardly any of us recognize the capacity, the diligence, the effort, the time, and the conscientious hard work which he has put into this Commission and its work. He came to this work at a time in life when a great many people would have felt that the undertaking of such a chore would just be beyond him. But not Mr. Hoover. He tackled the job. He has done a great job with it, as evidenced by the fact that recent polls taken across the country show that the American people, by a vote of 20 to 1, approve what the Commission has done.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I would like to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] that I appreciate very much his splendid tribute to Mr. Hoover. On May 25, the Commission will meet in a body and will call upon the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House at the Executive Office to present to those three distinguished Americans, the leaders of our Government, the final report of the Commission, and will also formally notify the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker that the Commission has concluded its labors, has finished the task assigned to it. With the permission of the Speaker and of the House I plan on that day to speak for the membership of the Commission in expressing, to the best of my ability, the gratitude of the Commission, and I believe the gratitude of the Nation, to a great American, Herbert Hoover, who has done so much for his country and who, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] has so well said, at an advanced age answered the call of public duty and has rendered another great service to his country and to humanity.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the RECORD should show that the words of praise for the former President come from both sides of the aisle and that the statement made by my friend, the former majority leader of the House, and my friend from Ohio are completely joined in by the Democratic Members of the House.

When Mr. Hoover was President I was a Member of this body. I disagreed with him on many occasions, but I profoundly respected him. When he was President, he was my President the same as any President of the United States is the President of any American; he is our President as he was the President of the Republicans, and while a person may disagree with the President yet the greatest respect is always entertained for the President of the United States whoever may occupy the position, as well as for the office of the Presidency.

Former President Hoover and the Commission under him has done an outstanding job, and I am happy indeed to join in the remarks heretofore made and to let the country know that the entire membership of the House, Republican and Democrat alike, recognize in the great work that he has done an outstanding achievement by a great American in the best interest of our whole country.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman very much.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] No quorum is present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

CLAIMS OF THE SWISS GOVERNMENT

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I was in the process of yielding. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] desire time?

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I, too, wish to join in paying tribute to Mr. Hoover, the only living ex-President of the United States, for the great service that he has rendered to our country, especially in his work on this reorganization program. I also wish to commend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], who so assiduously worked and made possible the appropriations to continue that Commission.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I interrupt to say that I am not unmindful of the fact that great credit is due the gentleman from Nebraska for his untiring efforts in connection with appropriations for the work of the Commission. We are very grateful to him.

Mr. STEFAN. I thank the gentleman. I recently returned from my State, Nebraska, and I found in many communities organizations being formed to give encouragement to the Hoover Commission in order that some reorganization of government may take place as soon as possible to effect some real economy. Our people want reorganization based on the recommendations made by the Hoover Commission because they fear that this Government spending continuing as it is, will soon find itself on the rocks of financial ruin. The gentleman answered the question I originally wanted to ask regarding when your commission is going to complete its labors. I understand you are to report to the President in the very near future.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. On May 25.

Mr. STEFAN. On May 25, after which your commission will go out of existence. May I ask the gentleman whether or not the commission has any unexpended balances?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am not sure, but I think we will be pretty close to the edge. We may have a little left over, I do not know. We printed as many copies of our reports as we could but we did not have enough funds to complete the printing of all reports and important findings of the "task forces."

Mr. STEFAN. Does the gentleman think he will have sufficient funds to complete his labor?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes; I think we will.

Mr. STEFAN. Then the Appropriations Committee was wise in cutting the amount originally asked for?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We cut our cloth according to the funds granted us, and we thank the gentleman very much for his aid.

Mr. STEFAN. May I ask one more question? If your labors are to be completed on May 25, will some legislation be necessary here in the House or will we follow the bill that is to be acted upon in the Senate?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Legislation will be necessary. If Congress approves the Reorganization Act it will permit the President to send up his reorganization plans, but there will be considerable legislation necessary, not only this year but next, in order to implement the findings and recommendations of the commission.

Mr. STEFAN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that one committee of this House, the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Department of State, acted long before some of the work done by the gentleman's commission. The fact of the matter is this Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Department of State, made many recommendations and accepted many recommendations made by Assistant Secretary of State Peurifoy which were embodied in some of the Hoover Commission report. The gentleman might be interested to know that these reorganization programs in the Department of State have already been implemented with appropriations by the House committee and hearings on that bill are being held in the Senate at this time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for his contribution, and may I say to him that the commission did follow very closely, and obtained great benefit from, the reports and recommendations made by his outstanding subcommittee. The work of several committees of the House was extremely important and of benefit to the commission, and it would be unfair for me to conclude my remarks without paying tribute to the House Committee on Expenditures also—not only to the present committee but to the former committee under the leadership of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], which reported unanimously the legislation creating the commission. It subsequently passed the House of Representatives. I think full credit is due that committee of the Eightieth Congress for its very good work.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LYLE. I think perhaps it would be very useful to the Members of the House if they had copies of the recommendations and reports of the Commission in volumes so that they could be referred to. The various reports are excellent, but they come to us in different sizes and in different forms and they get mixed up. When we attempt to try to find them it is difficult. I would like to have on my desk these reports in volume form.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am hoping some arrangement can be made and that funds may be found to print the findings and recommendations of the Commission in one volume. We have not had the funds available for that purpose. Then, too, because of the fact that various legislative committees of Congress will have jurisdiction over various bills that will be introduced, or have been introduced, to put into effect these findings and recommendations which were made in the various Commission reports we furnished the reports on the various departments, activities, and services of the Government as separate documents. But, I do agree that it would be of great benefit to the Congress if we had an over-all report in one volume which the Members of Congress, at least, could use as a handy reference. I hope that perhaps we can make some arrangements here for that purpose. The cost would be very slight in comparison to the great benefit and value which could be obtained, because undoubtedly it will be necessary to refer to those reports for many years to come.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Right along that line, may I suggest that I have had a large number of requests for these reports. My office made an investigation. The reports are so voluminous that they will not be furnished free for general distribution, but they may be purchased at the Government Printing Office at a cost of $10 per set.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. For the complete set, but I think a lower price for individual reports, as many people are only interested in one particular report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, returning to the rule relating to H. R. 4392, a bill to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II, at the outset I want it known that it is my hope and my fervent wish at all times to support legislation favorably reported from the great Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives.

In this particular instance I desire to make some observations regarding this bill. If you will turn to the report accompanying the bill you will find that there is a claim by the Swiss Government for some $3,000,000 interest as of last April. The Swiss Government is not only demanding payment of claims against our Government and payment in large sums from our Government, but is demanding interest computed at 5 percent. That is the rate claimed by the Swiss Government. I contend this is exorbitant. This is an outrageous demand. The report states that it will be noted if interest normally allowed in international claims is allowed, the longer there is delay in settlement, the greater the ultimate amount. It appears to me it is unconscionable on the part of the Swiss Government to demand 5 percent interest upon this claim made against our Government.

It happens, Mr. Speaker, that in 1943 and again in 1945 I was brought in contact with Swiss officials. I know from my service in Italy that back in 1943 the Swiss Government dealt harshly with some of our aviators interned in that country. At that time the going was rough for our country; it was not then apparent to all that Hitler would be beaten. In Switzerland precision instruments in tremendous quantities were being manufactured for use by the German armies, warships, and air force.

However, by 1945, after the German armies had surrendered, when I had the honor to be the Allied military governor of the Province of Reggio nell' Emilia in north Italy, I also dealt with Swiss officials. I found them difficult to deal with at all times. They were crafty and coldly calculating. This notwithstanding the fact that at that time I was the humble representative of a great and victorious Nation and its Allies. I was for a time, in 1944, a supply officer in the Fifth Army. Perhaps I was made supply officer because all my life I have been a lawyer and knew very little about the procurement of supplies. However, I endeavored with fidelity and with zeal to serve my Government, and in dealing with Swiss officials at all times I found them callous and hard, conniving and cold-blooded, and always looking out for their own interests, and seeking an unfair advantage.

The Swiss Government, as all of us will admit, has profited from World War I and World II. I do not condemn Swiss citizens. I criticize Swiss Government policies and its officials. Switzerland is a meeting place for the plotters of the world. They plotted World War I in Switzerland. The Swiss became rich out of World War I. World War II was plotted there, and the Swiss became wealthy from World War II while we were expending our blood and our treasure. Right at the present time Switzerland is the haven for the Fascists from Germany and Italy plotting against the peace of the world and to bring about world war III. The banks in Switzerland are depositories for the tremendous sums of money of Fascists of Germany and Italy.

Mr. Speaker, Switzerland is the only country in all the world where the local currency is at a premium over the American dollar. The reason is that they have profited while we have sacrificed and suffered. We saved their liberty, we saved them from devastation and from being taken over by Hitler, and now their officials demand interest at 5 percent upon claims I suspect are greatly padded. If that is modified to a legal rate of interest, then it will be said that such interest would be 3½ percent interest or possibly 4 percent. It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that in passing this bill the great Committee on Foreign Affairs will agree to strike out the period in line 2 on page 2 and add the following: "and that any interest payment authorized herein shall not exceed 1 percent."

If the Swiss Government receives full payment of the claims it has presented—and our Government has always been generous in dealing with foreign nations—it seems to me it is unscrupulous and unconscionable in making this demand upon us for 5 percent interest in addition.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD concerning one of the heroes of Bataan, a victim of the death march, who was recently reburied in Arlington Cemetery, the late Col. Winfield Scott, of my home city in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4392) to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4392, with Mr. CHELF in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE] is recognized for 30 minutes. The Chair understands that the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] is recognized for the same amount of time.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the time has been equally divided between the minority and majority and that time has also been allotted to the gentlewoman from Ohio, making a total of 1 hour and 30 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the hour will be divided equally, 30 minutes to the majority and 30 minutes to the minority. The total amount of time is 1 hour.

Mr. STEFAN. I thank the Chairman.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, we have before us for consideration today H. R. 4392, a bill to provide compensation to the Government of Switzerland for damages to persons and property on Swiss territory inflicted during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights. The measure will authorize an appropriation of $16,000,000 to carry out its purposes.

This bill is brought to the floor with the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that it do pass.

The claims for which this measure will provide settlement are based on a number of incidents involving crash-landings of aircraft on Swiss territory and bombings of Swiss towns, villages and countryside by the United States Air Force.

Because of this violation of neutral rights and the damages thereby occasioned, a large number of claims were filed with the Swiss Government by the parties injured or their representatives. As of September 1945, the Swiss Government had submitted to the United States Department of State 167 claims arising out of crash-landings, and amounting to $272,133.24. This total was small, however, in comparison to the number of claims and amount of damage occasioned by the Air Force bombings. Because of the later incidents, some 5,400 claims were presented to the Swiss Government by its citizens, and by that Government brought to the attention of the Department of State. The claims on account of bombings so far approved by this Government amount to $12,481,515, exclusive of interest.

The incidents of crash-landings and bombings, allegedly caused by units of the United States Army Air Force, were reported by the Government of Switzerland to the Department of State during the years 1943, 1944 and 1945.

I might interpolate here that we have information that all of these bombings were not occasioned in 1 or 2 instances, nor in 5 or 10. As a matter of fact I am advised there were approximately 37 instances during the last war in which American aviators got across the line over Switzerland, thinking they were in Germany. They dropped bombs and occasioned the damage for which these claims were filed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEE. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. This all happened by accident, did it not?

Mr. KEE. It could not be called accident. It was because of the fact that these aviators were mistaken as to their location. You could not say that it was criminal negligence or anything like that.

Mr. CURTIS. It was not done with the intent to damage the Swiss either in their lives or property.

Mr. KEE. There was no malicious intent, of course.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that perhaps the title of the bill, as well as the body of the bill, ought to be amended by striking out the language that this was in violation of neutral rights. Those boys who were present when these things happened had no intent to violate the rights of anybody. It was one of the unfortunate things that happens to a bystander, and it seems to me that the committee should bring in an amendment to correct that, to show that this Congress does not give a stamp of approval to such language as this.

Mr. KEE. Regardless of the question of whether it was done intentionally or otherwise, it was, as a matter of fact, in violation of neutral rights. You cannot get away from the situation.

The Department of the Army made investigations to determine whether or not United States military aircraft were responsible for the incidents and, therefore, responsible for the damages thereby caused. In accord with the results and findings of such investigations, the Department of State has long since informed the Swiss Government of this Government's acceptance or denial of responsibility for each incident. The appropriation to be authorized by the pending bill will go toward payment of only such claims as are based on those incidents for which this Government has accepted responsibility.

The payment of these claims is, beyond all doubt, an obligation of the United States Government which, under law and the principles of justice and in all good conscience must be discharged. It is understood that the Swiss Government has made advances for the relief of claimants, reserving the right to present all claims to the Government determined to be responsible for the damage.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I see in the report that this interest amounts to approximately $3,000,000. Is it customary to pay interest on claims of this type?

Mr. KEE. It is customary; yes, sir. If the report reads that we are to pay that amount of interest, it is erroneous, because the question of interest has not yet been determined. Negotiations are still going on. We have a Commission on Swiss claims, and also the Army is engaged in supplying information. The interest rate and the amount is subject to negotiation between the two countries.

Mr. WAGNER. And scaling down.

Mr. KEE. Of course, the Swiss Government has claimed 5 percent, we understand. However, we know that they have paid 4 percent on individual claims, and they certainly would not ask us to pay more.

Mr. WAGNER. That was the thought I had in mind in asking the question.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield briefly.

Mr. SADOWSKI. This may not have a direct bearing on the bill before us but nevertheless I think the question is pertinent to the general question of settling honest debts.

Right after the war we were advised that millions and hundreds of millions of dollars of looted gold had been deposited in Switzerland by the Nazis. I understand our Government did get some satisfactory answer from the Swiss Government as to the disposition of this money. I understand a great portion of it was Belgian gold and Holland gold, and then there was some gold from the Slav countries, but all in all there was quite a large sum involved. I have never heard that satisfactory disposition had been made of those claims of those governments against the Swiss for this looted gold that was deposited there by the Nazis. Can the gentleman or any member of his committee answer my question as to what has been done and what satisfaction has been made toward compensating these people for the gold that was looted by the Nazis and deposited with the Swiss?

Mr. KEE. May I say to the gentleman that that matter has never come before the committee, to my recollection. We have nothing before us now in regard to the matter, and it would be impossible for me to say what claims have been made on that score.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Has no member of the gentleman's committee informed himself on this, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. KEE. I have not discussed it with any member of the committee.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I should like an answer to my inquiry as to whether any member of the gentleman's committee is informed on the subject.

Mr. KEE. I say I have not discussed it with any member of the committee. I am, therefore, unable to advise the gentleman. I am sorry.

The payment of these claims is long overdue, and, no doubt, the Swiss Government finds it difficult to understand why the United States delays in fulfilling its acknowledged responsibility for damage inflicted over 5 years ago. I may say in this connection, however, that in two of these instances where there was a considerable amount of damage—and I believe it was the first two instances—the Army arranged payment to the Swiss Government of a certain amount of damage; in fact, they paid to the Swiss Government about $4,070,000-plus. That was paid out of money that the Army found available for the purpose at that time. That was in addition to the claims that are here before the Congress today. So the Swiss Government has been paid to a certain extent for some of the claims which are not included in this bill.

This matter was considered by the Eightieth Congress, but the legislation then proposed failed of passage because of adjournment before the measure could be reached. A bill was considered authorizing appropriations in the sum of about $10,000,000, as an advance payment to Switzerland. It passed the Senate, came to the House, and was reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the amount of $10,607,000. It failed of passage because it could not be reached before adjournment.

The pending bill authorizes an increased appropriation over the 1948 bill and this larger amount comes about as the result of the reporting by the Army of additional claims investigated and approved, liability on which is admitted by our Government. These additional claims bring the total of all claims approved for payment, full responsibility for which is admitted, up to $12,481,815, exclusive of interest. Interest on the claims can be determined only by agreement of the two Governments upon the rate and by fixing the date of payment. It is because of this situation that an authorization of $16,000,000 is provided. The committee is assured that this amount will be sufficient to cover the total amount of approved claims, the accrued interest thereon, and such interest as may accumulate between this date and the date of final payment. It will be understood, of course, that if we agree to the Swiss request, the rate will be 5 percent and at that rate interest is accumulating at something like $600,000 a year. At 4 percent it is increasing at the rate of about $500,000 a year. It is our understanding that in handling these claims with its own citizens the Swiss Government has paid 4 percent interest. There is, however, no international interest rate. The question, therefore, is subject to negotiation, and that will take place under this bill. But by placing the amount at $16,000,000 as an authorization, it will cover the amount of interest even though our country should agree to pay the 5 percent, which I doubt; the authorization will cover it provided the claims are paid shortly after the bill becomes law.

An early settlement of these claims is highly desirable. They have been pending for a long time, considerable interest has already accrued and will continue to accrue. The longer a settlement is delayed, the greater will be the cost, and, incidentally, the greater the strain upon the relations between the United States and the Swiss Government.

I hope that the measure will be given unanimous approval.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. In the report it is stated that Germany has compensated Ireland for certain damages, that Russia and Great Britain have compensated certain countries, and so forth. When were these payments made, and how much?

Mr. KEE. I would not be able to answer that question without referring to the hearings. Perhaps the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON], a member of the committee, can answer the question. I do not recall the evidence. We were not so much interested in the amounts; we were interested in the fact that the principle of law was recognized by these governments that claims of this character constituted a valid and legitimate claim against our Government.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the gentleman whether, as a matter of fact, he knows that these governments have paid these claims?

Mr. KEE. That was the report that came to us, I think from the State Department. It is a matter of evidence before the committee that that is a fact.

Mr. GROSS. But the gentleman has no figures?

Mr. KEE. I have no figures upon it.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Is it not a fact that the law of our country or here in the United States is that if you are sued for damages, you may obtain a verdict but you do not get any interest?

Mr. KEE. That is not the law.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. That is the law if you do not know whether it is the law or not.

Mr. KEE. You get interest on the amount of damages if you get a verdict.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman mean on personal injuries?

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Personal injuries or damage to property.

Mr. KEE. In any case, you get interest from the date of your judgment.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. In no tort action do you get interest on your verdict.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the moral and legal obligation which under international law our Government has to pay these claims, there is a further practical factor we ought to bear in mind, namely, that the United States has greater investments in other countries around the world than probably all other countries put together have outside their own boundaries. For every $1,000 we may ever be called upon to pay to other governments for destruction of their property by our armed forces or nationals, there is a fair probability that during the next few decades we will be asking other nations for $1,000,000 in reimbursement for destruction of our property by their armed forces or nationals. For example, in China today, Communist forces might destroy or seize up to a half-billion dollars worth of American-owned property. How could we expect those responsible for the losses to reimburse us for our property when we are the neutrals, if we refuse to honor our obligations when we are on the paying end? It is a matter of integrity, yes, and also of good sense for us to pay these claims.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman recognize a moral or legal obligation to pay 5 percent?

Mr. JUDD. That is the customary rate in such cases. As a matter of fact, we have not agreed to that rate. We are still negotiating for a lower rate, and it is reasonably probable the final figure will be less than that.

Mr. GROSS. Where else does the Government pay that?

Mr. JUDD. This is not comparable to the case of the Government paying interest to its own citizens, although it does pay 6 percent on income-tax overpayments. We were advised 5 percent is a standard rate in international claims of this sort when the payment is long delayed.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most ironical performances that I have ever witnessed. Most everyone knows that some of our bombs were accidentally dropped on Switzerland and some of our aviators crash-landed in that country. They were interned until the war was ended and now we are going to pay Switzerland $16,000,000. It was only our efforts which preserved their freedom.

First, I want to make it clear that I love Switzerland, one of the most beautiful countries in all the world, and that I have never been ill-treated there. Always I have paid fully for any services that I received. When I first visited that country, in 1922, I wrote my mother, "When I die I hope the good Lord will not send me to heaven—but to Switzerland." That is what I thought then. It is what I think now—in spite of certain incidents that have waned my enthusiasm for this outstanding country.

America has been good to Switzerland. In fact, we have kept her economic life going by admitting her watches and other technical instruments into our country. Always we have given her the benefit of the doubt, and she now questions it.

During the war we accidentally dropped a few bombs and Switzerland kept all of our aviators interned until the war was over. Maintaining a strict neutrality, this little nation let us know where she stood. I admire her for her boldness and am sorry for our weakness. Where would her freedom be today without our strength? We saved her neck and she is not willing to contribute one ounce to save ours.

Switzerland is a magnificent country—and I have enjoyed my visits there. Her people are hospitable, but we certainly pay in full measure for any hospitality that is granted. Never did I have anything given to me and I paid in good American dollars for all considerations which I received. Others have done and will do likewise.

Mr. Chairman, is it not a bit ironical that American aviators shot down in Switzerland should be interned until the war was over—and that we are now called upon to pay $16,000,000, when American aviators shot down in Spain were released to fight again—and die against the Axis Powers?

Switzerland interned all of our men—a country that prospered during the war by maintaining a phony neutrality and for whom we opened our American ports to keep her industry going. She sold to us watches and precision instruments which everyone knows about. But in Spain when our aviators crashed or were shot down they were released to fight again the very enemy who would have destroyed Switzerland's freedom. It is asinine. Switzerland, that was accepted and admitted to the United Nations, who kept our boys prisoners, was recognized—but Spain where the boys fell, were released and were permitted to fight again, is banned from the United Nations. This ignoble action is inexcusable and indefensible in morals, politics, or law.

I will admit that Switzerland and Turkey, next to Spain, are the most anti-Communist countries in Europe. I do not decry the aid we are giving them, but I do declare that our treatment of Spain is immoral, unconscionable, undiplomatic, and against the best interests of our own country. With Switzerland and Turkey, Spain is the most anti-Communist country in all Europe, and regardless of our opinion of Franco and his Government, it must be admitted that Franco has brought order out of chaos, and that Spain is our friend. From a strategic point of view she is more important than any other country. She knows that—and certainly we know it. And I am incensed at the shabby treatment we have given her.

Certainly our members at Lake Success should put forth every effort to see that Spain is included in the United Nations; that full diplomatic relations are restored, and that she is included not only in the United Nations but also in the Atlantic Pact.

It is high time, sir, that we exercise a little common sense, and realize that Spain, with the exception of Switzerland and Turkey is the most anticommunistic country in all Europe. In fact, I would put her first.

Something which I seldom do is to recommend to Members of both House and Senate that they will read the article which I wrote on Spain and that appears in the May issue of the Reader's Digest.

And now under leave granted me I include the following editorial from today's Washington Daily News:

FRANCO SPAIN

The Political Committee of the United Nations General Assembly has voted, 25 to 16, in favor of lifting the 1946 ban on the appointment of ambassadors and ministers to the Franco government in Spain. The question now goes to the General Assembly for final action, and the issue there is in doubt.

Representatives on the committee of the United States and 15 other nations did not vote either way. However, if we duck the issue again in the General Assembly, our refusal to vote will be counted against the proposal, which requires a two-thirds majority for approval.

Our Government initiated the original boycott resolution against Spain. That mistake should be acknowledged by joining in the movement for its repeal.

Franco's government isn't our kind of government, but that is not the test. If we exchanged diplomats only with those nations of which we approved in every particular, we would be doing business in a very restricted world.

Spain is under a dictatorship; yes. The Soviet Union, Poland, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, and Czechoslovakia—with all of which we have full diplomatic relations—also are under dictatorships.

Franco attained power by revolution—by force and violence. So did the other dictatorships. So did several Latin-American governments to which we have extended full recognition.

Franco's particular crime is that he gained control of Spain with the assistance of Hitler and Mussolini. But that was a case of dog eat dog. Stalin's international brigades were fighting on the other side. If they had won, we probably would have a Communist Spain today. Would that be good?

We voted to boycott Spain in 1946 largely as a sop to the Soviet Union. In doing so, we ignored the fact that Spain had not been guilty of attacks on any other nation, which was more than could be said of Russia. After Hitler and Mussolini helped Franco, he did nothing to help them.

Franco has shown every evidence that he desires to live at peace with the rest of the world. His country is one of the bastions against communism and occupies a strategic area vital to us and the other members of the North Atlantic group.

Our Government should vote to lift this foolish boycott.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State is authorized to pay to the Government of Switzerland such sums as the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Secretary of the Army, shall determine to be necessary to provide compensation for losses and damages inflicted on persons and property in Switzerland during World War II by units of the United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights: Provided, however, That the total amount of compensation authorized herein shall not exceed $16,000,000.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YOUNG: Page 2, line 2, strike out the period and add the following: "and that any interest payment authorized herein shall not exceed 2 percent."

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, just as I stated a few minutes ago, it is my earnest wish to support wholeheartedly every bill favorably reported from this great committee of which the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE] is chairman. There is not very much in addition that I am going to say upon this amendment.

You will note that in offering this amendment I have used the language "that any interest" shall not exceed 2 percent. For the sake of argument I do not wish to concede at this time that we should pay interest to the Swiss Government upon a claim of this sort, notwithstanding the fact that in past generations it has no doubt been well established that interest and probably at very substantial rates, perhaps 5 percent, perhaps 6 percent, perhaps 8 percent, has been paid by different governments on claims such as this. But we are living in the present time. We are faced with the fact that had it not been for the expenditure of billions and billions of dollars out of the Treasury of this country and many, many drops of precious human blood, the offering as sacrifices of the flower of our young manhood—who left their comfortable homes and their loved ones to maintain our way of life in the world—had it not been for those sacrifices Switzerland would not today be a free nation. Switzerland today would be a puppet nation of Hitler and Mussolini, and it seems to me that if we in this country pay liberally, pay generously to the Swiss Government the claim that it makes because of the care they took of some of our airmen who were interned there and the claim it makes because of the damages accidentally inflicted, that Swiss officials are unreasonable in demanding either the legal rate of interest, which is uncertain, or interest at the rate of 5 percent, which is excessive.

Let me say that we have authorized by legislation the creation of a War Claims Commission, and there are at the present time pending in both Houses of this Congress appropriations to set that War Claims Commission functioning. It seems to me that that is the sort of commission which should deal with this problem. I do hope that consideration will be given to the amendment I offer here.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I intend to support the 2-percent amendment offered by the gentleman, but he did not go far enough. He should have stricken out all interest payment. That portion of the bill is an outright steal, and it ought to be branded as such.

Mr. YOUNG. I agree with the gentleman, but I fear I could not succeed in that move. You will note that in the amendment I have not conceded that interest should be paid; I stated that any interest paid should not exceed 2 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be again read for information of Members who are present at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Young amendment.

Mr. CHATHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have had rather more complete testimony on this point than the report shows. This same bill was reported out of the Committee on Foreign Affairs last year. I am sorry we have not had more of the 1948 report. The Senate passed the bill in the same form it is here, except that I believe about $1,331,000 in claims have been adjudicated in addition to the amount carried here.

All the way through our diplomatic relations in this country for many years and many generations interest has been recognized. As my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] has stated, we have received many times the amounts we have ever paid out or I suppose ever expect to pay out. An international authority, writing in 1943 on the subject, said—and I quote from last year's report:

Although the rule as to the payment of interest is not absolute, nevertheless, in the majority of cases that have been considered by international tribunals, interest has been allowed in appropriate cases as a part of the awards.

It was testified before us that we have received as high as 8 percent interest from some claims we had against Mexico. I read again from the report of last year:

The Mixed Claims Commission established under the claims convention concluded September 8, 1923, between the United States and Mexico, which contained no specific stipulation with respect to the inclusion of interest in awards, nevertheless allowed interest on American claims against Mexico.

The Mixed Claims Commission established pursuant to the agreement of August 10, 1922, between the United States and Germany to determine claims of the United States against Germany, including claims for violation by Germany of American neutrality during the period between August 1, 1914, and April 5, 1917, allowed interest.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHATHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman say that simply because we practiced usury upon the Mexicans we are now entitled to permit the Swiss to practice usury upon us?

Mr. CHATHAM. I would not know whether or not it was usury. It seems to me it would be a very high rate of interest. However, the Swiss are paying the claims of some of their nationals who have been bombed out and are allowing 4 percent interest to their own nationals on the claims. That has recently come to my attention.

This Government has just made a settlement with Yugoslavia in which the Government of Yugoslavia agreed to pay the United States $17,000,000 in settlement of claims of American nationals on account of the taking of their properties in Yugoslavia. In H. R. 4406, now pending in the House to implement that agreement, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay out of the fund the principal amount of each award plus accrued interest on such awards as bear interest.

Since we have received moneys in many cases and have received interest, it seems to me rather well established that interest is included in cases of this sort, and, since the Swiss are paying interest at the rate of 4 percent to their own nationals, I personally feel that we should not hamper our negotiations or hamstring our negotiators. I certainly want to pay the smallest amount of interest that can be negotiated, but with the Swiss paying 4 percent on these claims, it seems perfectly proper that 4 percent be the amount finally settled on.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHATHAM. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. KEE. Our committee, as I understand, and as I think the gentleman understands, made no attempt to fix a rate of interest, but deemed that the only way in which this matter could be settled now was to leave the question up to negotiation by the representatives of the two countries. If we can get the interest down, we will do it.

Mr. CHATHAM. That is correct. A large amount of interest of course has accrued because the bill did not get through in the last minutes of the last session. I would certainly oppose the amendment on principle. There is nothing in our whole history and background to show that we should turn around now and do something because we think the interest rate is too high. I think our negotiators are perfectly able and patriotic people. I am quite certain in my own mind that as Americans they will do a good job for us.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether Switzerland is getting preferential treatment in this bill. It is true that we must carry out our obligations in the matter of damages to neutrals following a war. Whether the Committee on Appropriations is going to have another chance at this bill, I do not know, because it is indicated there are to be some negotiations as to the matter of interest. Perhaps this matter could wait for the actions of the regular war claims commission.

I am deeply concerned over statements made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG]. I hope in the extension of his remarks he will tell some more of the story of the treatment accorded to our aviators who were interned in Switzerland. He was on the ground and he should know. The story has been told to us before and is known to the former chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for State Department, the the Honorable LOUIS C. RABAUT, of Michigan who is here today.

I wish the membership of this committee could tell us the total amount we paid to the Swiss Government for representing us during the war, and the interest rate thereon. This amount ran into many millions of dollars. Was interest figured on that transaction and at what rate?

The purpose of my taking the floor at this time is to interrogate the membership of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to whether or not we have credits on surplus lend-lease or anything at this time with the Swiss Government. Can anyone give me that information? If we have credits we could pay this bill with such credits, if any.

Mr. KEE. If I understand the situation correctly, Switzerland never received anything from the United States in lend-lease.

Mr. STEFAN. If they received surplus materials and paid in cash, I have nothing more to ask. But if we have credit, I would like to know whether or not the committee went into some detail as to the amounts of those credits and whether those credits could be applied on this bill of $16,000,000 for damages alleged to have been done to Swiss property by our armed forces. Of course, Switzerland was not in the war. She collected from all sides.

Mr. KEE. We certainly did not go into an examination of all the affairs between the Swiss Government and the Government of the United States, and as to whether there were debits on one side, or credits on the other side.

Mr. STEFAN. We had better go into that.

Mr. KEE. If I may answer the gentleman, we went into the question solely of whether this country and this Government was liable to Switzerland for these claims. We went into that and then we went into the amount of the claims.

Mr. STEFAN. I deeply appreciate the gentleman's explanation. But in reply to the statement that the gentleman makes, that you did not go into it, I say we had better go into all credits we have with all foreign governments, in view of the financial condition of our Government. We are nearing the rocks of financial disaster and it is important that we start taking credit or start collecting from every foreign government which owes us.

You had better go into the billions of dollars of surplus property which we have turned over to foreign governments and also start getting something back on billions of lend-lease.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. Pardon me. Let me finish my statement. One committee of your Congress in the House of Representatives, the committee on State Department, has gone into it at great length, and as a result of going into it we are collecting in credits millions of dollars in valuable property and buildings and other tangible things which we could not have got in any other way except by demanding credits on surplus property and lend-lease. Perhaps Switzerland owes us nothing. I merely rose for information. If one committee is able to get back millions in lend-lease and surplus property credits, the practice should be followed generally for the best interests of our badly depleted Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] has expired.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. TAURIELLO for the Young amendment: On page 2, line 2, strike out the period and add the following:

"And that no interest payment be authorized."

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer this substitute amendment because I am unalterably opposed to the payment of any interest on these claims. First of all, I feel that they are not entitled to it; secondly, I feel that the Swiss Government, in making this claim for $16,000,000, from my observation, has padded this claim. It seems to me that all of those countries on the other side are trying to get every dollar they possibly can from our Government. They seem to be of the impression that our streets are lined with gold and all that they have to do is to make a request and we open up our coffers to them. I feel strongly about the payment of interest on this particular claim, not because it is to the Government of Switzerland, but to any other government that has a claim against the United States Government for any maintenance or assistance given to any of our men that they may have had in their custody or care.

I certainly hope that my amendment does prevail, because I think we are being taken over the coals by some of these European countries and other countries who think that we have money to give away not by the bushel but by the ton. I appeal to the members of this committee to uphold my amendment to give no interest to the Swiss Government for this claim of $16,000,000.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAURIELLO. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman recall that Congress passed an act to pay specific prisoners, held by the Japanese and cruelly treated, $1 a day?

Mr. TAURIELLO. I do.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman know whether they were ever paid?

Mr. TAURIELLO. That I cannot answer. I am not in a position to say.

Mr. GROSS. I think the gentleman will find that they have never been paid. Yet we rush in pell-mell to pay the Swiss Government $16,000,000, and, in addition to that, $3,000,000 interest, at the rate of 5 percent. It does not make sense.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Chairman, in my concluding remarks I am asking that the committee support my amendment to give the Swiss Government no interest at all on this claim for $16,000,000. If I may put it that way, I think it is showing a lot of nerve for any government to come here and ask for a rate of interest on its claim.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAURIELLO. I yield.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. May I observe that in the United States, on a tort claim by any American citizen, there is no interest allowed until the verdict is returned. Interest is allowed only from the date on which the verdict is entered.

Mr. TAURIELLO. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask this question: How much freedom would the Swiss be enjoying today if it had not been for the efforts of our soldiers over in Europe? Everybody knows the answer. To give them $16,000,0000 at this time is being generous, doubly generous. The history of claims in this country is a very interesting one. At the beginning of World War I we took over considerable enemy property. At the beginning of World War II we came back and took over, I am sorry to say, some of the same property from some of the very same people and companies. Something has been said about how our country has benefited. One country in Europe, at the conclusion of World War I, satisfied its claims to a very high proportion and gave us a promise. Our colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] a year or so ago introduced a bill which was passed, and I was glad to support it, to give to some American citizens who had waited more than 20 years a settlement of their claims, not by that country that promised to pay, but in the main by what the American Government itself paid.

We are altogether too hasty in our efforts to take care of those other countries, countries which have been the great beneficiaries of America's generosity and hospitality before even emamining the merits of the claims of our own country and our own citizens. How paltry are the pittances we give our own people. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WILSON] this afternoon mentioned the fact that a Bataan hero had died very recently and he paid tribute to that man. What did we do, or what do we propose to do for those boys who were in the death march on Bataan? We propose to give them a dollar a day, 33⅓ cents per meal, for what they suffered in the way of torture and loss of health. What has happened? We passed that bill almost a year ago but thus far these, our own soldiers, have not received even one penny, yet those boys are dying daily because of their sufferings at the hands of our enemies.

I repeat, we are too hasty to satisfy those who have been the beneficiaries of our hospitality; and our effort, before we even give study and consideration to the claims which this country has—and it has them throughout the world—no one could fail to heed what the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN], said just a few minutes ago: At times it looks as if we care not about the financial stability and welfare of this country; at times it appears as though we pay little attention to the needs of our own people; yet we came along here and because some foreign country presents a claim regardless of the size and the rate of interest we hastily undertake to pass it and do so before we find out what our own rights are and the equities of our own citizens are.

I am not one who says that there may not be some merit to this bill; there may be, but certainly in giving these people $16,000,000, people whose very freedom depended on our effort, we are being doubly generous, yes, trebly so; and, certainly, it is being generous in view of the fact that as of this amount the War Claims Commission set up to review the entire war claims picture has not even begun to operate.

I say that the time to begin to consider America's welfare is on even a small bill of this nature; and before we go to giving the Swiss interest at a rate of perhaps 5 percent, or at any percent, let us pause; let us weigh equities, country by country, and individuals by individuals, our own country and individuals first; if we give the Swiss the amount of money provided by this bill, we shall have been wonderfully free in the taxpayers' money, especially since the claims of our own people, people who suffered literally around the world, have not been adjudicated. Yes, let us be a little more cautious.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Surely the gentleman does not want to lump into the same category claims that come as the result of American violations of the rights of neutrals and claims that come because of mistreatment of some of our own soldiers by an enemy country. The gentleman belongs to the party of the great Woodrow Wilson, who took our country into World War I because of the violation of the rights of neutrals. We were the neutral. We insisted on sending ships into combat areas. Yet when they were damaged we considered the infringement of our rights so serious as to require war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that if we had lumped them all together and dealt with them until a final conclusion as to what was fair and right for our own country and our own nationals as well as other countries and the nationals of other countries, we might not have been left holding the bag as to certain kinds of claims at the conclusion of World War I.

Mr. JUDD. But we did not. What does that have to do with the claim of the Swiss when we admit we violated their neutrality? It was not intentional, but innocent neutral people were killed, they suffered, and we are responsible.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I may say that the claim issue taken from an over-all point of view is one that as of this date cannot be clearly assessed because of its many ramifications and the various points of view. The very fact there are several different bills before the Congress at this time, bills that relate to devious and numerous types of claims, claims even from countries other than Switzerland, I am sure, is evidence of that fact.

Mr. JUDD. It has been 4 years and that does not seem to me to be very hasty or pell-mell. Negotiations have been going on and are still going on. Originally the claims were for about $18,000,000. The Army has paid part of them, it has negotiated others, it has reduced the figure by about 6,000,000. There has been fair bargaining and agreement. Does not the gentleman want this country to keep its agreements?

Mr. BECKWORTH. All of which adds up to the fact the whole picture is a complicated situation that has not even been studied with reference to the claims of our own civilians and soldiers although our War Claims Commission was authorized nearly a year ago. May I say it has been 4 years, yes, and longer than 4 years since our boys were on the Bataan march. Why not be as expeditious in handling those claims as handling the Swiss claims.

Mr. JUDD. I would like to be, and I support such a move. To me it is outrageous that the Government has not put the War Claims Commission into operation. But why penalize the Swiss for our failures in another field?

Mr. BECKWORTH. Why not come to ours first?

Mr. JUDD. I am in agreement with the gentleman as to the responsibility for our own here at home, but the Committee on Foreign Affairs cannot handle those other claims; that is the responsibility of other committees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TAURIELLO] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAURIELLO) there were—ayes 23, noes 22.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I would like to ask whether it takes 20 percent of 100 or 20 percent of the Members present on the floor to order tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule it takes 20 in the Committee of the Whole to order tellers.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I thank the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG] as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TAURIELLO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JUDD) there were—ayes 24, noes 22.

So the amendment as amended by the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3:

"SEC. 2. Appropriations are hereby authorized to carry out the purpose of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHELF, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4392) to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor, pursuant to House Resolution 204, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAURIELLO) there were—ayes 25, noes 23.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of the bill be postponed until tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

STOCK PILING OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS

Mr. LYLE, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 208, Rept. No. 546), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2682) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3932) to exempt artificial limbs from duty if imported for personal use and not for sale, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Line 6, after "and" insert "limb."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHAFER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a magazine article.

Mr. SHORT asked and was given permission to include in his remarks extended in the RECORD during debate in Committee of the Whole this afternoon an editorial that appeared in today's Washington News.

Mr. WAGNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on Loyalty Day.

Mr. DINGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. Lowell Mellett.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Illinois (at the request of Mr. RABAUT) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Gen. Julius Klein.

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon at the last quorum call I was not present on the floor. The reason therefor is that I was in attendance at a session of the United States Supreme Court when the argument was being made in the case of United States against Texas, involving tidelands. I was present because of the great interest of the State of California in that subject and my own interest in it on account of my home city of Long Beach, Calif., being so vitally interested in it.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the House Members are familiar with the great care exercised by the Ways and Means Committee in its preparation of the revenue bills. Every effort is made to provide the Government with the revenue needed. Yet the objectives sought can easily be defeated unless such laws are enforced. As I understand it, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his testimony before the Appropriations Committees has sounded a strong warning as to signs of deterioration in voluntary compliance on the part of the taxpayers, and the resulting inadequacy of present enforcement work. This is due, according to his testimony, to the fact that he does not have an adequate staff of front-line enforcement officers to enforce the provisions of the taxing statutes. His warning is not based merely on personal opinions, but is supported by the views of an impartial advisory group appointed by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation under Public Law 147 of the Eightieth Congress. The report of this group was submitted to the joint committee last year, and as a member of both the Ways and Means Committee and the joint committee, I have carefully considered the findings of that group. I think every Member of the House should read that report. That group's estimate of minimum employees required to adequately administer present tax laws with substantially the present type of Bureau procedures was 67,700 persons. This is 13,707 more employees than have been approved by the House for 1950. In other words, the House has provided the Bureau of Internal Revenue with nearly 20 percent less staff than the advisory group of the joint committee felt was essential to collect our taxes.

After thorough hearing of the Bureau's requests, the Senate granted the full amount requested by the President. This is further evidence that the tax-collecting agency should be provided with the funds essential to maintain our revenue under the laws which are now on the books.

In view of this, I should like to ask that the conferees appointed to consider H. R. 3083 with the Senate give their most earnest consideration to the report of the joint committee, as well as to the record of the testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee, in connection with their discussions, and I trust that in no event will they make arbitrary reductions without due regard to the circumstances cited in that report.

The members of the Committee on Ways and Means, deeply concerned, have already probed this matter and their findings indicate the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars due the Treasury could have been collected from careless taxpayers or mostly from deliberate evaders. If the revenues due the Government are not being fully collected because of a short-sighted appropriations policy which curtails personnel to the crippling point, then for a certainty there will be a deficit which only an increase in the tax schedules can balance. Such tax increase will be borne not by the tax evader, but will be thrust upon the honest taxpayer.

As a member of the Joint Committee on Taxation and of the Ways and Means Committee, I assume this important question of personnel will be carefully scrutinized by the conferees and, I deduct, the findings of the advisory group along with their recommendations will be sustained. It stands to reason that a cut in appropriations for personnel is short-sighted when for every dollar of the reduced appropriation a revenue loss of at least $20 is incurred. A simple arithmetical difference or loss of $19 for every dollar saved in salaries. The original move was born of a desperate effort to show paper reductions in expenditure regardless of ultimate consequences upon revenues.

The reasonable and sound course to follow in righting the error of the meat-ax expenditure reduction which crippled the Bureau of Internal Revenue and proved so costly to the Treasury is to provide immediately for the restoration of the maximum number of qualified employees who can be trained to do the job effectively.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on the record do not want an excess of employees beyond the ability of the Department to train and absorb them into an efficient tax-collecting organization.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH AND CHEMICAL FOOD SUBSTITUTES

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, research workers in our chemical laboratories did a magnificent service for the country during the war through the development of new chemicals and their application to new uses. Like many scientific developments, the consequences of these new discoveries are not all beneficent. We are now faced with growing pressures for the use of scores and hundreds of new chemicals in our food supply without sufficient knowledge of what effect they may have on our health and welfare. I am informed that since the beginning of the war more than 500 new chemicals have been prepared for use in one or more of our foods. The claimed advantages of foods which are chemicalized are legion. Among them are improved appearance, texture, flavor, uniformity, keeping quality, and suitability to streamlined production, resistance to attack by insects and other vermin, cheaper production and handling costs, and so forth. Most of these new chemicals have been inadequately tested to show whether or not they may ultimately through continued use poison the consumer.

To commercialize a new chemical for use in food before its potentialities are known is in my opinion to use the public as a guinea pig. The necessity cannot be too strongly stressed for a thoroughgoing investigation of all phases of toxicity of every new chemical intended for use in connection with food production, processing, storage, and handling where there is any likelihood that even a trace may remain in the food at the time of consumption. To produce and use new chemical products for any such purpose before this basic research has been done, is to invite disaster in terms of human suffering and human life.

I want to say at the outset of these remarks that the great food-processing industry of America is, and has been, doing a most remarkable job in an effort to find toxicity that may find its way into the food products and to prevent, by human ingenuity and scientific research, so far as possible, the introduction of every new chemical into the food stream of the Nation that might even remotely deleteriously affect public health. The problem, however, must be approached from a number of angles. You will recall that on the 2d of March of this year I addressed the House on the subject of chemicals of nonbiological origin being used as substitutes for natural foods. At that time I stated:

Hearings are now in progress before the Federal Security Agency, Food and Drug Administration, for the development of standards of identity for bread, rolls, buns, and related products. The entire series of chemical emulsifying agents described herein have been proposed for inclusion in these standards. It is evident from the intense effort being made by the proponents of the chemical emulsifying agents that they consider the bread-standards hearings to be the crucial test concerned with Government approval for use of these materials in all foods. The amount of effort being expended is most unusual for a hearing of this type. The subject already has been discussed in the bread hearing for more than a month and will likely continue for an additional 1 or 2 months. It is evident that the financial expenditure concerned with the inclusion of these materials in bread has been extremely large.

The proponents of the compounds deny intent to defraud the consumer through a reduction in fat content and milk content of bread, but they do not deny the allegation that the use of their material will make such reduction possible. It has been admitted that some of the sales agencies handling these materials have recommended such reductions in fat content and milk content of bread. The proponents of these materials have also claimed that the nutritional value of bread would be decreased by the exclusion of shortening from the formula, but their experts have contended that such a decrease in nutritive value would be of little or no importance to the American consumer. They do not appear to realize that bread and other baked products convey to the consumer over 40 percent of the total shortening and lard intake. Their claims concerned with lack of importance of nutritive value are invariably based on the caloric value of one slice of bread or some other extremely small unit. The fallacy of such an argument may be easily understood if consideration is given to the fact that cereal foods such as bread and other baked goods furnish more than one-third of the total energy consumed by the public. In fact, some nutritionists have estimated that 38 percent of the total food of this country is consumed in the form of cereal products. It is well known that the percentage is even higher among members of the low-income groups, children, and the aged. A reduction in the food value of bread would prove a calamity for this group.

Although only bread and related products are being discussed in the current hearings, cereal mixes and even household baking will likely be affected by the decision. It is apparent that the total effect of these compounds on the consumption of fats and other valuable foods will not be limited to the reduced usage within the bakery field.

EFFECT ON AGRICULTURE

These chemical emulsifiers have been used in a limited way in the manufacture of food products since their development. To the extent of their use as a substitute, the consumption of agricultural commodities has been reduced. A great many manufacturers of food products have been reluctant to use them until their harmlessness or harmfulness has been definitely established. If, as a result of hearings now in progress before the Federal Security Agency, their use is sanctioned by Government approval, the extent of their usage will become widespread in the manufacture of a great many processed foods. Some of the foods in which these chemical emulsifiers are used are listed elsewhere herein (sec. III, p. 4). Their approval by the Government poses a serious threat to agricultural commodities for which they are used as substitutes. The extent of this threat is indicated when consideration is given to the fact that bread, cereal mixes, and bakery products now account for over 40 percent of the domestic consumption of lard and shortening. These two food-processing industries alone consume about 1,350,000,000 pounds of lard and shortening annually. It is estimated that the use of these chemical emulsifiers, if approved by the Government, will reduce this rate of consumption by at least 500,000,000 pounds. The extent to which the chemicals are used will of course determine the amount of the reduction. It is possible for their use to almost completely replace the use of fat by these industries.

The literature of some suppliers of chemical emulsifiers recommends a reduction of both milk and fats in the manufacture of bread. In other bakery products such as cakes, a reduction of milk, eggs, and fats is recommended. The baking industry consumes upward of 225,000,000 pounds of powdered skim milk (equivalent to 1,800,000,000 pounds of fluid milk) and nearly 200,000 pounds of eggs (167,000,000 dozen annually). The United States Department of Agriculture in one of its publications stated that 10 percent of the farmer's income is derived from fats and oils. The combined effect of these reductions in the use of agricultural commodities constitutes a very serious threat to the American farmer.

It becomes increasingly clear that the present food and drug laws are inadequate to enable our food and drug authorities to evaluate these materials in terms of their true effect on the American economy. Handicapped as they are by lack of subpena power, Dr. Dunbar's men are doing as well as can be expected in their attempt to sift the bad from the good in the vast amount of selected data presented to them by professional technical witnesses who are endeavoring to foist these chemical compounds onto the American public.

This battle concerning the use of chemicals in staple foods is being fought in the front yard of the baking industry, one of the oldest and most valuable of the food industries. Bakers have pointed out that they are afraid that the reputation of their industry would be harmed if we were to probe into these practices. On the surface, it appears that some bakers have been guilty and are guilty of the questionable practices, to say the least. The baking industry as such represents one of the country's most vital industries and is one of the prime users of agricultural products; it is the maker and the guardian of the bread, the staff of life. In my previous report to the Congress I indicated that this industry utilizes 1,400,000,000 pounds of shortening, of lard, annually; nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds of fluid milk, and 167,000,000 dozen eggs. This industry also uses nearly 10,000,000,000 pounds of flour per year, as well as vast quantities of sugar, flavoring extracts, fruits, nuts, and a wide variety of many other good and wholesome products of our agricultural areas. It is truly one of the most important cogs in our agricultural machine. The industry is widely scattered and consists of over 30,000 individual businesses in America. While much of the grocery-store type of bread is produced by large multiple-unit corporations, the very great percentage of our bread production is by individually owned firms.

Ample evidence has been placed in the record in these hearings before the Pure Food and Drug Administration by the sales agencies, not by Atlas Powder, or any of the other folks who actually produce these chemicals, but by their sales agencies through whom they sell their product to the baking industry of the country. I say ample evidence has been placed in the record by the sales agencies for Atlas Powder and by the C. J. Patterson Co. of Kansas City, that some 10,000,000 pounds of their chemicals have been used by bakers, and that the use of this quantity of their material represents its inclusion in a total of from four to five billion pounds of bread.

Now, understand me, I am not accusing the baking industry or anyone else of fraud; I am giving you some facts, and as I follow through in this discussion you be the judge of the situation. This is an enormous figure and indicates that here at least 25 percent of our people are already unknowingly eating these chemicals in their bread or other bakery products. Baking is an ancient and honorable craft, and it is recognized that the industry includes some of the country's soundest citizens. With the exception of the baking organizations of national scope who are able to afford competent technical staffs and thus be able to conduct their own investigations—and I may say parenthetically at this point that when they have conducted their own investigations they have rejected these chemicals—the remainder of the industry has been forced to rely upon representations made to them by the sales agents who come around and sell their products to the little baker all over the United States. These smaller bakers are not equipped to determine with technical precision the long-term effect which may come with the inclusion of these chemicals in such an important portion of the Nation's total food supply. The competitive nature of their industry forces individual bakers to use ingredients which they many times neither desire nor approve.

If it is not already clear, I would like to comment on the importance of baking to the people of this country. There are various estimates concerning the quantity of grain and cereal products consumed by this industry. I believe that experts in our Department of Agriculture will support my contention that at least 25 percent of the Nation's grain is converted directly into bakery products. This does not include the great quantity of grains fed to livestock and later consumed by bakers in the form of shortening. Nor does it include the quantity of grain used in the production of such ingredients as yeast and malt and later used in the production of bread.

This industry plays such an important part in our delicately balanced agricultural economy that a disturbance as portended by these chemicals would have a devastating effect on our entire agricultural picture.

May I say that over in the other body, the Senate of the United States, a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, headed by the distinguished Senator from Iowa, Senator GILLETTE, is conducting hearings concerned primarily with the economic aspects of the situation and the threat that exists to the agricultural industry of this country if the ultimate use of these chemicals will grow in the manner in which those who are making them claim they ultimately will and thus supplant the use of organic materials in the diet of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned primarily with the health of the people of America to determine what the ultimate effect may be of the constant ingestion into the diet of the people of America of these chemicals that are finding their way in tremendous quantities into the food supply of the Nation. What is the effect ultimately to be upon the health and the welfare of the people of America? The economic aspects of it will follow, of course, when that is determined.

Beginning in January of this year, the Atlas Powder Co. began their testimony which has not yet been completed. Their very highly trained chemist, Dr. Robert S. Rose, explained the manufacture of their compounds. The record is filled with such names as polyol, polyoxy, polyalkoxy, glycols, ethylene glycol, diethylene glycol, sorbide, hexide, mannide, hexatol, hesitan, hydrophyl, hydrophobe, and hundreds more.

No wonder the newspaper boys who have been attending those hearings found them to be so drab and so technical and so difficult that they have been hardly able to write the dramatic stories that ought to be written concerning this threat to the health and welfare of the people of this country and to the agricultural economy of this country.

It cannot be questioned that the chemical industry has already begun a march into the food business and is already producing in volume substances to replace products grown on our farms. Principal raw materials described in the testimony referred to are ethylene oxide gas produced from natural gas and petroleum. This substance may also be produced from coal. Ethylene oxide is a gas which is used as an anesthetic by the medical profession. The chemists have admitted that when this gas is combined with water, it produces ethylene glycol, a deadly chemical. Perhaps some of you recall some 30 to 40 deaths in this country in 1938 which resulted from the use of a medicinal product known as elixir of sulfanilamide. The cause of these deaths was ethylene glycol which was used in that medicinal product. These chemists claim, however, that if enough ethylene oxide is used and the amount of water is held to a sufficiently low quantity, there is little or no danger with respect to ethylene glycol because the product of the reaction is then called a polyglycol. The product of the Glyco Products Manufacturing Co. which corresponds to the product of the Atlas Powder Co., although made by a different method, is admitted by their chemists to contain approximately three-tenths of 1 percent of the deadly ethylene glycol.

There was circulated in the gallery today and on the floor of this House statements evidently put out by someone—I do not know by whom, from reading it, but it would appear that it was perhaps a defense of these Atlas products entitled "Food Emulsifiers Are Not Substitutes" and so forth, attempting to explain what a wonderful addition they are to the food supply of the Nation and attacking those who would dare, perhaps, to raise the question before the American people as to the threat that exists in their continued use.

Toxicologists and nutritionists brought by the Atlas Powder Co. and Glyco Products Manufacturing Co. to this hearing have testified in an attempt to support the manufacturers' claims that their products are harmless. However, the Food and Drug Administration has developed at the hearing that their data supporting such claims is filled with many unexplainable irregularities concerning the deaths of rats, dogs, and other animals under study. One medical doctor engaged by Atlas Powder Co. testified about feeding quantities of these chemicals to some 60 medical students for a period of 4 weeks. A large percentage of his students reported manifestations of diarrhea, belching, pruritis, itching, and other symptoms. Yet this medical man dismissed the symptoms as unimportant and meaningless because all of his subjects seemed to develop a resistance to the compound as the tests progressed and all of the so-called side effects disappeared after the first 2 weeks' feeding. I have been amazed to learn of numerous irregularities in the physiological work which have been explained away by professional witnesses paid to sponsor these products from funds advanced by the chemical manufacturers.

I have had some experience over some 30 years as a lawyer, as many Members have had, and we know sometimes how to evaluate the testimony of pathologist or other expert that may be called into litigation. I know that there is a very definite tendency to support the contention of the side that is paying the bill and that hires him.

Their rat colonies have been swept by typhoid infection, lung disease, cannibalism, and by other apparent warning signals. Yet, to a man, they have told our Food and Drug investigators that these warning signals are meaningless and should be ignored. This portion of the testimony must be left in the capable hands of the experts of Food and Drug. One important aspect on which all witnesses have agreed is the fact that the polyglycols are not foods. They claim that these chemicals float around in the blood stream of the body only to be excreted as waste materials, principally by way of the kidneys and urinary tract. It is admitted by all of the witnesses that these glycols make up from 60 to 93 percent of the total weight of the chemicals under consideration; it is further admitted that they are not foods and are not assimilated by the human being. There is no semblance of agreement among the various technical witnesses as to what happens to the polyglycol after it is eaten by the unsuspecting consumer. One group claims that all of the polyglycol is excreted by the human body; others admit that at least 25 percent of it is retained in the body in either the cellular or extracellular water. These technical witnesses have also acknowledged the fact that these glycols are wonderful solvents. In fact, they are used in industry for dissolving substances which ordinarily are very difficult to dissolve. One of the primary uses of these glycols is for solvent purposes in the insecticide and pesticide fields.

I want to ask these manufacturers and these scientists, What will be the effect of the continuous pumping of these solvents through the human blood stream from the cradle to the grave, as it was characterized by one of the Food and Drug attorneys. No one can now say with assurance what the effect will be. No one can now say what the effect is on the human being now. It seems to me tragic that the chemical manufacturers have ignored this important question in the sale of their compounds.

There is very little scientific literature on the subject because these products are so new that our universities and other research institutions have not had sufficient time to study them. There is, however, a meager amount of information put into the scientific literature by disinterested doctors and nutritionists, some of which has been put into the RECORD. In every case, they have cast doubt on the safety of these products now being proposed for use in the Nation's food.

One of the doctors that testified down here in these hearings was Dr. William J. Darby, a member of the Council of Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association. He testified on the morning of April 29, and I have his testimony.

Listed on that council were:

Dr. James Wilson, secretary of the council, who was a pediatrician in private practice before he took the full-time position as secretary.

Dr. George R. Cogwill, who is professor of nutrition at Yale University School of Medicine.

Dr. C. A. Elvehjem, who is professor of biochemistry, University of Wisconsin. May I say parenthetically that Dr. Elvehjem is perhaps one of the Nation's great biochemists, and he has made tremendous contributions to human welfare as the result of his research.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of AMA.

Dr. Philip C. Jeans, professor of pediatrics, University of Iowa School of Medicine.

Mr. Culver S. Ladd, the Compliance and Investigation Branch of the Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Howard B. Lewis, department of biological chemistry, University of Michigan.

Dr. Harold C. Stuart, Harvard University School of Public Health.

Dr. Russell M. Wilder, who is chief of medicine at the Mayo Clinic.

Dr. John B. Youmans, formerly professor of medicine, Vanderbilt University School of Medicine.

Dr. James S. McLester, chairman of the council.

And so on.

There is a pretty distinguished group of men, representing the Council of Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association, who have given some investigation to this subject. I have here a recently adopted resolution which might be of some interest to the people of America and ought to be of some interest to those who propose to inject these chemicals into the food supply of the Nation. It is quoted in the hearings, and is as follows:

An increasing proportion of the Nation's food supply is subjected to industrial processing. Accordingly, alterations in processing technics may have a direct bearing on the quality of the national diet and health. In general the food industries are to be commended for their awareness of the responsibility which they carry for the protection of the Nation's food supply. Improved methods of processing have been developed for preservation of nutrients in foodstuffs and "fortification" and "enrichment" of foodstuffs has been developed as recommended by various officials and nonofficial agencies.

At the present, however, there is being introduced a new processing practice which the council views with considerable apprehension—namely, the widespread addition of certain surface-active compounds (shortening extenders) to a variety of foods, especially bread and other bakery products.

These surface active agents are derivatives of polyoxyethylene and generally contain a polyhydric alcohol moiety with varying proportions of fatty acids. They are added to foodstuffs during processing in order to aid emulsification. Their use allows the production of a smooth-textured product, often of superior sales appeal, which contains less fat than one made without the extender. In some instances the addition of the agent also permits the lowering of the proportions of other important food ingredients in the product—for example, the use in bread imparts similar properties of "freshness" as does the use of nonfat milk solids.

Available knowledge of the possible toxicity of these substances in fragmentary—particularly is evidence lacking as to chronic toxicity. The employment of these agents in the processing of such basic foods as bread and bakery goods, as well as other foods (such as ice cream, candy, peanut butter, etc.) could lead to the ingestion of considerable quantities of these materials of uncertain toxicologic action. Unless the complete harmlessness of these agents can be demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt, they should not, in the council's opinion, be employed in basic foods.

When these agents are used as extenders, particularly in making bread, cakes, and pastries, the nutritive quality of the product is usually diluted. This dilution results from the decrease in amounts of fat, milk solids, and, in some cases, eggs required to produce an "acceptable" product. The caloric value of the extender itself is not completely defined, but is considerably less than the shortening which it may replace. Any reduction in content of milk and eggs in products would obviously reduce the quantity of a number of important nutrients in the food. Such a dilution is not desirable from a nutritional standpoint.

The council's concern in reference to the use of these substances in foods resides in the inadequacy of knowledge concerning their toxicity and the deterioration in nutritive value of basic foods which their introduction allows.

That is a pretty profound statement coming from this council composed of the type of men whose names I have put in the RECORD. All of the attempts of the high-priced lawyers for these chemical companies to cross-examine Dr. Darby and his witnesses in an attempt to break that statement down were, in my opinion, of no avail.

In March 1949 there was issued a booklet on Synthetic Fats: Their Potential Contribution to World Food Requirements. FAO Nutritional Study No. 2, prepared by the Nutrition Division of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations. That booklet contains a full and complete story of the development of these synthetic fats to take the place of organic foods and the possibilities that might exist. Because of its interest, I want to read to you what they say about synthetic margarines:

Synthetic margarines, being devoid of the protein material and the indigenous substances present in milk products and natural fats, are more stable than ordinary margarines. This can be shown by various tests—Lea's peroxide test, Fellenberg's aldehyde test, the Kreis test, Taufel-Thaler's methyl ketone test (10). Synthetic margarines keep well in ordinary packages for more than four months as compared to six weeks for ordinary margarine kept under similar conditions.

That is the very point that I raised, and the only point I raised during the debate on the floor of this House when the margarine discussion was up here. I pointed out then the possibility of what might happen in that industry if the chemical boys decided to substitute chemistry for organic fats and oils that are presently being used in the production of margarine.

So they conclude in this work:

No final conclusion on the nutritional value of synthetic fats can be drawn at the present time. The available information emphasizes the need for further experimental work.

It would, however, clearly be premature to advocate the large-scale manufacture of synthetic fats for human consumption, pending the collection of more complete and satisfactory experimental and clinical data.

Now my colleagues, this presents a challenge to the baking industry and to the fat-processing industry. I do not want to see something happen such as happened when some chemical manufacturer decided to make a product to take the place of salt in the diet of those who were told by their physicians to limit their salt intake. We know what happened. Seven or eight people had to die. To me it is a very important contribution to the thought on this situation.

You remember that some years ago there was developed in the flour and milling industry a process of agenizing flour, by which they bleached flour and agenized it with nitrogen trichloride. A howl went up at that time, and it has been many years ago since the milling industry has been using that product to bleach flour and to kill the bugs and do away with the vermin that get into flour as the result of natural pollution. They said agenizing flour in this manner will never cause any injury to human beings, but it has taken years to develop the facts. They could not demonstrate it right away, but they did demonstrate it up in Canada, and last year Canada legislated this process out of existence. Because of the research which has developed some astounding things, the milling industry has voluntarily stopped the process, as soon as they can equip their mills, of agenizing their flour through the use of nitrogen trichloride.

I hold in my hand an article by Dr. M. G. Peterman, of Milwaukee, on the subject Epilepsy in Childhood.

May I say in passing there is no greater authority in this country, or in the world, than Dr. Peterman on that subject. He is a great scientist, one of the great pediatricians of the world. In this article he says:

Last year it was demonstrated that the feeding of wheat gluten or agenized flour, bleached with nitrogen trichloride, produced clinical epilepsy in monkeys, dogs and cats even to the reproduction of the typical electroencephalographic patterns.

Fortunately, this condition has not been reproduced in man, because they have not had the same guinea pigs to work on as they did with dogs and monkeys and so on.

The point I am making is this: All of the accumulated evidence I have been able to assemble, aside from the technical experts employed by the chemical organizations themselves, points to the fact vestigations they have rejected these chemicals—the remainder of the industry has been forced to rely upon representations made to them by the sales agents who come around and sell their products to the little baker all over the United States. These smaller bakers are not equipped to determine with technical precision the long-term effect which may come with the inclusion of these chemicals in such an important portion of the Nation's total food supply. The competitive nature of their industry forces individual bakers to use ingredients which they many times neither desire nor approve.

If it is not already clear, I would like to comment on the importance of baking to the people of this country. There are various estimates concerning the quantity of grain and cereal products consumed by this industry. These chemists claim, however, that if enough ethylene oxide is used and the amount of water is held to a sufficiently low quantity, there is little or no danger with respect to ethylene glycol because the product of the reaction is then called a polyglycol. The product of the Glyco Products Manufacturing Co. which corresponds to the product of the Atlas Powder Co., although made by a different method, is admitted by their chemists to contain approximately three-tenths of 1 percent of the deadly ethylene glycol.

There was circulated in the gallery today and on the floor of this House statements evidently put out by someone—I do not know by whom, from reading it, but it would appear that it was perhaps a defense of these Atlas products entitled "Food Emulsifiers Are Not Substitutes" and so forth, attempting to explain what a wonderful addition they are to the food supply of the Nation and attacking those who would dare, perhaps, to raise the question before the American people as to the threat that exists in their continued use.

Toxicologists and nutritionists brought by the Atlas Powder Co. and Glyco Products Manufacturing Co. to this hearing have testified in an attempt to support the manufacturers' claims that their products are harmless. However, the Food and Drug Administration has developed at the hearing that their data supporting such claims is filled with many unexplainable irregularities concerning the deaths of rats, dogs, and other animals under study. One medical doctor engaged by Atlas Powder Co. testified about feeding quantities of these chemicals to some 60 medical students for a period of 4 weeks. A large percentage of his students reported manifestations of diarrhea, belching, pruritis, itching, and other symptoms. Yet this medical man dismissed the symptoms as unimportant and meaningless because all of his subjects seemed to develop a resistance to the compound as the tests progressed and all of the so-called side effects disappeared after the first 2 weeks' feeding. I have been amazed to learn of numerous irregularities in the physiological work which have been explained away by professional witnesses paid to sponsor these products from funds advanced by the chemical manufacturers.

I have had some experience over some 30 years as a lawyer, as many Members have had, and we know sometimes how to evaluate the testimony of pathologist or other expert that may be called into litigation. I know that there is a very definite tendency to support the contention of the side that is paying the bill and that hires him.

Their rat colonies have been swept by typhoid infection, lung disease, cannibalism, and by other apparent warning signals. Yet, to a man, they have told our Food and Drug investigators that these warning signals are meaningless and should be ignored. This portion of the testimony must be left in the capable hands of the experts of Food and Drug. One important aspect on which all witnesses have agreed is the fact that the polyglycols are not foods. They claim that these chemicals float around in the blood stream of the body only to be excreted as waste materials, principally by way of the kidneys and urinary tract. It is admitted by all of the witnesses that these glycols make up from 60 to 93 percent of the total weight of the chemicals under consideration; it is further admitted that they are not foods and are not assimilated by the human being. There is no semblance of agreement among the various technical witnesses as to what happens to the polyglycol after it is eaten by the unsuspecting consumer. One group claims that all of the polyglycol is excreted by the human body; others admit that at least 25 percent of it is retained in the body in either the cellular or extracellular water. These technical witnesses have also acknowledged the fact that these glycols are wonderful solvents. In fact, they are used in industry for dissolving substances which ordinarily are very difficult to dissolve. One of the primary uses of these glycols is for solvent purposes in the insecticide and pesticide fields.

I want to ask these manufacturers and these scientists, What will be the effect of the continuous pumping of these solvents through the human blood stream from the cradle to the grave, as it was characterized by one of the Food and Drug attorneys. No one can now say with assurance what the effect will be. No one can now say what the effect is on the human being now. It seems to me tragic that the chemical manufacturers have ignored this important question in the sale of their compounds.

There is very little scientific literature on the subject because these products are so new that our universities and other research institutions have not had sufficient time to study them. There is, however, a meager amount of information put into the scientific literature by disinterested doctors and nutritionists, some of which has been put into the RECORD. In every case, they have cast doubt on the safety of these products now being proposed for use in the Nation's food.

One of the doctors that testified down here in these hearings was Dr. William J. Darby, a member of the Council of Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association. He testified on the morning of April 29, and I have his testimony.

Listed on that council were:

Dr. James Wilson, secretary of the council, who was a pediatrician in private practice before he took the full-time position as secretary.

Dr. George R. Cogwill, who is professor of nutrition at Yale University School of Medicine.

Dr. C. A. Elvehjem, who is professor of biochemistry, University of Wisconsin. May I say parenthetically that Dr. Elvehjem is perhaps one of the Nation's great biochemists, and he has made tremendous contributions to human welfare as the result of his research.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of AMA.

Dr. Philip C. Jeans, professor of pediatrics, University of Iowa School of Medicine.

Mr. Culver S. Ladd, the Compliance and Investigation Branch of the Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Howard B. Lewis, department of biological chemistry, University of Michigan.

Dr. Harold C. Stuart, Harvard University School of Public Health.

Dr. Russell M. Wilder, who is chief of medicine at the Mayo Clinic.

Dr. John B. Youmans, formerly professor of medicine, Vanderbilt University School of Medicine.

Dr. James S. McLester, chairman of the council.

And so on.

There is a pretty distinguished group of men, representing the Council of Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association, who have given some investigation to this subject. I have here a recently adopted resolution which might be of some interest to the people of America and ought to be of some interest to those who propose to inject these chemicals into the food supply of the Nation. It is quoted in the hearings, and is as follows:

An increasing proportion of the Nation's food supply is subjected to industrial processing. Accordingly, alterations in processing technics may have a direct bearing on the quality of the national diet and health. In general the food industries are to be commended for their awareness of the responsibility which they carry for the protection of the Nation's food supply. Improved methods of processing have been developed for preservation of nutrients in foodstuffs and "fortification" and "enrichment" of foodstuffs has been developed as recommended by various officials and nonofficial agencies.

At the present, however, there is being introduced a new processing practice which the council views with considerable apprehension—namely, the widespread addition of certain surface-active compounds (shortening extenders) to a variety of foods, especially bread and other bakery products.

These surface active agents are derivatives of polyoxyethylene and generally contain a polyhydric alcohol moiety with varying proportions of fatty acids. They are added to foodstuffs during processing in order to aid emulsification. Their use allows the production of a smooth-textured product, often of superior sales appeal, which contains less fat than one made without the extender. In some instances the addition of the agent also permits the lowering of the proportions of other important food ingredients in the product—for example, the use in bread imparts similar properties of "freshness" as does the use of nonfat milk solids.

Available knowledge of the possible toxicity of these substances in fragmentary—particularly is evidence lacking as to chronic toxicity. The employment of these agents in the processing of such basic foods as bread and bakery goods, as well as other foods (such as ice cream, candy, peanut butter, etc.) could lead to the ingestion of considerable quantities of these materials of uncertain toxicologic action. Unless the complete harmlessness of these agents can be demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt, they should not, in the council's opinion, be employed in basic foods.

When these agents are used as extenders, particularly in making bread, cakes, and pastries, the nutritive quality of the product is usually diluted. This dilution results from the decrease in amounts of fat, milk solids, and, in some cases, eggs required to produce an "acceptable" product. The caloric value of the extender itself is not completely defined, but is considerably less than the shortening which it may replace. Any reduction in content of milk and eggs in products would obviously reduce the quantity of a number of important nutrients in the food. Such a dilution is not desirable from a nutritional standpoint.

The council's concern in reference to the use of these substances in foods resides in the inadequacy of knowledge concerning their toxicity and the deterioration in nutritive value of basic foods which their introduction allows.

That is a pretty profound statement coming from this council composed of the type of men whose names I have put in the RECORD. All of the attempts of the high-priced lawyers for these chemical companies to cross-examine Dr. Darby and his witnesses in an attempt to break that statement down were, in my opinion, of no avail.

In March 1949 there was issued a booklet on Synthetic Fats: Their Potential Contribution to World Food Requirements. FAO Nutritional Study No. 2, prepared by the Nutrition Division of the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations. That booklet contains a full and complete story of the development of these synthetic fats to take the place of organic foods and the possibilities that might exist. Because of its interest, I want to read to you what they say about synthetic margarines:

Synthetic margarines, being devoid of the protein material and the indigenous substances present in milk products and natural fats, are more stable than ordinary margarines. This can be shown by various tests—Lea's peroxide test, Fellenberg's aldehyde test, the Kreis test, Taufel-Thaler's methyl ketone test (10). Synthetic margarines keep well in ordinary packages for more than four months as compared to six weeks for ordinary margarine kept under similar conditions.

That is the very point that I raised, and the only point I raised during the debate on the floor of this House when the margarine discussion was up here. I pointed out then the possibility of what might happen in that industry if the chemical boys decided to substitute chemistry for organic fats and oils that are presently being used in the production of margarine.

So they conclude in this work:

No final conclusion on the nutritional value of synthetic fats can be drawn at the present time. The available information emphasizes the need for further experimental work.

It would, however, clearly be premature to advocate the large-scale manufacture of synthetic fats for human consumption, pending the collection of more complete and satisfactory experimental and clinical data.

Now my colleagues, this presents a challenge to the baking industry and to the fat-processing industry. I do not want to see something happen such as happened when some chemical manufacturer decided to make a product to take the place of salt in the diet of those who were told by their physicians to limit their salt intake. We know what happened. Seven or eight people had to die. To me it is a very important contribution to the thought on this situation.

You remember that some years ago there was developed in the flour and milling industry a process of agenizing flour, by which they bleached flour and agenized it with nitrogen trichloride. A howl went up at that time, and it has been many years ago since the milling industry has been using that product to bleach flour and to kill the bugs and do away with the vermin that get into flour as the result of natural pollution. They said agenizing flour in this manner will never cause any injury to human beings, but it has taken years to develop the facts. They could not demonstrate it right away, but they did demonstrate it up in Canada, and last year Canada legislated this process out of existence. Because of the research which has developed some astounding things, the milling industry has voluntarily stopped the process, as soon as they can equip their mills, of agenizing their flour through the use of nitrogen trichloride.

I hold in my hand an article by Dr. M. G. Peterman, of Milwaukee, on the subject Epilepsy in Childhood.

May I say in passing there is no greater authority in this country, or in the world, than Dr. Peterman on that subject. He is a great scientist, one of the great pediatricians of the world. In this article he says:

Last year it was demonstrated that the feeding of wheat gluten or agenized flour, bleached with nitrogen trichloride, produced clinical epilepsy in monkeys, dogs and cats even to the reproduction of the typical electroencephalographic patterns.

Fortunately, this condition has not been reproduced in man, because they have not had the same guinea pigs to work on as they did with dogs and monkeys and so on.

The point I am making is this: All of the accumulated evidence I have been able to assemble, aside from the technical experts employed by the chemical organizations themselves, points to the fact that we cannot determine clinically and physiologically today what the long-term effect is going to be of the constant ingestation of these chemicals into your food supply. What will be the degenerating effect ultimately? What is the relation to this rapidly mounting disease called arteriosclerosis? What effect does it have on the heart? What effect does it have on the brain to have these glyco globules floating around in the blood stream and the arterial system of the human body? Who knows? Who knows what the relationship may be to cancer and to mental illness and to many of the things with which human being are becoming more and more afflicted? We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars in research, and I want it to go on; I am a believer in research, but until these people can demonstrate by the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt that the introduction of this into the food supply of the Nation is not going to be deleterious, I think it is incumbent upon the Congress of the United States to take some step to stop it based upon the human element and the threat to human beings, to say nothing of the economic threats it involves to the agricultural economy of this great Nation. So I have introduced a resolution today to ask the Speaker to appoint a special investigating committee of this Congress to deal with this subject, to go into it and to recommend legislation.

Do you know that the Pure Food and Drug Administration is powerless in this matter? They could not stop it if they wanted to, because the burden is on them to establish positively and scientifically that these chemicals are in fact deleterious to human welfare; and science will not permit that finding at the present time. The burden should be on the other side; the burden should be upon those who inject these new processes into the food stream of the Nation to demonstrate beyond a reasonable doubt that they are not deleterious.

I have also introduced legislation today to give to the Pure Food and Drug Administration some subpena power so that they may be armed with authority to make some investigations that they are almost powerless to carry on with their limited power and authority now. There is another aspect of this whole situation that I wish I had more time to discuss, and that is the constant stream of material that is flowing out all over this country in the form of fertilizer and in the form of pest-control material of one kind and another. Do you think I am trying to be an alarmist? I am not; I want to get rid of the bugs; if we are going to have a Nation's food supply protected we must get rid of the bugs. But I want to say to you that over 20,000 new pesticides are registered over here in the Department of Agriculture, many of them volatile poisons. They are sending them out over the country with instructions, with the admonition to follow carefully the instructions on the package and on the label. Where the label might say: "Use one teaspoonful to 100 gallons," some farm boy wanting to get rid of the bugs quicker might very easily say to himself: "If one teaspoonful is good enough I will use five to be sure of it." and he sprays the vegetables and fruit with that sort of poison, the residuals of which are found on that food. No; I am not an alarmist. I hold in my hand the National Agricultural Chemical Association News; they are more alarmed about it than I; they want that thing brought under control. And I also hold in my hand the National Pest Control Association Service letter. They are more alarmed themselves; they know what a dangerous situation confronts their own business and the country unless we can bring that business under control.

Let me give you one illustration, and it is well known, that happened last year up here in Connecticut and in New Jersey. It is a well-known case, fully documented by the Pure Food and Drug Administration where they had an infestation of so-called wire worms.

The pesticide manufacturer developed a new pesticide that would kill those wire worms. They put this pesticide on the ground, they killed the wire worms, but when they took the potatoes and cooked them they had such a noxious taste and smell that the whole crop was ruined.

What happened? They proved beyond peradventure of doubt that the potatoes took that poisonous material that destroyed the wire worms and concentrated it into the potato itself. Thank God, the potatoes gave out such a noxious smell nobody was injured because they would not eat them.

I could tell you case after case after case of that where the best food processors in the country are alarmed at the possibilities that exist in the residual toxicide that may find its way into the food supply of the nation. Only recently the Pure Food and Drug Administration was compelled to issue an order with respect to the use of DDT, which has found its way into the milk supply of the Nation. Thank God, I believe they have corrected that and they have had the full cooperation of thse manufacturers themselves because they realize what a threat it is to their own business unless this thing can be brought under control.

So the second part of this resolution relates to the subject of pesticides and insecticides. I hold in my hand volume 4, March 1949, Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Law Quarterly. On page 85 there appears an article, the Problem of Toxic Spray Residue on Fruits and Vegetables, by Dr. James R. Wilson.

The country is alarmed over the situation. There is nothing this Congress could do that would be of more benefit to human beings and to mankind than to have this committee promptly set up to investigate the whole situation and thereafter to enact legislation that will bring this matter under control.

The third aspect of the situation relates to the distribution of fertilizers. There, again, we find millions of tons of fertilizer being spread throughout this country. The manufacturers and the entomologists and the State agencies are doing as good a job as they can to control it and to see to it that the proper plant food is given to the soil. But the fact of the matter is my investigation discloses the tendency to use in fertilizer manufacture cheap ingredients in the form of soluble nitrates and they produce bountiful crops of spinach or onions or alfalfa or anything else to which it is applied; but the question is, Does that food contain the chemical elements that you and I or the animals that eat it need for a proper balanced nutrition? All you have to do is to eat some asparagus grown with the use of these high-powered hydrogenous fertilizers, and then come out to my home where they grow them on virgin soil. You eat them and you tell the story yourself. That goes for all vegetables. You do not need to take my word for it. You have had the experience of buying cucumbers in your store that you could not eat because of the off taste. I have. It is directly related to this question of pesticide control and fertilizer.

Mr. Speaker, here is a subject that will be opposed by some very powerful interests. I have no desire to stop the march of progress. If these scientists can develop the food supply of the Nation so that it is cheaper, better, and more abundant, I will be for it; but until they do demonstrate those basic facts I cannot sit idly by and see what is happening without raising my voice in protest. This is a very serious situation.

I happen to know that the great food-processing plants of this country, the canners, concerns that I will not attempt to name but who sell their products in every grocery store in America, are carrying on a magnificent battle all the time to keep these toxic materials out of their food. There should not be a chance for any of it to get into the food supply of the Nation and cause damage and injury to our people. If anyone can think of anything more important that the Congress might do in the interest of human welfare and in the interest of the economy of the Nation than to have a thoroughgoing investigation of this whole business, all three of those elements being intimately interrelated to this subject, I would like to have them take the floor and tell about it.

I know very well that the forces are now lining up, the chemical boys on one side and all of the farm people and the processors and the producers of organic food on the other. I want to stay with nature's food so far as I am concerned unless and until the chemists can show beyond a reasonable doubt that they can do it better than nature. I am not so convinced, and that is the reason for my interest in this matter, and that is the reason for the introduction of this resolution.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I hope this is one piece of legislation that will not die in the pigeonhole because the people of this country are demanding that something be done. I do not intend to become a nuisance, but I am going to raise my voice on this issue because of my interest in public health, and I do not intend to see the work that we have accomplished, perchance, be undone by this potential threat that exists to the health of the people of this country; neither do I intend to see the agricultural industry of this country, the livestock industry, and the fats-and-oils industry taken over. I am not arguing because of the substitution of these chemicals for inedible fats and oils in the soap-making industry, but I am going to argue as long and as hard and as vehemently as I can against the inclusion of many of the same chemicals into the food of the Nation until the harmlessness has been definitely established by an overwhelming weight of scientific knowledge and information.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS AT THIS POINT

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am reintroducing the so-called Wood amendment to the Lesinski labor-management bill. I am doing this because I doubt the Committee on Education and Labor will be able to report a bill which will actively reflect the will of the House as indicated by its previous action on the Wood amendment.

There must be some compromises between the two extremes of labor and management. The President and the labor leaders have made this compromise difficult because they have demanded, under threat, that we reenact the old Wagner Labor Act, with but few amendments.

I am firmly convinced that the general public wants a bill that will serve the public interest first and then the interest of the man in the ranks of labor who must work and make a living for his wife and family. It seems to me the bill which the House acted upon was a good bill. It preserves the principles of collective bargaining which give labor and management equal responsibilities and rights. It curbs certain excesses which are a menace to our national security. I believe the bill is in the interest of the public. The bill makes certain amendments to the Taft-Hartley law which experience has shown were needed.

If the Committee on Education and Labor fails to bring out a reasonable labor bill, the Committee on Rules will be in a position to act and report this bill to the House with either an open or a closed rule. The House could then express its will and the will of the people.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RODINO (at the request of Mr. WAGNER), for Monday and Tuesday, May 9 and 10, on account of death in family.

To Mr. ADDONIZIO (at the request of Mr. WAGNER), for Monday, May 9, 1949, on account of official business.

To Mr. FUGATE (at the request of Mr. HARDY), for this week on account of official business.

To Mr. RAMSAY, for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, on account of the death of his sister.

To Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

SENATE BILLS, JOINT RESOLUTION, AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

Bills, joint resolution, and concurrent resolutions of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule referred as follows:

S. 55. An act to authorize completion of construction and development of the Eden project, Wyoming; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 113. An act for the relief of Helen Louise Oles; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 187. An act to provide for the settlement of certain obligations of the United States to the Indians of New York; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 246. An act to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

S. 259. An act to discontinue divisions of the court in the District of Kansas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 275. An act for the relief of Arthur C. Jones; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 322. An act for the relief of Mrs. Gertrude H. Westaway, legal guardian of Bobby Niles Johnson, a minor; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 353. An act to protect scenic values along and tributary to Aspen Basin Road, and contiguous scenic area, within the Santa Fe National Forest, New Mexico; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 441. An act to redefine the units and establish the standards of electrical and photometric measurements; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 584. An act for the relief of Rudolf V. Raff; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 623. An act for the relief of George Krinopolis; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 715. An act to amend the Agricultural Act of 1948; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 732. An act providing for the taking of action in 1949 with respect to quotas for the 1950 crops of corn, wheat, cotton, rice, and tobacco; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 811. An act to adjust the effective date of certain awards of pensions and compensations payable by the Veterans' Administration; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

S. 812. An act to protect scenic values along Oak Ridge Canyon and certain tributaries thereof within the Coconino National Forest, Ariz.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 835. An act authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to James Madison Burton; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 836. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Clarence M. Scott; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 837. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Irene Scott Bassett; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 934. An act to provide for the detention, care, and treatment of persons of unsound mind in certain Federal reservations in Virginia and Maryland; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1023. An act to amend section 9 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to grant credit in accordance with such section for service for which, through inadvertence, no deductions from salary were made; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

S. 1036. An act authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Lavantia Pearson; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 1037. An act authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Virginia Pearson; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 1038. An act authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Ethel M. Pearson George; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 1040. An act authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Leah L. Pearson Louk; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 1057. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Kathleen Doyle Harris; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 1058. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to June Scott Skoog; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 1089. An act to amend section 8c of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, relating to marketing agreements and orders, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to issue orders under such section with respect to filberts; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 1142. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Mrs. Pearl Scott Loukes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 1229. An act to enable certain former officers or employees of the United States separated from the service subsequent to January 23, 1942, to elect to forfeit their rights to civil-service retirement annuities and to obtain in lieu thereof returns of their contributions with interest; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

S. 1266. An act for the relief of Hayward O. Brandon; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1433. An act amending Public Law 125, Eightieth Congress, approved June 28, 1947, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. 1459. An act to amend section 6 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

S. 1640. An act to amend section 4 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L. 962; 16 U. S. C. 513), relating to membership of the National Forest Reserve Commission; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. J. Res. 55. Joint resolution to print the monthly publication entitled "Economic Indicators"; to the Committee on House Administration.

S. Con. Res. 29. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. Con. Res. 31. Concurrent resolution favoring suspension of deportation in certain cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. Con. Res. 32. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. Con. Res. 34. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 668. An act for the relief of Alex Ball;

H. R. 711. An act for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Gregg Dilnot;

H. R. 1010. An act for the relief of Mrs. May K. Y. Mok, Frederick W. S. Mok, and Vincent W. C. Mok;

H. R. 1029. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Howard C. Heckenlively;

H. R. 1030. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Francis Howe;

H. R. 1035. An act for the relief of Mrs. Ada M. Ryan;

H. R. 1041. An act for the relief of Jeannette and Jesus Esteva and their four children.

H. R. 1052. An act for the relief of Lawrence G. McCarthy;

H. R. 1079. An act for the relief of Maria Veltri Magnone;

H. R. 1101. An act for the relief of Anna Malone and Rita Anderson;

H. R. 1109. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Phena M. Anderson;

H. R. 1281. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Leslie Paul Schroeder;

H. R. 1460. An act for the relief of Mrs. Silvia Mapelli;

H. R. 1467. An act for the relief of Thomas O. Troth;

H. R. 1468. An act for the relief of Mrs. Anna Smolowitz and Mrs. Sylvia D'Arpe;

H. R. 1489. An act for the relief of James I. Matthews;

H. R. 1508. An act for the relief of Feter Drozd;

H. R. 1591. An act for the relief of Bram B. Tellekamp;

H. R. 1629. An act for the relief of Kira and Nina Grigorieff;

H. R. 1878. An act for the relief of Ralph Martin Elzingre, also known as Ralph Seawell;

H. R. 1983. An act for the relief of Edward L. Barreras;

H. R. 2231. An act for the relief of Marie E. Wright;

H. R. 2605. An act for the relief of John C. Nunes;

H. R. 2710. An act for the relief of Emma Armstrong;

H. R. 2935. An act for the relief of Mrs. Benjamin Betts; and

H. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution to authorize the cancellation and release of an agreement dated December 31, 1923, entered into between the port of Seattle and the United States of America, represented by the United States Shipping Board acting through the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 270. An act to change the name of Culbertson Dam on the Republican River in the State of Nebraska to "Trenton Dam" and to name the body of water arising behind such dam "Swanson Lake."

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on May 5, 1949, present to the President, for his approval, a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1741. An act to authorize the establishment of a joint long-range proving ground for guided missiles, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution making temporary appropriations for the fiscal year 1949, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 10, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

599. SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the supreme intelligence and the source of all power in the life of men and of nations, we pray that in character and in conduct we may study to show ourselves approved unto God.

Grant that in the difficult tasks and perplexing problems of this day we may have the interpreting and guiding light of Thy divine spirit. May we be calm in every crisis and steadfast in every strain.

We pray that our beloved country may be distinguished by that righteousness which exalteth a nation. May we be confident that no good thing wilt Thou withhold from us if we walk uprightly.

To Thy name we shall ascribe all the praise. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. DOWNEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, May 9, 1949, was dispensed with.

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred, as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution of the House of Delegates of the State of Maryland; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Resolution requesting a Federal appropriation for the improved diagnosis and treatment of cancer

"Whereas the tide of cancer continues to mount relentlessly throughout this State and Nation; and

"Whereas even the most pessimistic prior estimates of cancer death during recent years have fallen far short of the eventual number of cancer fatalities; and

"Whereas at long last modern science has been mobilized against this ancient disease in scores of the Nation's finest laboratories employing the keenest minds; and

"Whereas basic science is providing an even more powerful array of weapons to beat this disease; and

"Whereas medicine has demonstrated a vast improvement in the techniques of diagnosis and treatment of cancer; and

"Whereas the American Cancer Society has taken a lead in the fight against cancer through a program of research, education, and service which is building a bulwark of knowledge, scientific advance, and hope against this formidable enemy of all humans; and

"Whereas the entire program of the fight against cancer could be much advanced by the assistance of the Federal Governmnt in providing increased appropriations for such research: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Delegates of Maryland, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, requested to make increased appropriations available for the program of research and education for overcoming the ravages of cancer; and be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon the journal of the house and that the chief clerk of the house be, and he is hereby, directed to send copies thereof to the presiding officers of each House in the Congress of the United States, to each member of the Maryland delegation in the Congress of the United States and to the Governor of Maryland."

Two resolutions of the Senate of the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

"Whereas the imposition of license fees upon nonresidents for the privilege of hunting are becoming grossly disproportionate to the hunting license fees imposed upon residents of a State; and

"Whereas such nonresident license fees are required not only for the hunting of game which is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the States, but also for the hunting of migratory waterfowl which is within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government; and

"Whereas the Federal Government imposes taxes on the people of all the United States and makes grants back to the several States to be used in connection with the protection or propagation of both migratory and other game; and

"Whereas when a State accepts funds of the Federal Government, provided by the people of all the States, to be spent upon the wildlife in that State, then that State, to some measure, becomes the trustee of such wildlife for the benefit of the people of all the States: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of Pennsylvania memorialize the Congress of the United States and the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior to withhold all Federal funds allocated for the protection or propagation of migratory and other game within States, from any State which imposes a hunting-license fee upon nonresidents in excess of five times the amount of such fees imposed upon residents of that State; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Chief of the Bureau of the Fish and Wildlife Service."

"Whereas the citizenry of Pennsylvania is fully cognizant of the facilities of the port of Philadelphia, as well as of the possibilities of its expansion in the littoral parts of Bucks and Delaware Counties; and

"Whereas our public opinion is fully attuned to the significance of the port of Philadelphia as evidenced by the editorials appearing in the Evening Bulletin and the Philadelphia Inquirer; and

"Whereas owing to the persistent efforts of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, an inside waterway free from the perils of the ocean and the dangers of submarines in wartime, was constructed through most of the Atlantic Seaboard States; and

"Whereas such an inside system of waterways from Maine to the Gulf is destined to serve commerce in peace and will be capable of vital military service in the event of a foreign blockade in time of war; and

"Whereas all but one link of said Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway approximately 1,800 miles long has been already constructed and permits a free movement of traffic along inland waters in many States of the Atlantic coast; and

"Whereas all that is needed now to complete this gigantic artery of national defense is the construction of the long discussed canal across the State of New Jersey from Sayreville on the Raritan Bay to Bordentown on the Delaware River; and

"Whereas the construction of this 31-mile-long canal across New Jersey will remove the last barrier that blocks the national waterway designed to afford a safe channel inside the hazardous Atlantic coast from Florida to New England and thence to the Great Lakes; and

"Whereas such a canal across New Jersey will provide safe communication between the ports and navy yards at New York and Philadelphia and will make it unnecessary to circumnavigate the Atlantic coastal waters along the shores of New Jersey; and

"Whereas the construction of such a canal will restore to the port of Philadelphia its lost luster and regain for it part of its former hegemony; and

"Whereas through the construction of this canal across New Jersey new vistas will become opened to Pennsylvania's industries generally and the coal industry especially by bringing closer to our State the ports of Europe and the markets of New England and the Middle West; and

"Whereas the delay in the construction of the canal across New Jersey—the so-called missing link of the Inland Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway has been caused by the hesitancy of the Army Engineers Corps; and

"Whereas the construction of the canal across New Jersey is important to every national and commercial interest in the United States: Now be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania shall and does hereby memorialize His Excellency the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to accelerate the construction of the above-mentioned canal across New Jersey from Sayreville on the Raritan Bay to Bordentown on the Delaware River; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate forward a copy of this resolution following its passage to His Excellency the President of the United States of America and to the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Joint Resolution 28

"Whereas the Lower Klamath and Tule Lake Federal Waterfowl Refuges in California constitute two of the most important areas designed to protect and perpetuate the waterfowl resources of North America; and

"Whereas it is reliably estimated that during the autumn of 1948 more than one hundred and fifty thousand wild ducks and geese perished upon these Federal waterfowl refuges from botulism, a disease occurring primarily because of inappropriate and inadequate water levels in the refuges; and

"Whereas the inability to control these water levels is due entirely to the lack of dikes and other control works; and

"Whereas if like or even more calamitous outbreaks of botulism among these birds are to be prevented in the future, it is necessary that adequate dikes and other control works be constructed at once to make possible manipulation of water levels in a manner to combat and abate conditions breeding botulism: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to appropriate sufficient funds immediately for the construction and expeditious completion of necessary dikes and control works at the Lower Klamath and Tule Lake Federal Waterfowl Refuges in California, in order that the danger and spread of botulism may be eliminated or reduced to a minimum among these wild flocks for the preservation of which the refuges were created; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from the State of California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 30

"Joint resolution relative to the assistance to veterans in borrowing funds from established lending institutions for the acquisition of homes and other purposes

"Whereas loans to veterans, under the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, have been greatly curtailed due to the lack of funds and authority by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase veterans' loans from established lending institutions; and

"Whereas the established lending institutions cannot carry additional numbers of mortgages under present conditions without a secondary market which was formerly provided by the Federal Government; and

"Whereas there is now pending before Congress legislation known as H. R. 1324 and S. 616, which would provide a secondary market for veterans' loans and therefore would permit additional loans by established lending institutions so necessary to the welfare and readjustment of those who have served faithfully in their country's service: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to enact the pending legislation which will provide a secondary market for veterans' loans under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

Two joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 31

"Joint resolution relative to provision for public recreation, fish, and wildlife development in flood, irrigation, and power projects involving construction of dams

"Whereas Folsom Dam on the American River, Pine Flat Dam on the Kings River, Isabella Dam on the Kern River, and other large dams which may from time to time be constructed will form large reservoirs or artificial lakes; and

"Whereas such reservoirs or artificial lakes provide excellent opportunities for the creation of facilities for public recreation, and fish and wildlife development; and

"Whereas these opportunities can be realized most effectively and economically if they are planned prior to project construction and if the necessary facilities for their enjoyment and development are built along with the dam and other project structures: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the legislature respectfully memorializes the President, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Defense, and the Congress of the United States, to provide for public recreation and fish and wildlife development in project plans and to authorize them as project purposes along with flood control, irrigation, and power production, the costs to be nonreimbursable; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is directed to send a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Secretary of Defense, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States."

"Senate Joint Resolution 27

"Whereas Folsom Dam on the American River, Pine Flat Dam on the Kings River, Isabella Dam on the Kern River, and other large dams which may from time to time be constructed will form large reservoirs or artifical lakes; and

"Whereas such reservoirs or artificial lakes provide excellent opportunities for the creation of facilities for public recreation, and fish and wildlife development; and

"Whereas these opportunities can be realized most effectively and economically if they are planned prior to project construction and if the necessary facilities for their enjoyment and development are built along with the dam and other project structures: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the legislature respectfully memorializes the President, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Defense, and the Congress of the United States, to provide for public recreation and fish and wildlife development in project plans and to authorize them as project purposes along with flood control, irrigation and power production, the cost to be nonreimbursable; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to send a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Secretary of Defense, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution and Act 4 of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Joint resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to ratify and confirm Act 4 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1949, amending chapter 118, revised laws of Hawaii, 1945, relating to revenue bonds

"Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

"SECTION 1. The Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to ratify and confirm Act 4 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1949, amending section 6095 of chapter 118, Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1945, by extending the time within which revenue bonds may be issued and delivered to June 30, 1951.

"SEC. 2. Duly authenticated copies of this joint resolution shall, upon its approval, be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

"SEC. 3. This joint resolution shall take effect upon approval.

"Approved this 16th day of April A. D. 1949.

"INGRAM M. STAINBACK,
"Governor of the Territory of Hawaii."

"Act 4

"An act amending chapter 118, Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1945, as amended, relating to revenue bonds

"Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

"SECTION 1. Chapter 118, Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1945, as amended, is hereby amended by amending section 6095 thereof to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6095. Termination of power to issue bonds. Except in pursuance to any contract or agreement theretofore entered into by any municipality, no municipality shall borrow any money or deliver any bonds pursuant to this chapter to the purchasers thereof after June 30, 1951.'

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect from and after the date of its approval.

"Approved this 28th day of March A. D. 1949.

"INGRAM M. STAINBACK,
"Governor of the Territory of Hawaii."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to return to the Territory of Hawaii the lands occupied by Fort De Russy, Fort Armstrong, Fort Ruger, and Bellows Field

"Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

"SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby respectfully requested to return to the control of the Territory of Hawaii the public lands heretofore set aside for and now occupied by Fort De Russy, Fort Armstrong, Fort Ruger, and Bellows Field, and any subsequent additions thereto, in the city and county of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii.

"SEC. 2. That duly certified copies of this joint resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

"Approved this 19th day of April A. D., 1949.

"INGRAM M. STAINBACK,
"Governor of the Territory of Hawaii."

Two joint resolutions of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Joint resolution requesting the Congress of the United States of America to enact legislation appropriating funds for flood control at Hanapepe, Kauai, authorized by Public Law 534, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, section 10

"Whereas Public Law 534, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, section 10, authorized expenditure for the first step of flood control at Hanapepe, Kauai; and

"Whereas by Act 306, Session Law 1941, the Territory appropriated $50,000 of which $49,000 has been held in reserve for the purpose of meeting local requirements in connection with said flood-control project; and

"Whereas the present unprotected condition of the town of Hanapepe, Kauai, leaves it vulnerable to serious loss from floods: Now therefore

"Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

"SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be and it is hereby requested, through the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii, to enact legislation which will appropriate the amount of $235,000 previously authorized for this purpose.

"SEC. 2. That the Honorable JOSEPH RIDER FARRINGTON, Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, be and he is hereby requested to afford every assistance and aid possible in seeking passage of such legislation.

"SEC. 3. That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Governor of Hawaii, and the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

"SEC. 4. This resolution shall take effect upon its approval.

"Approved this 22d day of April A. D., 1949.

"INGRAM M. STAINBACK,
"Governor of the Territory of Hawaii."

"Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to provide funds for a flood-control project throughout the Territory of Hawaii

"Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

"SECTION 1. The Congress of the United States of America is hereby respectfully requested to provide funds for a flood-control project throughout the Territory of Hawaii, and to give priority to such project.

"SEC. 2. Duly authenticated copies of this joint resolution shall be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

"SEC. 3. This joint resolution shall take effect upon its approval.

"Approved this 26th day of April A. D. 1949.

"INGRAM M. STAINBACK,
"Governor of the Territory of Hawaii."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to authorize the issuance of public improvement bonds of the Territory of Hawaii during the years 1949 to 1955, inclusive, without regard to the limitations imposed by the Hawaiian Organic Act

"Whereas it is both necessary and desirable that the Territory of Hawaii be authorized to issue public improvement bonds without regard to the limitations imposed by section 55 of the Hawaiian Organic Act; and

"Whereas the Eightieth Congress of the United States, by Public Law No. 190, did authorize the Territory of Hawaii, during the period from 1947 to 1951, inclusive, to issue public improvement bonds up to a limit of $35,000,000; and

"Whereas the postwar requirements of the Territory for public improvements far exceed the amounts of money obtainable from current taxes, and are reasonably expected to exceed the aforesaid limit of $35,000,000 already authorized; and

"Whereas it is the desire of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to have authority over a 7-year period to issue public improvement bonds of the Territory for necessary projects without regard to the limitation imposed by section 55 of the Hawaiian Organic Act, provided the total indebtedness of the Territory is not extended beyond the sum of $50,000,000: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-fifth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to authorize the issuance by the Territory of Hawaii, during the years 1949 to 1955, inclusive, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act or of any act of Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, of public improvement bonds in any amount, provided the total indebtedness of the Territory shall not at any time be extended beyond $50,000,000 by reason of such authorization, and any extension of the total indebtedness of the Territory beyond such amount shall be made only in conformity with the Hawaiian Organic Act; and provided further, that such bonds shall be serial bonds, payable in substantially equal annual installments, the first installment to mature not later than 5 years and the last installment to mature not later than 30 years, from the date of issue thereof, and no issue of bonds shall be made until the issue is approved by the President of the United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution, upon its adoption, shall be transmitted to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, the Secretary of the Interior, and each of the two Houses of the Congress of the United States."

By Mr. BRIDGES (for himself and Mr. TOBEY):

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress concerning the New Hampshire Rural Rehabilitation Corp.

"Whereas on or about July 12, 1935, the New Hampshire Rural Rehabilitation Corp. entered into an agreement through the Rural Resettlement Corporation with the United States Department of Agriculture whereby all of the assets of the said New Hampshire Rural Rehabilitation Corp. were transferred in trust to said United States Department of Agriculture; and

"Whereas the sum of approximately $128,701.92 was received by the United States Department of Agriculture under said agreement; and

"Whereas said sum remains in the possession of said United States Department of Agriculture; and

"Whereas the State of New Hampshire is now particularly anxious to have the trust terminated and the money and property returned to it: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in general court convened, That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States of America for the passage of an act similar to House Resolution No. 5905 introduced by Representative COOLEY in the second session of the Eightieth Congress of the United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of New Hampshire and that they, and each of them, be requested to use all honorable means within their power to bring about the enactment of legislation similar to the aforesaid House Resolution No. 5905.

"Speaker of the House of Representatives.
"PERKINS BASS,
"President of the Senate.
"SHERMAN ADAMS,
"Governor."

By Mr. PEPPER:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 95

"Concurrent resolution concerning State ownership of and control over lands beneath its navigable inland waters and marginal seas

"Whereas the State of Florida owns and possesses approximately 7,340 square miles of land beneath its marginal seas, and approximately 4,298 square miles of land beneath its inland waters, or a total of approximately 11,638 square miles of land beneath the navigable waters within its boundari s, subject only to the constitutional grant of authority, to the Federal Government, other navigation, commerce, and national defense; and

"Whereas State ownership of this property has been and will continue to be an important source of revenue for our State, the loss of which would be a great injury to the State and our people, for whom it is held in trust; and

"Whereas after over 100 years of recognized State ownership without interference with the delegated Federal powers, certain Federal officials are now suing other States for similar property and advocating Federal seizure of the lands: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Florida (the house of representatives concurring):

"That the State of Florida favors continued State ownership and control, subject only to the powers over navigation, commerce, and national defense only granted to the Federal Government by the Federal Constitution, of lands and resources within and beneath the navigable waters within the boundaries of the respective States, including such lands and resources within and beneath the marginal seas, and requests that the Congress of the United States enact suitable legislation to that end.

"That the members of our delegation in Congress are hereby requested to give their active opposition to all pending and proposed measures which would create Federal ownership or control of lands, fish, or other resources beneath navigable waters within State boundaries.

"That the members of our delegation in Congress are hereby requested to give their active support to legislation which would recognize and confirm State ownership of such property.

"That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each member of our delegation in Congress.

"Approved by the Governor May 2, 1949."

COMPULSORY HEALTH INSURANCE—RESOLUTION OF SENATE OF DELAWARE

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference Senate Resolution No. 45 of the One Hundred and Fifteenth General Assembly of the State of Delaware petitioning the Congress to refrain from the imposition of a national system of compulsory health insurance, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Labor and Pubic Welfare, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Resolution 45

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States with respect to a national compulsory sickness insurance program

Whereas the American people now enjoy the highest level of health, the best standards of scientific medical care, and the finest medical institutions ever attained by any major country in the world; and

Whereas these accomplishments of American medicine are the results of a free people working under a system of free enterprise; and

Whereas in all countries where government has assumed control of medical care the experience has been a progressive deterioration of medical standards and medical care, to the detriment of the health of the people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the One Hundred and Fifteenth General Assembly of the State of Delaware:

That the Senate of the State of Delaware respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to refrain from imposing upon the citizens of this Nation any form of compulsory insurance, or any system of medical care designed for national bureaucratic control; and

That the Honorable JOHN J. WILLIAMS, the Honorable J. ALLEN FREAR, JR., and the Honorable J. CALEB BOGGS, Members of the Congress of the United States from Delaware, be and they are hereby respectfully requested to oppose the enactment of such legislation; and

That the secretary of the senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Congressman from Delaware.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Senate of the State of Delaware, identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

MISSOURI VALLEY AUTHORITY—RESOLUTION OF NORTH PLATTE VALLEY CENTRAL LABOR UNION, SCOTTSBLUFF, NEBR.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the North Platte Valley Central Labor Union, of Scottsbluff, Nebr., dealing with the Missouri Valley Authority, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution in favor of S. 1160, Missouri Valley Authority

Whereas during the past several years, the Missouri Valley Development Trades and Labor Council has, from time to time, discussed the question of the so-called Pick-Sloan plan versus a Missouri Valley plan similar to the Tennessee Valley Authority; and

Whereas up to the present time we have been primarily interested in the development of the Basin, and therefore have not pushed the question as to what set-up or plan under which the development should be carried out; and

Whereas on March 2, 1949, the Honorable Senators MURRAY from Montana, GILLETTE from Iowa, and HUMPHREY from Minnesota, saw fit to introduce S. 1160 which provides for a Missouri Valley Authority along the pattern of the management thereof; and

Whereas Senator HUMPHREY so ably pointed out the shortcomings of the Pick-Sloan plan both in its planning and the management thereof; and

Whereas we have experienced great expense and difficulty and not much success in dealing with the numerous bureaus and divided authority which exists under the present set-up; and

Whereas dealing with a centralized management would simplify the establishment of uniform conditions for all the different projects in the valley: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the North Platte Valley Central Labor Union, in meeting assembled this 28th day of April, 1949, go on record in favor of S. 1160 as introduced in the Senate on March 2, 1949, by the above-mentioned Senators, and that we do everything possible to have said bill enacted into law; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, and to the Senators and Congressmen representing the 10 States included in the Missouri Valley Basin.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following report of a committee was submitted:

By Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 3997. A bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 362).

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS OF DEPARTMENT OF ARMY

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations, I report favorably with amendments, House bill 3734, making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 361) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and the bill placed on the calendar.

LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATIONS—MOTION TO RECONSIDER TO BE TAKEN UP THURSDAY

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I inquire when the Senator from Tennessee expects to have the Senate take up the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] to reconsider the vote by which House bill 3333, the Labor-Federal Security appropriations bill was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions.

Mr. McKELLAR. I find that that cannot be done until Thursday. I wish to let all Senators know, so that they can be present on Thursday. On Thursday we shall take up that matter.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, I report favorably the nominations of 187 postmasters.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask how many of those postmasters are from North Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not believe there is one from North Dakota on that list.

Mr. LANGER. I wonder when we can get a report from the State of North Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Are there some from North Dakota before the committee?

Mr. LANGER. Yes. I would like to know when we can expect a report regarding them.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to advise the Senator that we do not have any of them before the committee at this time. We will act on them when they get there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be received, as in executive session, and the nominations placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 1812. A bill providing for the substitution of their successors as parties in actions by or against public officers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1813. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to permit redeposit by reemployed annuitants of refunds of contributions and to allow credit for service covered by such redeposits; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to alleviate juvenile delinquency in cooperation with the J. Edgar Hoover Foundation, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement explanatory of the bill be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement presented by the Senator from Utah will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1815) to alleviate juvenile delinquency in cooperation with the J. Edgar Hoover Foundation, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself, Mr. IVES, and Mr. MORSE), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The explanatory statement is as follows:

Yesterday the Voice of America carried an unusual broadcast to Europe. It told the story of a police chief who was loved in this country and to whom the American people paid tribute.

At first, many of us might not realize how unusual that story is to Europe. We may not realize that most Europeans, especially behind the iron curtain, know the chief police officer in their country as the man who runs the dread NKVD or secret police, who arrests men in the night, who exacts confessions from men, who holds them in jail without trial.

So to many Europeans, especially behind the curtain it was almost sensational news when an American radio commentator paid tribute to J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, as fair-minded, a guardian of civil liberties, and the protector of the privacy of the home.

This was such appealing and unusual news to those behind the iron curtain that the State Department carried this news on the Voice of America.

I rise today to pay tribute to J. Edgar Hoover, for several reasons. First, it is his twenty-fifth year of service as Director of the FBI. In that period he has not only been fair, fearless, and efficient, but also a protector of civil liberties.

During his 25 years of service, Mr. Hoover has seen many other Government officials retire to earn big salaries from private business. He has received many tempting offers himself. But despite very modest remuneration he has remained steadfast and loyal to his job.

It is unique and important that Mr. Hoover has not been content alone to be a police officer. He has also chosen to get at the source of crime, to root out the very beginning of crime, when it takes hold of our youth. The greatest cancer of the Nation is not the dread disease which strikes men down when they are older, but which poisons our prospective citizens when they are young—juvenile delinquency.

J. Edgar Hoover has been a great crusader to eradicate this cancer.

And in honor, partly to him, but even more, to help the wayward youth of the Nation, I am introducing this bill providing for a model school for rejected boys, not far from the District of Columbia. It is the plan of various friends and admirers of Mr. Hoover that a considerable amount of money shall be contributed privately to help construct and operate this school.

The Governing Board of the School, however, would include the Attorney General, together with Mr. Hoover himself, and the Director of the Children's Bureau and certain other interested agencies, together with private citizens. It would be a joint enterprise by Government and patriotic, private citizens, which would have the advantages of the stimulus and inspiration and initiative of public-spirited citizen, yet also have the benefit of the experienced hand of the Government.

Certain advantages can, of course, be secured from both. The Government would appropriate funds, only after private citizens had contributed the initial funds, on a matching dollar-for-dollar basis.

It is also the special purpose of this bill to create an institution which will influence juvenile delinquency in the different States in a very important way. One of the tragedies of youthful crime is that youth recognizes no State boundaries. Thus the products of an Ohio State reformatory not long ago boarded a train in West Virginia to rob it not far from Washington. This forces the citizens of our Capital and other States to be concerned with conditions inside the Ohio State reformatory, conditions of overcrowding which increase rather than cure criminal tendencies among the boys who go there supposedly to be cured.

Incorporated in this bill, therefore, is a plan whereby the personnel of State institutions may come to this model boys school near Washington and take special training courses. Following this, they return to their State institutions with new and improved ideas on fighting the most difficult problem facing the Nation—juvenile crime.

This bill is introduced on the anniversary of J. Edgar Hoover's twenty-fifth year of service. It is an attempt to honor him. But in a sense, and perhaps even more important, it is an attempt to help solve the problem which he has worked so hard to improve—the juvenile delinquency of our Nation.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST EMPLOYMENT OF AMPUTEES BY CERTAIN COMMON CARRIERS

Mr. McGRATH submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 37), which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that no department, office, or agency of the Federal Government charged with the duty of regulating carriers in interstate or foreign commerce should hereafter make, maintain, or administer any rule or regulation which would prevent any common, contract, or private carrier from employing, as a driver or operator of any motor vehicle or other automotive equipment in interstate or foreign commerce, any otherwise qualified person because such person shall have suffered the amputation of any limb or any part thereof if such person shall have been examined by a qualified physician or other duly qualified officer and found to be capable of performing satisfactorily the duties incident to the operation of such vehicle or equipment without endangering the public safety.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT ENTITLED "PROFITS"

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 116), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report 1,000 additional copies of the report, entitled "Profits," of its Subcommittee on Business Profits.

NATIONAL CHILD RESEARCH—COSPONSORS OF BILL

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to add as cosponsors to the bill (S. 904) to provide for research relating to child life and development; to disseminate information as to the practical application of such research by parents, professional persons, and others; and for other purposes, the names of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], whom I am greatly honored to have join me in sponsoring this proposed legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

KASSID ALI—INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF BILL

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1811) for the relief of Kassid Ali, introduced by me on May 9, 1949, and that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 2203) to provide for a census of housing in the year 1950, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

DECLARATION OF POLICY RELATING TO SMALL BUSINESS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I submit for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary amendments in the nature of a substitute, providing for declaration of policy in relation to small business, intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 640) to provide for the distribution of motor-vehicle tires, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement prepared by me be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from North Dakota will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement presented by Mr. LANGER is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LANGER

A few days ago I introduced a bill which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and which now bears number S. 1709. As my bill makes clear, it is designed to clarify and formulate a consistent and coordinated national policy with respect to the distribution of goods, to provide for fair competitive practices and, among other purposes, to promote individual initiative in the American system of distribution. While I pointed out that the term "goods" applies to many items as well as "foods" I wish specifically to call attention to a recent decision of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in the case of United States v. the New York Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company and others. The opinion was written by Judge Sherman Minton who was formerly a distinguished member of this body from the State of Indiana. The defendants had been indicted charged with conspiracy to monopolize and to restrain trade in food and food products by controlling the terms and conditions upon which the defendants and their competitors might do business and by oppressing the competitors of the defendants through the abuse of the defendants' mass buying and selling power. The Government made it clear that it is not a prosecution because of the size of the A & P or its integration, but the Government was making an attack upon the abuse of the power of the defendants. There are 14 corporations in the A & P system, 12 of which were named defendants in this action, and of these, 3 were acquitted. The A & P system is engaged in the food industry as a buyer, manufacturer, processor, and broker, and in addition carries on the business of food retailer through some 5,800 retail stores in 40 States and the District of Columbia. The top holding company is the defendant A & P, a New York corporation. This top holding company owns and controls everything in the system and, in turn, is owned by the George H. Hartford Trust of which John A. Hartford and George L. Hartford are the trustees, holding about 99 percent of A & P. This is the same John A. Hartford who, it will be remembered, made the loan of some $200,000 to Elliott Roosevelt which was later canceled after Mr. Jesse Jones negotiated a settlement for, as I remember it, about two cents on the dollar. Just why Mr. John A. Hartford ever made this loan to the son of the then President was never fully explained, much less how such a magnificent settlement was arranged by Mr. Jones. I do not now suggest that the pending prosecution which I have mentioned had anything to do with it, but it is interesting to note that the court was very greatly interested in the amount of the total profits yielded to A & P in the years 1939, 1940, and 1941.

Judge Minton points out that the ultimate control of buying is centralized in the headquarters of A & P, the top holding company, which fixed buying policies, purchase prices, advertising programs and label and bag allowances. The buying policy of the A & P was to fix a two-price level in which the company used its power to gain a lower price on its needed merchandise than was permitted to its competitors—lower for A & P—higher for its competitors. A & P used its large buying power to coerce suppliers to grant it a lower price than that granted to competitors on the threat that it would put such suppliers on a private black list if they did not conform, or that A & P would itself go into the manufacturing business in competition with the recalcitrant suppliers.

The Seventh Circuit of Appeals through Judge Minton outlined some of the techniques used by the A & P to get a lower price than its competitors. As early as about 1925, A & P sent its buyers into the field to buy merchandise. Their primary object was to get that merchandise as cheaply as possible, and for this the supplier was compelled—if he obtained the business—to pay A & P a seller's brokerage of from 1 to 5 per cent. These so-called brokerage fees went to A & P and were tantamount to a further reduction in price. Except on brokerage received from meat packers which was outlawed in 1934, this system continued until 1936 when it was made illegal by the Robinson-Patman Act.

So, Mr. President, the A & P had to alter its method of operation. After 1936, the buyers, instead of getting credit for brokerage, induced their suppliers to reduce their price further to the A & P by an amount equal to what the brokerage fee had been. The allowance thus became a mark-down of the price on the invoice, and this was called "net buying." The Government stepped in again, and the Federal Trade Commission issued a cease and desist order outlawing the practice, and the Third Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the FTC.

The A & P once again had to develop a new technique, and thereupon adopted a policy of direct buying. Thereafter A & P would buy from no one who sold through a broker. Not only did it not buy from suppliers who offered to sell to it through brokers, it would not buy from a supplier who sold to anyone else through brokers. This policy also affected competitors in the trade generally who were unable to buy directly. Suppliers were told in effect, that if they did not sell direct—to all customers—A & P would withdraw its patronage. Thus A & P continued to get its usual lower price which was supposed to be justified by cost savings and also because A & P bought in large quantities.

Whatever the alleged justification, A & P always wound up with a price advantage and the supplier had to make his profit out of his other customers at higher prices which were passed on to the A & P competitors. I quote directly from the court's opinion:

"One cannot escape the conclusion on the very substantial evidence here, as one follows the devious manipulations of A & P to get price advantages, that it succeeded in obtaining preferential discounts not by force of its large purchasing power and the buying advantage which goes therewith, but through its abuse of that power by the threats to boycott suppliers and place them on its individual blacklist, and by threats to go into the manufacturing and processing business itself, since it already possessed a considerable establishment and experience that would enable it to get quickly and successfully into such business if a recalcitrant supplier, processor, or manufacturer did not yield. The A & P organization was urged to keep secret whatever preferences it received. These predatory discounts and other preferences amounted to 22.15 percent of A & P's total profits in 1939; 22.47 percent in 1940; and 24.59 percent in 1941."

Mr. President, the court supplies us with additional evidence of the coercive techniques employed by A & P. The single word description of the revelations is astonishing. The suppliers of this great chain were forced to discontinue business practices which A & P considered detrimental to its maintaining advantage over its competitors. For example, some A & P suppliers were making store-door deliveries to A & P competitors. The A & P stepped in and forced some supplier-manufacturers to widen the spread between store-door deliveries and warehouse deliveries. Again, other suppliers were forced to discontinue merchandising by the offer of premiums given to customers. It doesn't seem possible that such tactics could successfully be developed, but they were.

The A & P also adopted a device called cash buying. This was always on a lower basis than term buying because cash buyers put up the money at once and took the merchandise, while term buyers paid on delivery. A & P through its cash buying rate gained an advantage without assuming risks between the point of shipment and the destination, the court pointed out.

A & P also created a subsidiary which it called the Atlantic Commission Co., which was to have many uses. Equipped with this subsidiary, A & P adopted a sales-arrival basis where its subsidiary did not obligate itself either to purchase certain goods or to pay a stated price until the goods arrived at their destination. Apparently the subsidiary was able to place an order for goods which various suppliers would ship under direction of the subsidiary. Then the Atlantic Commission Co. would wire a price offer to the shipper on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. Thus, Mr. President, when falling markets were anticipated, the subsidiary would make sales-arrival purchases, and the shipper was compelled to assume the risk of price change from the date of shipment of the ordered goods to the date of their arrival. A & P was always protected, but the shipper either had to take a loss or look for another buyer.

The subsidiary commission company was also used in the dual role of buyer and seller, all to the advantage of A & P. The subsidiary had the opportunity to advance the interests of A & P, first by its selection of the choicest produce to be offered in the market, and then, as buyer, to obtain that produce at the lowest price. The balance of the merchandise might be and the court noted, often was, of an inferior grade. The inferior produce thus was sold to the trade and at the highest price that A & P could get in the market. Therefore, it not only bested its competitors in the quality of the produce to be offered to the public as well as in the price A & P paid for it, but competitors had to buy inferior grades and also pay a higher price for what they got.

This A & P subsidiary exploited suppliers and competitors in other ways. It took merchandise on consignment which gave it the advantage of a choice as to whether it would accept the shipment for A & P or sell it in the open market. If the produce was taken for A & P, a preferential price was obtained. If not, the subsidiary got a brokerage fee for selling the goods in the market and was representing only the seller when it did so—but the brokerage fee went to the subsidiary and hence was an additional benefit to A & P. The brokerage fee, so charged, also increased that price to A & P's competitors, while the fees went into the coffers of A & P.

Mr. President, this amazing aggregation under the domination of A & P also controlled and owned various corporations which were engaged in the manufacture and processing of merchandise for sale in the A & P stores. For example, the Quaker Maid Co., Inc., the White House Milk Co., Inc., the Nakat Packing Corp. manufacturered many items sold by A & P--ranging all the way from canned milk to canned fish. The products of these satellites were sold only to A & P stores and at a mark-up, in fact these operations yielded an enormous percentage of the total profits of A & P.

Mr. President, I'm certain that some of the suppliers in North Dakota will be interested in the methods employed by this organization. The recital of the facts seems almost like the output of a fiction writer, but there they are in the court's opinion. The judges took note that the price advantage which A & P enjoyed through the coercive use of its power not only enabled it to undersell its competitors, but also to pick and choose the locations in which it would use its price advantage. If the A & P officials found that in a particular area the stores were having difficult competition, they could lower the gross profit percentage in that area, and thus seek to increase their volume of business. If this practice in a particular area resulted in a possible decline in net profits, the company simply raised the gross profit rate and the retail prices in some other area where its competitive position enabled it to do so. Consequently some areas might sustain heavy losses over a number of years yet the combined earnings of the company from all areas made it possible for A & P to earn $7 per share income on its stock.

It was obvious to the court that the A & P had actively encouraged its suppliers to violate the Robinson-Patman Act. Maybe A & P in receiving these price discriminations I have mentioned was not in violation of that act, but its suppliers certainly were, and the court had no difficulty in finding that the advantage which A & P obtained over its competitors is an unlawful restraint of trade.

Let me point out further just exactly what the court said as I quote directly from the opinion as it appears in 17 United States Law Week at page 2406:

"No court has yet said that the accumulation and use of great power is unlawful, per se. Bigness is no crime, although 'size is itself an earmark of monopoly power. For size carries with it an opportunity for abuse.' United States v. Paramount Pictures (334 U. S. 131, 174 (16 L. W. 4389)). That there was an accumulation of great power by A & P cannot be denied. How it used that power is the question. When A & P did not get the preferential discount or allowance it demanded, it did not simply exercise its right to refuse to contract with the supplier. It went further and served notice on the supplier that if that supplier did not meet the price dictated by A & P, not only would the supplier lose the business at the moment under negotiation, but it would be put on the unsatisfactory list or private blacklist of A & P and could expect no more business from the latter. This was a boycott and in and of itself is a violation of the Sherman Act. * * *

"While it is not necessary to constitute a violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act that a showing be made that competitors were excluded by the use of monopoly power, American Tobacco Co. v. U. S. (328 U. S. 781, 14 L. W. 4403), there is evidence in this record of how some local grocers were quickly eliminated under the lethal competition put upon them by A & P when armed with its monopoly power. * * * A & P received quantity discounts that bore no relation to any cost savings to the supplier. While A & P tried to rig up various contracts with its suppliers that would give the suppliers a semblance of compliance with the Robinson-Patman Act, by colorably relating the discriminatory preferences allowed to cost savings, the primary consideration with A & P seemed to be to get the discounts, lawfully, if possible, but to get them at all event. The conclusion is inescapable on this record that A & P was encouraging its suppliers to violate the Robinson-Patman Act. The unlawful discounts were to be received by A & P as its due, regardless. Whether or not A & P in inducing and knowingly receiving these price discriminations was in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, as its suppliers certainly were, the advantage which A & P thereby obtained from its competitors is an unlawful restraint in itself. * * * The purpose of these unlawful preferences and advantages was to carry out the avowed policy of A & P to maintain this two-price level which could not help but restrain trade and tend toward monopoly.

"Furthermore, to obtain these preferences, pressure was put on suppliers not by the use but by the abuse of A & P's tremendous buying power. The means as well as the end were unlawful. * * * With the concessions on the buying level acquired by the predatory application of its massed purchasing power, A & P was enabled to pressure its competitors on the selling level even to the extent of selling below cost and making up the loss in areas where competitive conditions were more favorable. The inevitable consequence of this whole business pattern is to create a chain reaction of ever-increasing selling volume and ever-increasing requirements and hence purchasing power for A & P, and for its competitors hardships not produced by competitive forces, and, conceivably, ultimate extinction. Under all the cases, this is a result which sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act were designed to circumvent."

I have sought, Mr. President, to point out to the Senate the kind of situation I had in mind when I introduced S. 1709. I notice that there is already before the Judiciary Committee a bill identified as S. 640. It seems to me that the latter bill is correctly before the Judiciary Committee which clearly has jurisdiction of measures involving antitrust legislation. In title I of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 in the section dealing with the Committee on the Judiciary it is provided that to that committee shall be referred all proposed legislation * * * relating to the following subjects: 7. Protection of trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am offering an amendment to S. 640 in the nature of a substitute. I intend to propose that all matter after the enacting clause of S. 640 be stricken out and that there be inserted in lieu thereof the substance of my bill. In that way, the Judiciary Committee can properly explore this field, for my bill also includes the subject matter of S. 640.

I think the Senate will share my satisfaction that the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed the conviction obtained in the A & P case. It is a landmark in the struggle against monopoly.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. FERGUSON (for himself and Mr. BRIDGES) submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 3734) making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

"SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary of the Army, with respect to appropriations made in this act, is authorized and directed, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to make such reductions in the amounts to be expended from the appropriations contained in this act as will in the aggregate equal at least 5 percent of the total amounts so appropriated therein. The Secretary of the Army shall certify the reduction in each appropriation account to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The amounts so certified shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"(b) Such reduction shall be made in a manner calculated to bring about the greatest economy in expenditure consistent with the efficiency of the service.

"(c) No item of appropriation contained in this act shall be reduced more than 20 percent.

"(d) A statement of each reduction hereunder, including the amount thereof, shall be included in the annual budget for the fiscal year 1951."

Mr. FERGUSON (for himself and Mr. BRIDGES) also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to House bill 3734, making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

Mr. FERGUSON (for himself and Mr. BRIDGES) submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 3997) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

"SEC. 309. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture, with respect to appropriations made in title I of this act, is authorized and directed, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to make such reductions in the amounts to be expended from the appropriations made in such title as will in the aggregate equal at least 5 percent of the total amounts so appropriated therein. TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS, 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3083) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments and funds available for the Export-Import Bank and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment, but not until the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the majority leader a question. Is it the intention, after the Treasury-Post Office bill shall have been disposed of, to take up the motion of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] relative to the reconsideration of the Labor and Federal Securities bill today, or is it the intention of the leadership to resume consideration of the District tax bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say that under the order entered yesterday, automatically the District tax bill will come before the Senate immediately upon completion of consideration of the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the procedure, but I am asking the majority leader if it is the intention, after the appropriation bill has been disposed of, to take up the motion of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island. I understood from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MCKELLAR] that that motion would be taken up today.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I said that I hoped we could take it up today.

Mr. WHERRY. Is that the intention now? If so, I think all Senators should be advised of it.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I am still hoping.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I do not intend to speak at length. I merely wish to invite the attention of Senators to the facts which will be found in the report of the committee on the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill. A copy of the report is on the desk of each Senator.

The bill recommends appropriations of $3,113,068,503 for the Treasury and Post Office Departments. This sum is an increase of $40,250,600 over the House allowance. The increase represents $17,576,000 additional funds for the Treasury Department, the bulk of which is for the Customs Bureau, $300,000; Bureau of Internal Revenue, $12,268,000; Bureau of Engraving and Printing, $1,000,000; and the Coast Guard, $3,708,000. For the Post Office Department there is an increase of $22,674,600 over the House allowance, which is necessary to move the mail volume, provide essential supplies and equipment, and for general administration and supervision of the postal service.

The total amount recommended is under the 1950 estimates by $63,198,246, which figure represents $51,410,046 for the Treasury Department and $11,788,200 for the Post Office Department.

The amount carried in the bill exceeds the 1949 appropriations by approximately $460,000,000, which amount represents about $249,000,000 for the Treasury Department and $211,000,000 for the Post Office Department. In making this comparison, however, it must be remembered that pending deficiencies for 1949 total about $65,000,000 for the Treasury Department and over $252,000,000 for the Post Office Department. The postal pay raise alone provided by Public Law 900, passed in the last Congress, requires postal appropriations to be increased approximately $220,000,000.

In providing appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments it may be said that a greater portion of the money is for operating expenses. For the Treasury Department the appropriations provide funds for the various bureaus, offices, and divisions engaged in servicing the debt, collecting the revenues, and paying the financial obligations of the Government. The only exception to this is the appropriation for the purchase of strategic and critical materials under the Stock Piling Act of July 23, 1946.

In conclusion, I may state that the main additions made by the committee to the appropriations provided in the House bill have been for stockpiling strategic materials under the laws of Congress, and for placing in the field several thousand additional Internal Revenue collectors. The number of collectors would be increased by about 7,000. The additions are all in the field. It is estimated that for every dollar that may be paid for additional revenue agents, the Government will benefit to the extent of $100 by reason of collections from those who have not paid their proper taxes, or from those who have made errors.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks a statement from the report of the committee, beginning on page 2, and ending on page 7.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL STATEMENT

The bill provides a total of $3,113,068,503.93 for regular annual appropriations of the Treasury and Post Office Departments, and $27,100,000 in authorizations for expenditures of corporate funds of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Of the $3,113,068,503.93 proposed appropriations, the sum of $1,045,184,403.93 is recommended for the Treasury Department and $2,067,884,100 for the Post Office Department. Of the $27,100,000 proposed authorizations for use of corporate funds, the sum of $950,000 is for the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and the sum of $26,150,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The committee has proposed a total appropriation of $1,045,184,403.93 to meet the 1950 fund requirements of the various bureaus within the Treasury Department. This sum is an increase of $17,576,000 over the House allowance of $1,027,608,403.93 and is under the budget estimate by $51,410,046.07.

Due consideration was given to the justifications filed and the testimony presented by the Secretary, the former Under Secretary and officials of the bureaus on their needs for appropriation increases over the House allowances, especially in those bureaus and offices where evidence indicated possible improvement of efficiency in the collection of revenues, management studies, and policy problems. The Department is primarily a service organization and has continuous dealings with the public in general. It is estimated that over $45,000,000,000 will be collected in fiscal year 1950. Of this amount over $43,000,000,000 or about 95 percent of the total Federal revenue, is represented by internal-revenue collections. Therefore, increased efficiency in operations and improved service to the public are of paramount importance.

With these thoughts in mind the committee has recommended the strengthening of pertinent activities and therefore feels that the funds provided will enable the Department to more effectively accomplish the desired objectives.

BUREAU OF ACCOUNTS

The committee has denied the request for an additional $90,000 over the House allowance for the Bureau of Accounts. It is their considered judgment that no additional funds are required for new positions in order to actively participate with the Bureau of the Budget and the General Accounting Office in the joint program for improving the Government's accounting and reporting system. The committee feels, however, that any additional personnel required in this important undertaking may be secured through more effective utilization of existing methods and procedures staffs now in the fiscal service of the Department and to that end agrees with the action taken by the House.

BUREAU OF CUSTOMS

The committee has approved an appropriation of $35,300,000 for operating expenses of the Bureau of Customs in the fiscal year 1950. The amount allowed is only $300,000 under the budget estimate of $35,600,000 and should provide sufficient operating funds to maintain a maximum personnel strength, including the filling of the most important existing vacant positions and, above all, reducing to a minimum the backlog of work presently existing in certain field offices of collectors of customs as well as appraisers of merchandise. The Commissioner of Customs should exert every effort to reduce this reported huge backlog of unliquidated entries in order to expedite the refunds to importers of excess collections.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

For the fiscal year 1950 the committee recommends an appropriation of $232,768,000, the budget estimate. This amount exceeds the House allowance by $12,268,000. The committee is of the opinion that the 7,019 additional field positions requested be allowed by the committee, 5,787 of which are enforcement officer positions, to enable the Bureau to more effectively ferret out tax evaders which, in turn, will lead to the collection of millions of dollars additional revenue. Testimony indicates that present front-line enforcement officers averaged per person additional revenue of $52,708 for 1946, $73,805 for 1947, $89,271 for 1948, and for the first 7 months of fiscal year 1949 $50,066. It is estimated that by the fiscal year 1951 the additional enforcement personnel provided will collect at least $425,000,000 additional revenue annually.

COAST GUARD

The committee has approved the appropriation estimates submitted for pay and allowances, $77,445,000, and general expenses, $39,988,000, of the Coast Guard. This proposal is considered justified in order that the full military strength on board July 1, 1949, may be continued in the fiscal year 1950, and also provide the necessary operating expenses for carrying out the ocean weather-station program authorized by Public Law 738 of the Eightieth Congress, second session.

As regards the item for civilian employees, the committee has denied the request for $100,000 over the amount allowed by the House. The committee feels, however, that the reduction in the estimate should not be applied against the program for improving the accounting and supply operations, which was recommended in a recent survey report of a management group to be carried out.

The committee has also denied the request for $2,000,000 for acquisition, construction, and improvements over the allowance recommended by the House. It is the committee's belief that some of the items included in the estimate may be deferred.

The committee also disapproved the sum of $3,500,000 to initiate a training program for reserve personnel of the Coast Guard. This item was submitted in supplemental estimates, Senate Document 25.

BUREAU OF FEDERAL SUPPLY

The committee has disapproved the Department's request for additional funds over the amounts carried in the bill as passed the House for the appropriation "Salaries and expenses" and the "General supply fund." It was the committee's opinion that no additional funds over the House allowances should be provided for continued operation of the various programs of the Bureau; also, that the $479,803,093 increase provided by the House for the general supply fund should be sufficient for the fiscal year 1950.

The committee approves the action taken by the House as respects the appropriation and contract authorization amounts provided for stock piling of strategic and critical materials. The bill provides $525,000,000, of which $275,000,000 is new cash and $250,000,000 is cash for liquidation of obligations plus not to exceed $250,000,000 for new contract authority. Subsequent to the committee hearing on this item, the second deficiency bill has been approved by the House and is presently before the Senate committee for consideration. This deficiency bill provides for strategic and critical materials an additional $40,000,000 in cash appropriation and not to exceed $270,000,000 contract authority.

REPLACEMENT OF TYPEWRITERS

The committee believes that the time has come for the gradual replacement of typewriters which have been in use six or more years, a practice which has long been followed in private enterprise and found to be the most economical. The committee has, therefore, modified the House language to effectuate this end by providing for purchase for each agency in the executive branch of the Government, to the extent that appropriated funds of such agency are otherwise available therefor, of new typewriters in lieu of an equivalent number of machines owned by said agency 8 or more years of age, and for the delivery of the overage machines to the Bureau of Federal Supply for disposition at public sale or exchange. It is the view of the committee that like procedure should be recommended at the appropriate time for the fiscal year 1951, except at that time the age should be dropped from 8 years to 7 years, and that in the following fiscal year the age limit should be dropped to 6 years and maintained at that level thereafter, with exception in the case of typewriters which, because of lack of constant use, are in better than average condition for typewriters of the permissible replacement age.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The committee proposes a total appropriation of $2,067,884,100 for 1950 operating expenses of the Post Office Department. This amount is $22,674,600 over the House allowance of $2,045,209,500, and is under the 1950 budget estimate by $11,783,200. As compared to the 1949 total regular annual appropriation of $1,857,304,825 the amount recommended exceeds such total by $210,579,275.

The Department requested restoration of $29,754,600 of the $34,462,800 House reduction and, as stated above, the committee recommends approval of $22,674,600. This additional amount is considered necessary to properly administer and supervise the postal service, to move the mail volume, and to provide essential supplies and equipment. The specific amounts proposed in the appropriation categories for 1950 will be on approximately the same level as the 1949 estimated expenditures.

The committee recognizes that, as a practical matter, the Postmaster General must supply postal service promptly and commensurate with demands of the general public. Rather than restore the entire reduction made by the House in various appropriation categories, the committee feels that it is preferable to permit the apportionment of certain appropriations on a deficiency basis when, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, this is necessary for such reasons as the volume of mail to be carried or conditions beyond the control of the Post Office Department. The committee joins the House committee in its confidence that this authority will not be abused, and expects that the Appropriations Committees will be currently advised by the Bureau of the Budget of any apportionments made on such deficiency basis.

Postal deficit

The 1950 postal deficit is estimated to be $403,672,300. This figure is based on estimated revenues of $1,676,000,000 and obligations of $2,079,672,300. The postal deficit is mainly in the costs for handling second-, third-, and fourth-class mails. If the pending bill, H. R. 2945, which provides certain increases in postal rates and services, is enacted, approximately $250,000,000 in additional revenue per annum will be received and thereby reduce the 1950 estimated deficit of about $403,000,000 to $153,000,000. This latter figure is about comparable to the costs for penalty and frank mail, air-mail subsidies, and nonpostal services, including custodial services in public buildings. Much of the deficit in fourth-class mail is attributed to the huge volume of parcel post which is the result of favorable existing postal rates as compared with increased express rates. The pending postal-rate bill will tend to correct this wide disparity of parcel post and express rates.

For the first 9 months of fiscal year 1949 the revenues were about $1,176,000,000 as against $1,071,000,000 for the same period in the previous fiscal year. For the same comparative periods obligations in 1949 were $1,584,000,000 as against $1,297,000,000. Percentagewise, revenues increased 9.80 percent and obligations increased 22.13 percent in the current year over the prior year.

It should be stated that revenues for the 9-month period in fiscal year 1949 include rate increases provided by Public Law 900 which became effective January 1, 1949. Since these rates became effective, the revenues have increased 15.3 percent as compared to an increase of 7.2 percent in the first 6-month period of the fiscal year. Of the 15.3 percent increase in revenues since January 1, 1949, approximately 9 percent is due to the increased rates. The difference between 9 percent and the 15.3 percent is attributed to the increased mail volume.

The 22.13 percent increase in obligations includes approximately 16 percent increase in salaries authorized by Public Law 900. These increased salaries, of course, have been in effect during the entire 9-month period.

The deficit in 1949 estimated to be $526,000,000 is necessarily greater than the estimate, about $403,000,000 for 1950, due to the fact that salary increases will have been in effect for 12 months during 1949 whereas the postal rate increases wil have been in effect ony 6 months of the same year.

Air-mail subsidies

The present bill contains $87,061,000, the estimate, for payment of costs of carrying air mail and the subsidy to commercial air lines. This figure is $36,806,000 under the 1949 appropriations plus pending deficiencies which total $123,867,000. The increase in 1949 over 1950 estimate is due to the Civil Aeronautics Board's adjustment of rates to carriers which were made effective after the 1950 estimate was prepared.

The committee again calls the attention of Congress to the incongruity of charging the Post Office Department appropriation, under the guise of cost of carrying the mails by air, huge sums of money running into millions of dollars which, in truth, have no relation whatever to the costs of air-mail transportation but, in fact, are simply subsidies to the recipient air lines. The committee believes that the Civil Aeronautics Authority Act of 1938, as amended, should be further amended so as to provide for the payment of this subsidy under its present designation and, thus, to relieve the Post Office Department from being required to carry the item as a part of its appropriation. Such change in the 1938 law will also serve to let the Congress and the people know the nature and extent of this subsidy.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say at this time. I suggest that the Senate proceed with the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will proceed to state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the heading "Title I—Treasury Department—Office of the Secretary—Salaries," on page 2, line 4, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$800,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Administrative Services—Salaries," on page 4, line 5, after the word "thereof", to strike out "$1,100,000" and insert "$1,200,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Customs—Salaries and expenses," on page 9, line 18, after the word "exceed", to strike out $1,000,000" and insert "$1,040,000"; and in line 21, after "(19 U. S. C. 1525)", to strike out "$35,000,000" and insert "$35,300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Internal Revenue—Salaries and expenses," on page 11, line 4, after the word "including", to strike out "$198,400,000 for personal services, of which not to exceed $17,509,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia" and insert "personal services in the District of Columbia, and elsewhere"; and in line 23, after "(26 U. S. C. 3792)", to strike out "$220,500,000" and insert "$232,768,000: Provided, That the amount for personal services in the District of Columbia shall not exceed $17,509,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Narcotics—Salaries and expenses," on page 13, line 3, after the word "justice", to strike out "$1,560,000" and insert "$1,610,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Engraving and Printing—Salaries and expenses," on page 14, line 1, after the word "investigations", to strike out "$15,000,000" and insert "$16,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Secret Service Division—Salaries and expenses," on page 15, line 5, after the word "criminals", to strike out "$1,900,000" and insert "$1,950,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Federal Supply—Salaries and expenses," on page 18, line 18, after the numerals "1949", to strike out "notwithstanding any other provision of law,"; and in line 21, after the word "receipts", to insert "except where reimbursement to an appropriation or fund is authorized by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 20, after the word "hand", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, however, That the Director of the Bureau of Federal Supply may purchase and deliver to any agency in the executive branch of the Government, within appropriated funds otherwise available to such agency, new typewriters in lieu of an equivalent number of typewriters owned by such agency which are eight or more years of age, such over-age machines to be delivered to the Bureau of Federal Supply for application as part payment for new machines or disposal by public sale, whichever is to the best interests of the Government."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment, substituting other language for the proviso in the committee amendment. This amendment has the approval of the subcommittee, and also has the approval of the ranking minority member, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], who joins me in offering this amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the language of the proviso in the committee amendment on page 19, beginning in line 20, it is proposed to insert the following: "Provided, however, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Director, Bureau of Federal Supply, any agency in the executive branch of the Government, within appropriated funds otherwise available to such agency, may purchase new typewriters in lieu of an equivalent number of typewriters owned by such agency which are eight or more years of age, such overage machines to be applied as part payment for new machines or disposed of by public sale, whichever is to the best interests of the Government."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'CONOR in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 1, after the word "hereunder", to insert "except as to typewriters eight or more years of age which shall be sold at public sale or exchange as hereinbefore provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast Guard—Pay and allowances," on page 25, line 17, after "(14 U. S. C. 147)", to strike out "$74,500,000" and insert "$77,445,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses," on page 27, line 14, after "(14, U. S. C. 50c)," to strike out "$39,225,000" and insert "$39,988,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Title II—Post Office Department—Departmental service—Salaries," on page 29, line 11, after the word "law," to strike out "$435,000" and insert "$437,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the amendment on page 39 has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered after the other committee amendments have been disposed of, because I understand that several Senators desire to have something to say about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be temporarily passed over. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Rent, fuel, and utility services," on page 40, line 4, after the word "offices," to strike out $16,800,000" and insert "$17,580,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries, custodial service," on page 41, line 20, after the word "service," to strike out "$52,300,000" and insert "$53,600,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Supplies, public buildings," on page 41, line 25, after the word "Department," to strike out "$8,000,000" and insert "$8,523,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Equipment, public buildings," on page 42, line 19, after the word "Department," to strike out "$1,125,000" and insert "$1,250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Post Office Department—General provisions," on page 44, after line 19, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 207. During the fiscal year 1950 the Postmaster General shall make quarterly reports to the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations, showing for each quarter the amount paid from each appropriation for overtime, the number of employees receiving such overtime, and the number of hours of overtime worked by such employees, together with a statement as to the necessity for such overtime work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 3, to change the section number from "207" to "208."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III—Government corporations—Reconstruction Finance Corporation," on page 46, line 12, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$25,400,000" and insert "$26,150,000"; and in line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments, except for the one which has been passed over.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have asked that the so-called cotton-twine amendment be delayed until the other committee amendments have been acted upon. I now ask unanimous consent to have that amendment delayed until the amendments which may be offered on the floor are acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill is open to further amendment.

THE GOVERNMENT'S FISCAL SITUATION

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, last Friday we had the high privilege of hearing an address of great historic significance. It was delivered on this floor by the distinguished senior Senator from the Commonwealth of Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. The address appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, beginning on page 5840. To my mind, it is so important that it should be "must reading" for every Senator and should be given most thoughtful consideration by every American.

No one in America has a better knowledge of the fiscal affairs of our country than does the able senior Senator from Virginia. He sounded a stern and solemn warning against the grave consequences that must inevitably result from the rapidly increasing cost of Government. The facts and figures, as he presented them, should be viewed with alarm by every American who loves liberty and independence, and who places the future welfare of our Republic above selfishness.

With force and eloquence, supported by scholarly and thorough research, the senior Senator from Virginia pointed out that the new spending programs upon which we are asked to embark, if added to the increased demands by established functions and services, would force us to face three alternatives in the future: reduce expenditures, increase taxes, or engage in deficit financing.

Mr. President, I submit to my colleagues in the Senate that we have reached the time of decision. We must choose the course we are to take. We must decide whether we are to put a brake on spending, whether we are to increase the tax burden upon the wage earner and upon productive industry or whether we are to go deeper into debt by spending borrowed money.

The safety and the security of America are in danger unless we choose a course which will restore sanity, stability, and integrity to the fiscal policies of our Nation. Any other course means national bankruptcy.

The distinguished Senator from Virginia has warned that without American solvency, our constitutional freedoms would disappear. Then no power on earth would have the strength to prevent the spread of communism over the face of the world. American freedom would be swallowed up by State socialism, perhaps never to be regained.

These are not fanciful predictions of national disaster which may overtake us in the distant future. They are real. They hang over our heads at this very moment. They are founded upon accurate statistical information that has been made available to every Member of this body and to the American people by the painstaking labor so ably performed by the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Mr. President, with all the emphasis at my command, I should like to endorse his warning that State socialism has destroyed the free enterprise system in every part of the world in which it has gained a foothold. State socialism is the only system to which a bankrupt nation can turn when excessive taxation robs the people of initiative and incentive. It has been tried repeatedly. It has failed every time. It will continue to fail.

I should like to recall the warnings sounded by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who is an outstanding expert on taxation. He has stated repeatedly that it would be dangerous to the national economy to increase taxes at this time.

I should like to recall to my colleagues also that the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and the distinguished junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] have both, from time to time, urged decreased Federal expenditures.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the time has come when every Senator must look carefully at the over-all picture of expenditures and must aid in the reduction of the cost of the Federal Government. That means that each of us must put aside his pet project; that we must stand firm against spending pressure from every source, and must withhold approval of every new spending proposal until such time as we are sure we can afford it.

The Hoover Commission has submitted plans for the reorganization of the Federal Government at an estimated saving of $3,000,000,000. Why is this not done? Is there any reason why these economy proposals should not be made effective without delay? There seems to be no valid reason for further delay, especially in view of yesterday's message from the White House. We should proceed at once to enact legislation authorizing the President to submit his reorganization plans to the Congress in accordance with the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

The postponement of all public projects not immediately necessary, reduced appropriations for the armed services and European recovery, and the elimination of the vast expenditures proposed for Federal aid to education, socialized health programs, and socialized Government housing can give us an opportunity to keep America solvent, to lower taxes, and to pay a reasonable sum on the national debt.

It seems to me that only two items in the budget are sacred. One is the interest on the public debt. The other is the care of our disabled veterans and the dependents of those who made the supreme sacrifice in our country's cause.

Every other item in the cost of Government can be subjected to the most careful scrutiny and cut to the bone. They are not sacred.

Again I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Virginia on his timely and most impressive address. I feel it should be read by every American.

(At this point Mr. MCCARRAN addressed the Senate on American policy toward Spain, and debate ensued, all of which, on request of Mr. MAYBANK, and by unanimous consent, was ordered to be transposed to follow the consideration of the appropriation bill.)

J. EDGAR HOOVER

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I should like to take a few minutes to speak of a man for whom all of us have profound respect and admiration.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

M.. MAYBANK. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin how long he intends to speak.

Mr. McCARTHY. I should say 7 or 8 minutes.

Mr. President, that man is John Edgar Hoover. Today, May 10, 1949, Mr. Hoover completes 25 years of distinguished service as Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Today is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the day he took over as Director. In this quarter century J. Edgar Hoover, because of his completely objective devotion to his job, has become the great nonpartisan figure in Washington. He is respected and praised by Republicans and Democrats alike.

Mr. Hoover, as we well know, is one of those rare men who, every generation or so, appear in our public life and create something new, an important addition to the machinery under which a democratic government operates. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is the great work which Mr. Hoover has created. So often the men who live down through the years in our history are great men because of the excellent job they have done following in the steps of another, following the principles set down by a man before them.

J. Edgar Hoover, on the other hand, has blazed a new path in the field of law enforcement and the protection of our country's security. Out of his own mind, his own energy, his own individual evaluation of the importance of protecting the type of government and life we have, he has created the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The fact that over these 25 years Mr. Hoover has seen the product of his mind come to life and accomplish so much must be a great personal satisfaction to him. And I think that this organization, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which he alone has created, is the greatest personal tribute which can be paid to him.

Mr. Hoover has spent his entire adult life in the service of this Nation. Born and reared in the District of Columbia, he became associated with the Department of Justice in 1917, and 2 years later, in 1919, was made a special assistant to the Attorney General. In 1921 he was appointed an Assistant Director of the then Bureau of Investigation, and on May 10, 1924, following the reorganization of the United States Department of Justice, Mr. Hoover was appointed Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation by Hon. Harlan F. Stone, then Attorney General of the United States and subsequently Chief Justice of the United States. That was 25 years ago today. It was a new job, one that no one before him had tackled.

As Director the of FBI, Mr. Hoover was determined to make his organization representative of the best principles of American citizenship. He set high standards, moral, educational, and physical, for his personnel and encouraged the development of alert and faithful coworkers. He instilled the feeling of public responsibility among FBI employees, always emphasizing that he and his associates were servants of the people, responsive to the wishes of the citizens. The FBI has become, in the truest sense of the word, a "we" organization, each individual performing his or her share in carrying out the task at hand.

The FBI, under Mr. Hoover's directorship, became a living, energetic organization, adaptable to the conditions and needs of the time. Less than a month after assuming the directorship Mr. Hoover established the FBI Identification Division, which was to become eventually the world's largest repository of fingerprints. Criminals are mobile and extremely adept at changing names and even physical characteristics. Fingerprints represented the one means of infallible identification. Mr. Hoover realized that law enforcement, in order to keep pace with the criminal, must have a central clearinghouse where fingerprints of arrested criminals could be used to identify the criminal repeater, regardless of whether the crime had been committed on the west coast, the east coast, in the North, or in the South. Today the FBI Identification Division has more than 111,000,000 sets of fingerprints. These fingerprints, I would like to emphasize, are rendering invaluable humanitarian services to the American people, in addition to helping identify evildoers. For example, these prints help identify amnesia victims, victims otherwise unidentifiable of disasters such as fires, flood, and airplane crashes. The vision of Mr. Hoover, a quarter of a century ago, in laying the foundation for this incomparable identification system has yielded untold services to this Nation.

A few years later, in 1932, the FBI Laboratory was established. This laboratory, staffed by highly trained technicians and equipped with the latest available scientific instruments, has applied science to crime-detection work. Evidence previously overlooked as irrelevant or immaterial, now, under the enlightening glow of science, may be the clue to solving the case. A smudge of dirt, a scrap of paper, or a cigarette butt, in the hands of an FBI technician, can become effective and truthful witnesses against the criminal. The FBI Laboratory has performed virtual miracles of accomplishment in strengthening the arm of the law-enforcement officer.

The foresight of Mr. Hoover in reorganizing the FBI on efficient and practical administrative lines soon paid excellent dividends. For America, and law enforcement in general, were soon to face two stupendous challenges: First, the giant wave of lawlessness and criminality which swept the Nation in the early 1930's, when John Dillinger, "Baby Face" Nelson, Alvin Karpis, and their gangs, roamed far and wide in a virtual spree of bank robbery, kidnaping, and murder; and, second, the great war which was to engulf the country a few years later. The FBI, primarily because of the thorough advance planning of Mr. Hoover, was able to master the tasks allotted to it. The special agents of the FBI, in cooperation with local law-enforcement officers, attacked the vicious hoodlums of the 1930's and swept them from American life. The remnants, which remained intact after the initial blows, retreated into their shadowy underworld haunts only to find themselves relentlessly pursued and eventually brought to justice.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to express just a word of commendation of the Senator from Wisconsin for taking occasion, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Hoover's service as head of the FBI, to pay him this tribute. I think it is seldom in the history of a country that individual men who come to high position combine the great qualities of leadership which Mr. Hoover has. I think he has character, integrity, courage, vision, and ability. With those five great qualities of leadership, he has given this country, in the FBI, an institution of which all our people, both young and old, are most appreciative. The people of the country generally, regardless of politics or of any prejudice they may have, have confidence in the FBI. That confidence is inspired in large degree by the man who heads the FBI, for all our people have the utmost confidence in his leadership.

So, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin is performing a real public service today in officially calling attention to the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Hoover's taking over the leadership of that great institution, the FBI. I know that most Members of this body appreciate highly what the Senator from Wisconsin is doing.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I wish to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that it seems to me that all Members of the Senate are most appreciative of the action of the Senator from Wisconsin in paying tribute on the floor of the Senate to J. Edgar Hoover on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his service as head of the FBI. In this country we are very jealous of personal liberty and personal freedom; yet all of us recognize that there must be an internal defense of some kind which will protect us against crime and at the same time against enemies from abroad. I do not believe there is or ever has been anyone in the United States who could have done a better job in building up the type of service the FBI furnishes to the people of the United States, than the one which the man who now heads that organization has done. I think all of us as Americans, and all of us who hold office in Government, owe him a great debt of gratitude for the ability, courage, farsightedness, and tact he has displayed during these 25 years in building up what is one of the greatest organizations for the defense of our country we have ever had.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator from Connecticut very much.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I thank the able Senator from Wisconsin for yielding to me at this particular time, for I should like to join my distinguished colleagues in paying tribute to the great career and outstanding record of J. Edgar Hoover.

Perhaps Members of the Senate noted the introduction earlier today by the distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] of a bill, of which I am privileged to be a cosponsor and which has for its purpose the reducing of juvenile delinquency, in cooperation with the J. Edgar Hoover Foundation. It seems to me that the tributes we are paying today to this great American and the particular recognition in the form of the proposed legislation to which I have just referred, which is aimed at the correction of one of the most serious blots on our society—I refer to juvenile delinquency—are altogether fitting at this particular time. Certainly I know of no more appropriate tribute which could be paid to J. Edgar Hoover than the establishment of a foundation of the kind I indicate, with which the work to be done under the bill in question would be coordinated.

All of us should recognize that juvenile delinquency is something which cannot be ignored by the Federal Government itself. To be sure, the States and municipalities are performing a tremendous service in this critical field, and their service is constantly improving. However, reports which come from a number of the States, from persons who are active in this field of endeavor, show that effort on the part of the Federal Government, through which can be established a standard or pattern to be followed or utilized by the States or localities themselves in their own efforts in this field, is most desirable. It is with this thought in mind that the bill has been introduced on this particular day. Both as a tribute to J. Edgar Hoover and to aid in meeting the great need I have cited, the enactment of this bill is most appropriate and desirable.

So I am very glad at this time to join my distinguished colleagues in paying deserved tribute to J. Edgar Hoover and to point to the significance of the legislation to which I have referred. As a result of the efforts which would be made through the enactment of this kind of legislation, a great stride toward the cure of juvenile delinquency would be taken in this country. That in itself would be the finest tribute which could be paid to our distinguished fellow-American, J. Edgar Hoover.

I thank the Senator from Wisconsin very much for yielding to me.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator from New York for his statement.

I may say, Mr. President, in connection with the remarks made by my three distinguished colleagues, that I think one of the reasons why J. Edgar Hoover has been so eminently successful in creating the type of organization he has created is that he is very careful in the selection of the young men who work with him. One of the things which all Senators and all Members of the House of Representatives have learned, and I know they feel very happy about it, is that no Member of Congress pays off a political debt by getting one of his friends into the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Every man who serves the country in that agency is very carefully screened; and the men who are accepted for service in it are selected solely on the basis of merit. No matter where we may go, if we meet a young man who is in the FBI, we know we are in contact with a young man of the highest type.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the particular point the Senator from Wisconsin has just made indicates one of the strongest features of the FBI, namely, that J. Edgar Hoover has never let any considerations except merit and real qualifications enter into the selection of the personnel of the FBI. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that no matter where we may go in the United States or its Territories, wherever we may be where the FBI has representatives, we find that they are young men of the very highest type. There may be some who are not; but I have yet to meet a man affiliated with the FBI whom I am not proud to see affiliated with that great service.

Mr. McCARTHY. Again I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, I started to say, before I yielded to my three distinguished colleagues, that the FBI's work abroad in safeguarding the Nation's internal security is equally brilliant when compared with the work it has done at home. As we know, when World War II started, the FBI had a tremendous task at hand.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wonder whether the Senator from Wisconsin can tell us how long it will be before he will conclude his remarks.

Mr. McCARTHY. I realize that a short time ago I informed the Senator that I would take only 7 or 8 minutes. I would have taken that long without the interruptions which have come from various of our distinguished colleagues. Of course I have welcomed those interruptions.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I asked the question of the Senator because several other Senators have asked me when we are likely to consider an amendment to the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill on which they are most desirous of speaking; and the particular Senators I have in mind have to go to Pennsylvania at 4 o'clock. I make this inquiry solely in their behalf.

Of course, I am happy to have the Senator from Wisconsin present to the Senate the matter he has been discussing at length, but on the other hand I should like very much to be able to inform Senators who have made such requests of me when they will be able to participate in the discussion of the amendment to the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill which they wish to discuss.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, of course, I welcome interruptions for the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the FBI under J. Edgar Hoover gives us a most welcome and fitting opportunity to pay a tribute to one of the most outstanding men the United States has ever produced.

Mr. President, at the beginning of World War II, special agents again, of course, working with local authorities, quickly and effectively immobilized, within hours after the Pearl Harbor attack thousands of enemy aliens. If the enemy thought he possessed within these alien groups saboteurs who could effectively work within the bosom of America, he was proved to be badly mistaken. The FBI under Mr. Hoover's brilliant leadership, carefully investigated the thousands of allegations of sabotage and espionage and efficiently handled the manifold duties entrusted to him.

Mr. President, I call especial attention to this. Not a single act of enemy-directed sabotage was committed within the United States. That statement, in itself, is a tribute to the men of the FBI.

Mr. Hoover realized that if law and order were to become a reality in the United States all law enforcement must benefit from the advancements of science and the development of new investigative techniques. His experience, as an attorney in the Department of Justice and as Director of the FBI, convinced him that law enforcement was indivisible—an attack on peace officers anywhere was an attack on peace officers everywhere. Accordingly, Mr. Hoover has encouraged cooperation among law-enforcement agencies, national, State, and local. The services of the FBI Identification Division and the FBI Laboratory are available, free of charge, to law-enforcement agencies throughout the country. Moreover, in furtherance of this aim, Mr. Hoover in 1935 founded the FBI National Academy. The academy offers instruction in the latest techniques of crime detection to selected police officers from all parts of the country. These men after graduation return to their home departments and conduct training programs, thereby giving brother officers the benefit of their learning.

The people of the United States today have unlimited confidence in Mr. Hoover. That, I think is perhaps the most profound tribute which can be paid to a man who has served over 30 years in American public life. This confidence has been reflected, year after year, by the Congress of the United States, which has entrusted more and more responsibility to the FBI. At present, the FBI has investigative jurisdiction over more than 120 different Federal violations.

The FBI during these years has developed in the crucible of democracy. At the same time in other countries, in Italy, Germany, and Japan, as we so tragically remember, law enforcement flourished as the tool of a ruthless dictator. Civil rights were violated and personal freedoms disregarded. But the FBI, as the servant of the people, conducted many thousands of criminal and security investigations with scrupulous regard for the rights of the citizens. This is indeed the American way.

The FBI, by acts of Congress and Presidential directives, is charged with the responsibility of protecting the internal security of the country. A vast world-wide ideological conflict between democracy and totalitarian communism is now raging, as we all know. Loss of this struggle would mean the extinction of America, the America we know and cherish. The people of America have unlimited faith that Mr. Hoover and the FBI will do their part in protecting our liberties. That faith is based on the solid rock of Mr. Hoover's 25 years of magnificent achievement as Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Today, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Hoover's service, the American people salute a great man, a truly great man, and a truly great American. He has left an indelible stamp on American law enforcement, a stamp of public service, tireless devotion to duty and unimpeachable loyalty to the principles of American justice. He has been a leader, a creator, a great contributor to our way of life. The Nation justly salutes Mr. Hoover for a job well done, and for establishing an organization that will always be essential and important to America.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2440) to authorize the Public Housing Commissioner to sell the suburban resettlement projects known as Greenbelt, Md.; Greendale, Wis.; and Greenhills, Ohio, without regard to provisions of law requiring competitive bidding or public advertising.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS, 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3083) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments and funds available for the Export-Import Bank and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask to have the pending amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may state that the unfinished business is the Treasury-Post Office Departments appropriation bill, 1950, House bill 3083. There is no amendment pending. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Consideration of the committee amendment on page 39 was deferred until the completion of consideration of other amendments in the bill. If I may propound a parliamentary inquiry, is that the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was passed over temporarily. If the Senator wishes to call it up, he may do so.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to call up that amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will restate the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 39, in line 7, after the word "added," it is proposed to insert the following proviso: "Provided further, That for wrapping twine and tying devices (not more than three-fourths of the funds herein appropriated for the purchase of twine shall be expended in the purchase of twine manufactured from materials or commodities produced outside the United States)."

Mr. MAYBANK. I want to say I expect to discuss the amendment at some length. However, I understand the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania has an engagement, and, if he desires me to do so, I shall yield to him without prejudice to my rights to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to such an arrangement? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, if I may do so, I request the Senator from South Carolina to yield to the Senator from Connecticut in order that he may lead the discussion on our side. I shall probably not take any part in the discussion personally.

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut, provided I do not thereby lose my rights to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina desires to be recognized and to discuss the amendment, I may say that is what I intended to do. I had intended to discuss this very amendment. Like the Senator from South Carolina, I have been sitting here since a quarter after 12, as he has, hoping the matter would be reached. The Senator now has the floor. If he desires to discuss the amendment, all well and good. But when I can get the floor, I should like to discuss it, too; or if the Senator desires to yield the floor to me for the purpose of discussing it now, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to make a statement about the amendment: First, for many years the language in the amendment was contained in appropriation bills for the Treasury and Post Office Departments. During the war, in 1943, by reason of the necessity for many cotton mills shifting away from twine to comply with certain regulations under OPA and other regulations, the amendment was omitted.

Since that time there have been many changes in the jute industry in this country, and there have been many changes in the type of wrapping cord used. It is an extremely technical amendment. I shall not discuss the technicalities at length. I ask to have included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from the Bibb Manufacturing Co., of Macon, Ga., one of the largest cotton mills of the country, showing that they could produce cotton twine that would be more satisfactory to the Post Office Department perhaps than jute. I ask that the letter be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIBB MANUFACTURING CO.,
Macon, Ga., May 7, 1949.

Mr. ROBERT C. JACKSON,
Washington Representative, National Cotton Council of America, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JACKSON: You asked me over the telephone yesterday if we could give you any information with regard to the relative cost on a yardage basis of the jute twine and the cotton twine that the Post Office Department normally buys.

It so happens that I have been in communication with Mr. Harrison Parkman, purchasing agent of the Post Office Department, in connection with this same matter, and I have just written him a letter in this connection, and am glad to attach hereto a copy, which I think will throw considerable light on this particular matter.

Mr. Parkman very kindly gave me a sample of the jute twine that the Post Office Department is regularly using, and I had it thoroughly and completely analyzed in one of the finest twine laboratories in this country. According to our analysis, this twine yielded 939 yards to the pound, with a standard break of 22.09 pounds and a knot break of 14.75 pounds.

I believe most jute twines will break at the knot approximately 60 to 65 percent of the standard break, and since it is hopelessly impossible to tie up a package of any kind without a knot, I think it is only fair to figure on the knot break, as no twine is stronger than its weakest link.

Jute twine, according to Mr. Parkman, in March was selling at 37.95 cents per pound, less 2 percent, and on this basis, jute twine, as represented by their sample, yielded 24.74 yards per 1 cent of cost.

We could make a special post-office twine from cotton that would break 14.75 pounds and would yield 1,003 yards to the pound, but our price today would be 43½ cents per pound, less 2 percent. On this basis, we would give the Post Office 23.17 yards per 1 cent of cost in cotton twine, so you will immediately see that there is very little to choose, strictly from a cost standpoint under prevailing conditions.

I might add that cotton is much easier for operators to handle as there are no splinters to stick in the hands of the operators, and I am sure that if we can get cotton twine in the general use by the Post Office Department that it will be a matter of only a short time before all of the twine used by the various post offices will be of cotton origin.

I might also point out that some of the biggest users of twine in this country have recently switched from jute twine to cotton twine, even though they realize the cost of cotton on today's market is slightly higher than jute, and in one particular case where one concern made this switch, they are so happy about the change that they have complained to us, "Why didn't you change us over much sooner."

If we can supply any additional information, I certainly hope you will feel free to call on me.

Yours very truly,

G. P. BARNWELL,
General Sales Manager.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that a letter from the National Cotton Council of America, signed by Robert C. Jackson, its Washington representative, be printed as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COTTON COUNCIL OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1949.

Hon. BURNET R. MAYBANK,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Treasury and Post Office, Senate Committee on Appropriations, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: With further reference to the proposal that the Post Office Department purchase a portion of its twine requirements in a twine made from fibers other than jute, you will find attached a copy of a letter received today from Bibb Manufacturing Co., Macon, Ga. As you know, this is one of the largest spinning and weaving establishments in this country and we believe that their views on the matter will be of interest to you.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT C. JACKSON,
Washington Representative.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I know that since 1943, because of the war, there have been no bids to the Post Office Department on cotton twine. I know that in the years to come cotton twine will be used by the Post Office Department, not to the extent of 25 percent, but by a larger percentage, because it is of better quality, is more adaptable, and it is an American product. It is not like jute, simply a grass cut in a foreign country, worth 1 cent a pound, and imported into this country.

I do not intend to speak at length, because I stated to the committee, and I repeat on the floor, that I hope this amendment will be retained. If it is not retained, I look to the Postmaster General and to those in charge of the Post Office Department to do what is right by the American people, the farmers of the country, and all who pay taxes to help operate the Post Office Department. All I ask is that, with reference to every bid, the Post Office Department notify the representatives of the cotton industry in Washington and elsewhere, so as to give them an opportunity to sell cotton twine to the Post Office Department. I am not suggesting that the Post Office Department would do otherwise, but I want the record to show that the United States Senate expects the Post Office Department to leave no stone unturned to permit the cotton mills of the Nation to have an opportunity to bid, and that when the bids are submitted the Senate expects the Department to take into consideration the highly technical differences between cotton twine and jute twine, including tensile strength, breaking strength, length of staple, and matters of that kind of which only those who are technically informed have knowledge.

I feel certain, Mr. President, that the Post Office Department has been fair. From the correspondence I have had I know the Department will be fair in considering bids. I regret that for the past 9 years the amendment was omitted from the bill. That was for the reason that cotton was needed to clothe our soldiers and to make parachute webbing and other things necessary to the successful termination of the war.

When jute is brought in from India, financed by British interests, and dumped in this country at almost no cost comparable with cotton, it is time some consideration be given to our own people.

I shall conclude my remarks with the statement that the cotton interests want no advantage over anyone. They want the Post Office Department to consider the price involved. Representatives of the Post Office Department testified before the committee that if this amendment were placed in the bill it might help to reduce the price of jute which England sells here. As a member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service I found that we now pay for that commodity the same price we paid 2 or 3 or 4 or 5 years ago. I offered the amendment because the Post Office Department said it would probably force down the price of jute. I am not interested in the price of jute or in any effort to force it down. All I want is a square deal for the American cotton mills, the American farmers, and the American workers, those who belong to the A. F. of L. as well as those who belong to the CIO, and those who belong to no union at all, but who are employed in all the sections of the country in which cotton mills are located.

I hope the Post Office Department will give due consideration to the tensile strength of cotton, and not bid on a yardage basis. I know as well as do representatives of the jute interests that when we could not get jute in this country, hundreds of thousands of bales of a certain grass called sisal were sent to the United States from Mexico. In order to obtain it for shipment, all that had to be done was to cut it and bale it. It could almost be cut with a lawn mower.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say. I know many Senators are interested in cotton, and want the cotton producers and interests to have a square deal. If the cotton manufacturers bid low, they are awarded the business, and if the jute manufacturers bid low, they are awarded the business. But I want the Post Office Department to consider the technical angles to which I have called atttention, including the tensile strength and ease in tying packages.

I now yield to my colleague from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, during the war——

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BALDWIN. I understood that under the rules of the Senate a Senator could yield only for a question. I did not understand that a Senator could attain the floor and parcel it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BALDWIN. Very well, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, during the war it was true that we had no difficulty in the United States in disposing of all the cotton grown in America, because the war required most of the production. Immediately after the war there was of necessity, a backlog, so to speak, for cotton goods. One could scarcely buy a sheet, a pillow case, a shirt, or a towel at the close of the war, because so much cotton had been used in carrying on the war. Immediately thereafter manufacturers went into making those necessities of life, sheets, pillow cases, towels and they can now be purchased without difficulty, indeed so many of these articles have been made that today we have a large surplus on hand. In the cotton industry it will be found that the mills are operating on an average of only 3 days a week, due to the fact that they have caught up with the demand for that kind of goods. If the Congress does not take some action to protect our home industries, I fear that they are not only going to be running 3 days a week, but a great many mills will be forced, even this summer to shut down entirely.

This little amendment is not so far-reaching, but we must bear in mind that every little bit helps. The amendment is nothing more than what was carried in the appropriation bills from 1942 back. Since 1942 the amendment has been left out of the appropriation bills.

It is my opinion, and it is the opinion of the Post Office Department, that this amendment will help out in the purchase of twine for the Post Office Department, because the officials of the Department feel that if they have this competition, it will bring about probably a reduced price for jute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As the law now reads, when the Post Office Department asks for bids on twine, it also asks for bids on both jute and cotton. Is that not true?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As the law is today, I think they can ask for bids on both, and I think they will do it, even if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not a fact that they do that now, that they are asking for bids on both jute and cotton every time they ask for bids?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If they are put on the same price basis, that excludes cotton, because cotton will naturally be higher than jute. But if this amendment is in the law, the officials are given the right to set a price for each.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to my colleague, the senior Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say that this is a highly technical issue which cannot be satisfactorily debated and settled on the Senate floor. I realize that my colleague knows more about cotton mills than any other Member of the Senate; he worked in them, and he knows about cotton, as I do. It is the tensile strength at the place where the knot is tied that counts. Of course, jute comes from India, a country controlled until recently by England, and jute was brought here in British ships.

As the Senator from Delaware says, jute is cheaper, but not when we consider the tensile strength and other factors. I intend to hold extensive hearings on this particular point when the opportunity presents itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely wish to point out that what is proposed under the amendment is not competitive bidding. Those interested are seeking authority to bring about not competitive bidding, but a subsidy for cotton at the expense of the Post Office Department. Today there is competitive bidding, but if this amendment shall be agreed to, it will mean that 25 percent of the purchases would have to be made by the Department not under competitive bidding, but from cotton regardless of the price. Can the Senator refer me to anyone in the Post Office Department who has recommended the purchase of cotton in this connection, and what will be the additional cost involved?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The representatives of the Post Office Department who appeared before the committee said they would like to have this amendment put into the appropriation bill. Does that answer the question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would answer it if the Senator would cite the page in the RECORD where I could find that.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I can answer the question, if the Senator from South Carolina will yield to me.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It is on page 134 of the "side slips" of the committee. There is a very brief paragraph about it on that page, as well as on page 137.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, that is true; it is to be found on page 137, I say in answer to the question of the Senator from Delaware. Would the Senator like to have that inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I ask that what appears on page 37, beginning with the words "During the 7 months ending February 28," and through the end of page 138, be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. During the 7 months ending February 28, 1949, the consumption of cotton totaled 4,848,239 running bales, while for the same period in 1948 the total amounted to 5,431,140 running bales, according to reports of the Bureau of the Census.

2. The same reports show that cotton-consuming spindles in operation on the last working day of February 1949 totaled 20,758,000, and on the last working day of February 1948, totaled 21,485,000.

3. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, United States Department of Labor, wage earners in the cotton-textile industry dropped from 529,400 in March 1948, to 494,000 in January 1949. This reduction would be much greater if it were not for the fact that many mills have reduced their operations by operating only 3 to 4 days a week while maintaining the same number of shifts.

PURCHASE OF COTTON TWINE

Mr. BUCKLEY. We bought cotton twine up to the 25-percent requirements up to 1941, but you could not get any more. There was only one mill, Mr. Chairman, that was making the twine for us, at that time. The other mills were not equipped to turn the twine out.

Senator MAYBANK. The only thing asked, as I see it, is that we put back into the appropriation bill the old regulation we had before the WPB controlled production in the mills and told them what to make. Now, can you buy on a yardage basis rather than by the pound, because a pound of jute is worth about 4 or 5 cents?

Mr. BUCKLEY. We buy all of our twines through the purchasing agent, and Mr. Parkman can give you all information on that.

Senator MAYBANK. I am not looking for too much information, because I can understand what you are up against, but I wanted to get your thought as to whether or not we should put this back in the Appropriation Act.

Mr. BUCKLEY. It was not any hardship on us before.

Senator HAYDEN. How much difference did it make in money?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I think that it should be back in there, and give us some competition against jute twine.

EFFECT ON PRICE OF JUTE

Senator HAYDEN. What I wanted to know is, when you did have that provision in the law, what were the differences in cost between cotton and jute?

Mr. BUCKLEY. The cotton was more expensive than jute, but the injection of cotton twine into our usage had the tendency to keep the jute twine price down.

Senator MAYBANK. Competition kept jute down, and now they can charge what they want. Has jute gone up materially?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes; and you can understand the reason for that, because of the shortage of supply.

Senator HAYDEN. That is the next thing I was going to ask. You have been told that the jute supply throughout the world is very much less than that.

Senator JOHNSTON. You feel the competition would have a good effect, that is the main thing.

Senator HAYDEN. What about that?

Mr. BUCKLEY. It would keep the price of jute down, and give the cotton industry a chance to get in on the market. It did before.

Senator MAYBANK. And today the jute would be financed by the ECA, or by the RFC, or somebody; would it not?

Mr. BUCKLEY. The company from which we buy our jute is here in America.

Senator MAYBANK. But they import the raw jute in bales, and then they make the twine and sell it to you?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes; that is right.

Senator MAYBANK. I am not against any American concern for making it—I did not mean it that way—but if we could put a 25-percent limitation there for cotton, I am delighted and pleased to hear you say that you believe that would bring down the price of jute.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I think the competition would bring the price of jute down and also keep the price of cotton twine down.

Senator MAYBANK. Thank you very much.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, that bears out the statement I made a few months ago. It shows why we are very anxious to get this little amendment into the bill, to provide for and care for American industry.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. And we are particularly anxious that the Post Office Department judge the article on its merits, not on its price. Sometimes what costs a little bit more is of a great deal more value.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am glad the senior Senator from South Carolina has brought that to my attention. I have worked in the mills. I have worked in the carding room and the spinning room, where the threads are tied, and I believe I know something about the industry. With 10 years' experience in a cotton mill, I know that the little thread made from cotton is many times stronger than one made from jute, and a smaller thread can be used in the Department with the same results following the use of a larger thread made from jute.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator realize that this year the Post Office Department is going to spend, if my memory serves me correctly—and if I am not correct I trust I will be corrected—$1,315,000 on wrapping threads for Post Office packages?

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, would the Senators on the other side of the Chamber be kind enough to talk loud enough so we on this side can hear them?

Mr. MAYBANK. I asked the Senator from South Carolina if he realized that this year the Post Office Department intended, under the budget and under the appropriations bill to spend $1,300,000-plus on twine, whether it be cotton, jute, or some other fiber? The Post Office Department expects to spend quite a lot of money this year for that purpose.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is it not true that while the Department is going to spend that amount of money for twine, if the amendment is left in the bill it will result in the cost being $170,000 more than it would be if the amendment were stricken out?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator is correct provided the same yardage is purchased. But I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that not as many yards will be needed for wrapping purposes if cotton twine is used, because sometimes it is necessary to double jute twine, but it is not necessary to double cotton twine.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Massachusetts and I sat in the subcommittee together hearing testimony on this subject, and I call his attention to the fact that I have placed in the RECORD a letter from Bibb Manufacturing Co., and which the Senator from Massachusetts probably has not yet seen. I have not shown it to anyone because I received it only yesterday. The letter contains technical information regarding the strength and yardage of the different kinds of twine. I should appreciate it very much if the Senator would read the letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow. The letter contains approval of the amendment.

I also received a letter from the National Cotton Council which sets forth the wishes of the council. When the Senator and I heard the testimony in the committee, frankly there had been no bids received from cotton manufacturers since 1943 because of the situation the junior Senator from South Carolina has spoken of. I wish the Senator would read the letters. What I want to see, and I am certain my colleague wants to see, is that cotton twine shall receive equal treatment on the basis of its value, and not on the basis of its dollar cost, or, let us say, its penny cost.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. If, as the Senator from South Carolina says, less yardage is needed if cotton twine is used than if jute twine is used, is it not true then that cotton would be in fair competition with jute for the particular needs for which the twine is required? Is it not true that the Post Office Department, if it desired cotton twine, could provide for the purchase of so many yards of cotton twine and for the purchase of so many yards of jute twine, and ask for bids on that basis?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Connecticut is correct. As I have said, I have received a letter from Bibb Manufacturing Co.——

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I have not completed my question.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am sorry I interrupted the Senator.

Mr. BALDWIN. Would not that result in a perfectly fair competition as between cotton and jute? Will the Senator answer that question?

Mr. MAYBANK. I would never ask for anything except fair competition. That is all the National Cotton Council is asking for. I do not know whether it is a good thing to provide that 25 percent of the purchase must be of cotton. As the Senator well knows what we want the Post Office Department to do—and, very frankly, I have no secrets from the Senator from Connecticut, and certainly not from the senior Senator from Massachusetts, who sat in the subcommittee with me—what we want the Post Office Department to do is to go back to the practices of the days before 1943, when cotton twine was eliminated because of the uses required of cotton elsewhere, and give cotton twine a chance to come back into use in the Department. Certainly the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Massachusetts, of all Members of the United States Senate, would never oppose the cotton industry, which has meant so much, and now means so much, and will in the future mean so much more to the States of Massachusetts and Connecticut. I have always believed that New England mills have done great good to our country. I want to see the mills in Connecticut and in Massachusetts and elsewhere in New England do a good business, just as we are trying to have the mills in our section of the country do good business. I should like to see the mills in Providence, in Fall River, and in other New England cities do a good business.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he does not believe he is overdoing himself in his plea for the cotton mills of New England. I think we can plead for the cotton mills of New England as well as he can. I thank him for his sympathetic interest in our cotton mills. But what we are pleading for is the jute mills of New England, or of the Northeast. Is the Senator correct when he says that he wants a perfectly fair, open, competitive deal in this matter? If that be so is it fair in the bids to require that 25 percent of the purchases must be of cotton? Does that create a situation in which there is fair competition?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. The testimony given before the committee showed that the Post Office Department believed that the price of jute had increased so much that a proviso should be put in the bill which would require contracts to be let through bids which should tend to lower the cost. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with me that the Post Office Department said that if the proviso were in the bill it would possibly result in lowering the competitive price of jute. That was stated to the committee. I do not vouch for it, however. I can only vouch for the fact that the Bibb Manufacturing Co.'s letter is absolutely correct, because I know something about cotton. As my colleague has said, tensile strength, yardage, and other factors should be considered by the Department.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. On the question of tensile strength I should like to read a statement from the record of the hearings. My good friend from South Carolina said he would like to go back to the early days of the 1940's.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say that I was in the cotton business in Charleston, S. C., and I did a great deal of business with Connecticut mills, as well as mills in other New England States. I have gone through those mills, and know much about them.

Mr. BALDWIN. My distinguished friend the Senator from South Carolina said he would like to go back to the situation as it was in the early 1940's, and if the junior Senator from South Carolina will yield, I should like to read from the hearings on the Treasury-Post Office Departments bill in 1940. That was before the war.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to correct the statement I made. I said I should like to go back to conditions as they once were, which is provided for by the amendment that is in the bill. I did not suggest that we go back to any such conditions as existed in this country or elsewhere in the dark days in 1940 or 1941.

Mr. BALDWIN. I understand that. The Senator wanted to consider the matter with reference to cotton legislation. I should like to read for the benefit of the RECORD the statement of a purchasing agent which was made when the bill was under consideration at that time. Mr. Parkman answered a question asked him by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]:

Senator LODGE. And is it not true that for certain purposes cotton is not as good as jute?

Mr. PARKMAN. It all depends on your twine. Going back to 1915, when jute was selling at 12.62 cents a pound, the Department bought 530,000 pounds of cotton twine for experimental purposes at slightly higher prices. The next year a million pounds were purchased. The first year—1915—about 28 percent of the total amount of twine bought was cotton, and the second year—1916—about 59 percent of the total purchase of twine was cotton. I happen to know about this cotton twine because I was postmaster in Kansas during the war. The cotton twine would cut the men's fingers. It was too strong. It had too high tensile strength. At that time jute twine was selling at around 10 cents a pound. The cotton twine was so unsatisfactory that no more was purchased for 16 years, even when, 5 or 6 years later, the cost of jute twine went up to over 27½ cents a pound, although experiments were made with paper twine, which was found to be unsatisfactory. Again in 1932 the Department, due to the depressed condition of cotton, got out a proposal for twine, and advertised for only cotton twine, leaving jute out entirely. The Comptroller General wrote a letter of severe criticism to the Postmaster General at that time on account of limiting competition to one product. The Department rejected those bids, readvertisement was issued for cotton or jute, and, due to lower price, jute was purchased.

Further, Mr. Parkman said:

But if we were limited to cotton twine right now we would have to take any kind of twine at whatever price was offered.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. During the war we had to take it at any price.

Mr. BALDWIN. I am speaking now of the time before the war, in 1940. The Senator will remember that in 1940 we were assured that we would never get into a war.

Mr. MAYBANK. I was not in the Senate at that time, so I gave no such assurance.

Let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator stated that the employees of the Post Office Department cut their hands on cotton twine.

Mr. BALDWIN. That is what the representatives of the postal employees have said, and I believe that they are truthful.

Mr. MAYBANK. I doubt whether anyone would cut his hands with either twine. I have before me samples of both, which I should be glad to have the Senator try. I will demonstrate——

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that the senior Senator from South Carolina is one of the strongest men in the Senate. His example is no measure of strength.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to take the two different kinds of twine and try them out. He will see that the cotton twine will not cut his fingers. That is especially true as it applies to a man who has been working daily outdoors, or working in the post office, where he has experience almost every minute with handling twine in wrapping packages.

The only reason we are advocating this amendment is to give cotton a little break. When I say "a little break" I do not mean that we want to give cotton any advantage beyond what it deserves. If Senators will only do that, this amendment will be adopted. As the Post Office Department well points out, it would like to see this amendment adopted in order to provide some competition between different kinds of twine. I believe that competition would be good for the taxpayers of America. That is what the representative of the Post Office Department meant when he spoke before the committee. So I hope that cotton will be given an opportunity for a fair trial for 1 year as a wrapping twine in the Post Office Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 39, line 7.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, in Massachusetts we have cotton mills, and we also have a jute mill. I hope that this amendment will be stricken from the bill. I say that for this reason: We want fair competition. We want just what the junior Senator from South Carolina wants. But if this amendment remains in the bill, it will mean that 25 percent of all the twine bought must be cotton, and that with respect to that 25 percent, no bids will be received for jute.

I should like to point out that this amendment was first placed in the law in 1940. It was not in the law before 1940. Before that time bids could be received on both cotton and jute, but there was no exclusive provision that 25 percent should be cotton twine. In the 3 years 1941, 1942, and 1943, bids were received on cotton. In 1941 jute cost approximately 14 cents a pound. I am omitting the fractions. Cotton cost 20 cents a pound. In 1942 jute cost 17 cents a pound and cotton cost 32 cents a pound, almost double. In 1943 jute cost 23 cents a pound and cotton cost 40 cents a pound, or approximately double. During the war years jute alone was bought. The amount of twine used was trebled between 1941 and 1945, because of the increase in the volume of mail.

We are told by the post-office officials that jute is a more efficient twine than cotton. I shall not argue that question in detail, because I do not know. We have to take their word for it. If we have fair competition, we want to get the cheaper product. It is not in the record, but it is my recollection that we were told that if this amendment were to prevail, it would cost approximately $170,000 more than if jute alone were used. We want to receive bids on jute which will be as low as possible. We want to keep expenses as low as can be done.

As I say, in Massachusetts we have cotton mills and we have a substantial jute mill. All we want is fair competition as between the two kinds of twine. I believe that the employees of the Post Office Department as a whole prefer jute to cotton, so I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield for that purpose, if I may do so without losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Massachusetts stated that there would be a certain additional cost if this amendment were adopted. As I remember, he gave the figure of $170,000.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is the figure which I remember. I cannot prove it, because that figure is not in the record.

Mr. MAYBANK. I would not ask the Senator to prove it, because any statement he might make would be correct. I make this suggestion to the Senator: One reason we are concerned is that the 90 percent of parity may or may not be continued in farm legislation in the future. I am hopeful that it will be. I expect to vote for 90 percent of parity. I intend to vote against a variable parity being put into effect. So whatever the Post Office Department may have figured on, it figured on the basis of the present price of cotton as compared with the present price of jute. No one knows what the future may hold as to the price of either jute or cotton.

We do not want to cause the taxpayers an additional expense of $170,000. All we want is a square deal on the basis of the intrinsic value in the fiber, and the value to the Government itself, not on the basis of some post-office employee's opinion based on the fear that he may hurt his hands tying packages. We pay Post Office Department employees pretty well for tying packages.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree with the Senator. All we want is square, open competition. We want to see stricken from the bill the provision that 25 percent of the amount used shall be exclusively for cotton twine. Then let the best man win.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, it is the purpose of the junior Senator from Connecticut to address himself to the proviso recommended by the committee, on page 39, beginning in line 7. As the junior Senator from Connecticut understands that provision, it would require the Post Office Department to spend one-fourth of the funds appropriated for the purchase of twine in buying cotton twine, irrespective of its cost.

As the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] has said, it is proposed that 25 percent of this appropriation be spent for cotton twine, with respect to which there will be no competition whatsoever from jute. If my distinguished and amiable friends from South Carolina want a perfectly open and square deal, the thing to do is to strike out the proviso. Then we shall have open and fair competition on the basis of intrinsic value, yardage, price, delivery, or any other factor the Department may wish to include.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am happy to hear the Senator say that all he asks is a fair deal, on the basis of intrinsic value, yardage, tensile strength, and so forth. That is all we ask.

Mr. BALDWIN. What the Senator from Connecticut is saying is that we would get it if we were to strike from the bill the 25-percent proviso.

Mr. MAYBANK. I presume that the Post Office Department pays some attention to what happens in the United States Senate. The Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Massachusetts have both stated that all they desire is a fair deal. That is all we want. We do not want a decision based upon the statement that cotton twine is going to hurt someone's fingers. What we want is a decision based upon the value of cotton twine as compared with the value of jute, or anything else.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, this proviso appeals to me as being a rather extraordinary proposal. In its report the committee has advised us that the estimated postal deficit for the present year will amount to $526,441,972. It is also estimated that for the fiscal year 1950, the postal deficit will be $403,672,300.

Even though the committee has proposed an increase of $137,904,675 over the appropriations for 1949, including the amounts carried in the first deficiency bill for 1949, the grand total of $2,045,209,500 is a reduction of $34,462,800 below the budget estimate.

In other words, the committee has substantially reduced the appropriation, as compared to the amount recommended in the budget.

We are told that during the calendar year 1949 the Post Office Department handled the largest volume of business in its history; and there appears to be every likelihood that the volume of its activities will continue to increase.

The Postmaster General has the obligation to render proper service, and is authorized to appoint certain employees in whatever numbers may be necessary to move the mail, regardless of the amount of the appropriations. There is, therefore, the ever present likelihood that the estimated postal deficit of almost $404,000,000 may turn out to be even larger, and may approach the 1949 estimate of $526,441,972.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to ask if it is not true that the Post Office Department itself had nothing to do with the building up of that deficit, but that during recent years the granting of salary increases, without any increases in postal rates, has brought about that condition.

Mr. BALDWIN. I agree with the Senator but it seems to me that we are approaching the stage where we cannot simply say, "It is just too bad that this deficit has occurred for various reasons," and then not attempt to do anything about it. The fact remains that there is a deficit, and we must make every possible effort to reduce it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, is it not also true that the penalty mail and the franking privilege cost the Government almost $100,000,000?

Mr. BALDWIN. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is it not also true that we are subsidizing the air-mail service—which ought to be charged to the defense of the Nation—$26,000,000 a year?

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. So it seems to me those matters should be taken into consideration when we talk about the $403,000,000 deficit of the Post Office Department.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, my answer to the Senator is that although there may be plenty of excuses for the existence of the deficit, there is no excuse for our not doing everything in our power to reduce it.

The proviso to which I am addressing my remarks will cost the people of the country approximately $170,000. Comparatively speaking, that is not a very large amount, and some persons may say it is only a drop in the bucket. However, Mr. President, if there are enough drops of that sort, the bucket will soon be filled.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, I should like to ask whether he will be in favor of making every county newspaper pay its way, so far as the post-office service it receives is concerned.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, we are not discussing postal rates at this time; we are discussing the deficit in the postal budget. When the time comes to discuss postal rates, I shall be happy to do so.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator from Connecticut is discussing the Post Office Department and its deficits, so I think all the facts in that connection should be brought out. I think the public should have all the facts, not merely half of the facts.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's statement, I say that I am not on the subcommittee; but I, for one, believe that in certain areas there should be increases in postal rates; and I shall be glad to join with the Senator as to any suggestions he may care to make for increases in postal rates.

However, at this time we are talking about a means of making a saving in the appropriations, although only a small one, to wit, a saving of approximately $170,000.

Under these circumstances, Mr. President, one would have every reason to expect that no amendment which admittedly would have the effect of increasing the costs of the postal service would be seriously considered. Under no circumstances, Mr. President, would any unnecessary increased costs appear to be warranted.

Mr. President, I think my distinguished friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], who is the very able chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, will agree with that statement, for in his work on the committee he has already indicated his agreement with it.

We have investigated the cost of the proviso now under consideration, and the effect it will have upon the postal service. The statement was made—and its accuracy was confirmed—that the effect of requiring the use of the different kind of twine, as stated in the proviso, rather than to permit the Department to use the kind it has used for many years past, and is using today, will be approximately $175,000 annually.

It may be inconceivable to some persons that the annual appropriation for twine used by the Post Office Department should amount to more than $1,000,000, but that is indeed the case. Such twine is one of the very large items of supply for the Post Office Department. So we are dealing with an important item, insofar as the Post Office is concerned.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LONG. Does not this amendment amount, in fact, to the granting of a subsidy to certain cotton producers, by requiring the Post Office Department to use such cotton twine?

Mr. BALDWIN. That is correct; the effect is to grant a subsidy to cotton producers.

Mr. LONG. Is it not also true that the Post Office is losing $500,000,000 a year because it is subsidizing practically everyone in the United States, in one fashion or another?

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator from Louisiana is absolutely correct.

Mr. LONG. I wonder whether the Senator from Connecticut will agree with me that the chances are we can remove almost all the $500,000,000 deficit if we put the appropriations for the postal service fairly well in line with the actual cost of providing the service.

Mr. BALDWIN. I agree with the Senator from Louisiana that we must do two things, insofar as the Post Office Department is concerned: First, we must cut down the costs of the postal service in every way we economically can do, consistent with the rendering of good service; and, second, we must impose increases in postal rates, where they can be properly and economically applied. I think we should not accept some of the recommendations made by the Postmaster General. We must recognize that the Post Office Department furnishes service to the country as a whole, and probably we shall have to continue to subsidize the postal service for a long time to come. But I think the Senator from Louisiana is absolutely correct when he says that we should reduce the subsidy to the point of having it meet the basic needs of the particular service we have in mind.

I submit that the proposal we are now discussing should not be regarded as a proper subsidy, because the cotton industry already is receiving a very substantial subsidy in the form of support prices. I believe in having the Government provide support prices for cotton, and I have voted for them.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to point out, in connection with what the Senator has just said, that, so far as the parity price of cotton and subsidies are concerned, the item now under consideration is a small one. In support of that statement I submit the following memorandum from the Post Office Department:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 2, 1949.

Memorandum for Mr. BUCKLEY:

In compliance with your telephonic request of today, there is shown below data in connection with the purchase of all kinds of wrapping twine during the fiscal years 1941, 1942, 1943, 1945, 1946, 1947, and 1948:

1941
1,964,101 lbs. jute, average cost, $0.1429 lb	$280,558.69
533,530 lbs. cotton, average cost, $0.2025 lb	109,511.45
Total	390,070.14
1942
2,025,460 lbs. jute, average cost, $0.17 lb	344,328.32
385,725 lbs. cotton, average cost, $0.3261 lb	125,807.24
Total	470,135.56
1943
2,552,816 lbs. jute, average cost, $0.2019 lb	515,441.14
429,243 lbs. cotton, average cost, $0.404 lb	173,452.51
Total	688,893.65
1945
4,337,366 lbs. jute, average cost, $0.21 lb	911,284.60
1946
4,251,239 lbs. jute, average cost, $0.22 lb	907,081.60
1947
3,683,864 lbs. jute, average cost, $0.25 lb	910,559.60
1948
8,321,206 lbs. jute, average cost, $0.318 lb	$1,056,187.54
ESTIMATE 1950
3,890,000 lbs. jute, average cost, $0.3595 lb	1,337,340.00

It will be noted that I have added the information for the fiscal years 1942 and 1943 as considerable cotton twine was purchased during those two fiscal years.

L. H. VULLINGS,
Acting Superintendent.

So, Mr. President, from the standpoint of the use of cotton, this item is a comparatively minor one at best. If we take the word of the Post Office officials—and I say this even though in Massachusetts both jute twine and cotton twine are manufactured—cotton twine in this instance is less efficient than jute twine.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his contribution.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. So that the RECORD may be entirely clear, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. It was stated that there was a very high subsidy on cotton, in fact that it was oversubsidized, or something to that effect. That is also true is it not of all agricultural products, or at least the majority of them?

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. The business of this country is subsidized.

Mr. BALDWIN. It is, indeed.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is it not a fact that the United States Government took the cotton of the poor cotton farmer and sold it at a profit of $90,000,000?

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator is more familiar with that detail than I am.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is in the RECORD.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I may say the Government never got the $90,000,000. That was only the figure at which it sold to foreign countries, who never paid for it. That was the net result of lend-lease.

Mr. MAYBANK. But the Senator will agree as to the figure; will he not?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; but we got no money for it. We merely got in return credits that we canceled. That is all we got for it.

Mr. MAYBANK. But all the cotton of the cotton farmers was sold, it having been taken over at a certain price, and exported. Is that not correct, I ask the Senator from Ohio? Therefore, the books of the Commodity Credit Corporation show a credit for cotton.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct, but only because the Government in effect gave them the money, except that for a year or two before the war, there was small profit. But all the stuff that was sold for them was sold on credit, and we never got the money.

Mr. BALDWIN. It was a paper profit of the most paperish sort, was it not?

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. Let us be frank about this matter. With all the Government's appropriations under the Marshall plan, besides the large credits available, many business corporations, textile institutions, and others have derived no benefit.

Mr. BALDWIN. I may say to my distinguished friend, on that point, that one of the most vigorous complaints I get from my constituents, the workers in Connecticut, who now number about 12 percent on the unemployment rolls, is that no appreciable amount of business has been coming into Connecticut under the Marshall plan. I may say further to my distinguished friend from South Carolina, concerning the subsidy and the tariff, about which he was speaking, that one of the large industries in the State of Connecticut is the watch and clock industry, and it is also a large industry in the State of Massachusetts. By reason of the variations now in effect, some of the largest clock and watch industries are closing their doors and turning their employees away. We are not here asking for a subsidy for special treatment of the watch and clock industry. All we want in that respect is a fair deal.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is all we want.

Mr. BALDWIN. And that is what I say we are not getting.

Mr. MAYBANK. I may say to the Senator from Connecticut I hope, when appropriations come before the Senate, he will join with me, as I joined with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], in supporting a cut of 10 percent, and, if necessary, a cut of 20 percent.

Mr. BALDWIN. Of course, my distinguished friend is on the right track, but I would ask him to join with me in one thing. When we come to the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, let us put in it the danger-point provision again. As I want to see the cotton industry in the Southland supported by an open and aboveboard, fair subsidy, so, too, I want to see the American worker and the American industrialists in the State of Connecticut have a fair break with foreign competition.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BALDWIN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LONG. I should merely like to say to the Senator, I believe he is basically sound in arguing against a subsidy of $150,000, on one point, but I should like to suggest to him that he go along with me when we start working on the $500,000,000 subsidies. We ought to do something about the post office, generally.

Mr. BALDWIN. I think my distinguished friend from Louisiana has a good point.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to refer to the Post Office Department. United States savings bonds and stamps cost the Post Office $1,697,129; Civil Service, $1,767,943; documentary stamps, $321,582; migratory bird stamps, $86,512; custodial service in public buildings, similar to that employed in connection with the courts throughout the land, $14,844,680. It looks as if other departments are riding the Post Office Department at the present time. Personally I think we should look into all these charges which are now placed on the Post Office Department, and put them under "miscellaneous", instead of placing them on the Post Office, and then saying that the Post Office has a deficit of so much, for airplane service, and many other items. I myself am becoming tired of hearing so much talk about the deficit, when we are not told what is bringing it about.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, to resume my remarks, I would say to my distinguished friend that what I am contending for is the same thing he is contending for, to help reduce the deficit in the Post Office Department. The proviso in the bill will add $175,000 alone to that deficit. That is why I am against the proviso.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not know exactly what it will cost. No one knows. No one knows what cotton will be bringing. No one knows exactly what jute will be bringing. That is only an approximate amount, under the present tariff, and if we continue to be unable to run our mills and produce our cotton, I think the Senator from Connecticut realizes what will happen to the price of cotton.

Mr. BALDWIN. I may say also, Mr. President, in response to my good friend's statement, as he has pointed out, that the Post Office Department is carrying other special subsidies of one kind and another, burdens which should not be on its back; and with that I am in absolute agreement. But I pursue the point further to say, when we are going to subsidize cotton, let us do it through the agricultural bill, not through the appropriation bill for the Treasury and Post Office. That is the point we are arguing here. As I stated before, the proviso will increase the cost about $175,000 annually.

More than this, Mr. President, for this additional cost, the Department will get less twine than it could obtain for the same amount of money.

This alone, Mr. President, should certainly lead us to be reluctant to adopt a provision which was not requested in the executive budget, and was not passed by the House.

This proviso was added by the committee. It was not requested in the executive budget. It was not passed by the House. It is an idea that originates in the Senate. The executive department, in its budget, omitted any such proviso, and the House when it passed the bill omitted it.

It should certainly warrant the most searching scrutiny of the proposal, and particularly of the reasons why an increase of this magnitude in cost should be provided under present fiscal conditions and the anticipated postal deficits which have led to requests for increases in certain postal rates.

In the course of my inquiry, Mr. President, I have discovered that this is not altogether a novel proposal. It appears to have had a considerable history.

I should suppose, Mr. President, that we have no more zealous and devoted group of governmental employees than those in the postal service.

Over the years every effort has been made, and properly so, to provide them with the best materials which they need in the performance of their arduous duties.

Every year the Post Office Department purchases several million pounds of twine to enable its employees, particularly those who work in railway mail cars, to tie up the bundles of letters which are sorted for distribution and delivery.

Careful specifications have been developed, I am told, to secure a twine which will function properly. It must be of such character that it will hold letters together and not stretch or permit them to slip.

It must permit rapid handling of the mails. Above all, it must not be so made that in the performance of their duties the postal employees will cut or injure their hands in working with it.

Mr. President, it has been pointed out that cotton has a higher tensile strength than has jute. That is correct, but, in the minds of the men employed in handling this twine for long years in the postal service, that is a disadvantage rather than an advantage.

For these purposes the Post Office Department, since the turn of the century, has been using a letter-mail twine made of jute.

It bought this twine for several reasons. It was economical to do so. It was a completely satisfactory product. The needs of the postal service were met in timely fashion. Moreover, no other adequate letter-mail twine was available.

Despite some experimental work, a satisfactory cotton letter-mail twine has, in fact, never been developed.

My friends have said that what they want to do is to give an opportunity to the cotton manufacturers and cotton growers to provide this kind of twine. We have been working with it for a long time, Mr. President, and the right kind of cotton twine has never yet been developed.

On this point, Mr. President, I have found that as late as 1939 the Purchasing Agent of the Department, told the Senate committee that in only 2 years up to that time had the Department purchased cotton twine. He said:

> I happen to know about this cotton twine because I was a postmaster in Kansas during the war. The cotton twine did cut the men's fingers.

In the same hearing he said:

> The main objection to the use of cotton twine is on account of the cutting of the fingers and the stretch that is in the twine.

Nevertheless, Congress had been persuaded for the fiscal year 1940 to include in the departmental appropriation a proviso similar to that now recommended to be included in this bill.

It would seem appropriate, Mr. President, to inquire what happened. The first effect was that the Department's buying program for this necessary supply item was thoroughly disrupted. In addition, it had to pay $89,000 more for its letter-mail twine and got less twine.

Even more striking, Mr. President, was the fact that throughout the 3 years in which this provision was in effect, only one cotton mill elected to bid to supply the departmental requirements.

The junior Senator from Connecticut may say that there are cotton mills in Connecticut, just as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts reminded the Senator from South Carolina that there are cotton mills in Massachusetts. Indeed there are; and there are also jute mills in New England, and I think it is fair that they should have an even chance.

Certainly, Mr. President, in the reciprocal-trade arrangements we shall find it will be more feasible for us to import raw materials in return for the export of our manufactured goods than it is to do the other thing, for our good and our own protectin. While I want to see the cotton farmer get a square deal, and I also want to see the cotton-mill worker and the cotton-mill owner get a square deal, I also want to see manufacturers in New England get a square deal, whether they be cotton manufacturers or jute manufacturers.

With this provision in the law, the Post Office had to take whatever cotton twine was offered at whatever price was charged by this single manufacturer. But even more important, from the point of view of postal employees, it could not get a satisfactory twine made of cotton. Under the proviso, the Department had to take whatever cotton twine was offered at whatever price it was offered.

This unsatisfactory condition continued, Mr. President, until in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1942 the proviso was eliminated. Nevertheless, the Post Office Department has consistently continued to invite bids on both types of twine. It has always purchased on competitive bidding, but over the years it has never been established that a satisfactory twine of cotton could be manufactured and delivered in accordance with the postal needs.

I do not gloat in satisfaction over that. I simply state it as a fact. If a cotton twine could be developed which could compete in price, in usefulness, and in adaptability to the uses of the Post Office Department, that would be fine. But I say it has not yet been done, and it is up to the cotton manufacturers to do it on a perfectly open and fair competitive basis.

Why, then, Mr. President, you might ask, are we dealing with this same suggestion today?

I have examined the hearings on this proposal and I find that it apparently originated in a letter from interested cotton-twine manufacturers and their trade asscciations. In this communication it is reported that these manufacturers are doing exploratory work directed to a better cotton twine for post-office requirements.

It would appear, Mr. President, that this is a recognition of one of the difficulties which led Congress to eliminate this same proviso 8 years ago.

The letter also recognizes that cotton twine will cost more and that there should not be imposed upon the Post Office Department any unnecessary burden or expenditure.

One of the extraordinary things, Mr. President, is that the purchasing agent of the Post Office Department, to whose previous testimony on the unsatisfactory character of cotton twine and its excessive cost I have previously referred, was present at the hearings early in April, and it was suggested to the committee that he could furnish it with information. However, he was not invited to testify before the committee. I simply say the committee has not had the benefit of his information.

Mr. President, it should be clearly understood that there is nothing to prevent anyone from bidding to supply cotton letter-mail twine to the Post Office Department. Indeed, we have been advised that in every invitation for many years the Post Office Department has included specifications for cotton twine and has invited bids. There is a free and open opportunity for competitive bidding on this item.

Nevertheless, only occasionally have cotton manufacturers ventured to make bids for small portions of the Post Office's needs.

For example, the purchasing agent reported in 1943 that he had succeeded in getting only partial bids for cotton twine at a price 20 cents per pound over bids for jute; and this had been despite visits which he had made to several large cotton mills in an unsuccessful effort to get them to bid on the Department's requirements.

What we have here, Mr. President, is something entirely different. It is a provision which is designed to create a protected market for this supply item and to require the Post Office Department to purchase cotton twine no matter how much it costs.

Even if a satisfactory cotton twine is not offered, the postal service will have to take, in the words of the purchasing agent, "any kind of twine at whatever price it is offered."

This seems to me, Mr. President, to be highly discriminatory as well as extravagant and burdensome.

I should like to digress a moment, Mr. President, because it seems to me that sometimes in appropriation bills strange and unusual things are done. For example, in New England we manufacture a large number of typewriters, and employ thousands of people in their manufacture. But each year the appropriation bill contains a clause—which the Senator from Connecticut has fought each year—not providing for open competitive bidding, but providing that no department can bid higher than a certain price for typewriters. In other words, the Government steps into that particular field and asks that it be a preferred purchaser. It does not undertake to compete with other citizens of the country but asks that it be a preferred purchaser, so that it can purchase typewriters at prices lower than those at which they are sold generally.

If there is such diligence in saving money that the Government puts a ceiling on the price of typewriters bought for the Federal Government, why is it that it does not exercise diligence when dealing with another important matter of supply? It seems to me that indicates a most glaring inconsistency.

The American companies who employ American labor and now supply through competitive bidding, the twine which the postal service uses, are not located in Connecticut. Their mills, I am told, are located in Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, and other States.

Nevertheless, it would seem that from their point of view this is a highly discriminatory proposal, namely, to give a protected privilege of supplying a necessary item for the postal service, by those in competition with them, wholly apart from price. Whether we should do this by a subsidy in the appropriation bill for the Post Office Department, or in the agricultural appropriation bill, seems to me to be open to no question. If we are to give this subsidy, it should be in the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture, in the appropriation for support prices and items of that sort.

Whether this should be done at the cost of the postal service, rather than by open and direct provision, might be a matter for debate. But the fact is that the relative amount of cotton involved is insignificant.

In 1939 the purchasing agent told the Senate committee that if the Department used entirely letter-mail twine of cotton, it would consume only thirty-three ten-thousandths of 1 percent of an average crop. Under the present proposal, to require that one-quarter of its needs be purchased in cotton twine, the amount of cotton consumed would be slightly over one one-thousandth of 1 percent of the anticipated 1949 crop.

Mr. President, this is a small item, but it seems to the junior Senator from Connecticut that a very important principle is involved. If we are to support commodities, if we are to support agricultural products, let us come right out in the appropriation bill and say, "Here is the manner and method we provide for the support." Let us not run around, and tuck here and tuck there and tuck some other place a little subsidy provision which adds to the cost of the commodity to the taxpayers.

There is another principle involved in this, and that is why I trespass upon the Senate's time in discussing at some length an item which appears to be comparatively small. In the whole budget there are hundreds of thousands of items. When we can find one in which we can honestly and fairly and justly make some reduction, when we can find a particular item in the budget where, by adopting one policy, we can save a few thousand dollars here, a couple of hundred thousand dollars there, or $50,000, and can multiply that by a thousand times, we are doing the kind of job which should be done in an effort to reduce the cost of Government. But if we are profligate, if we say, "This is a small item; it does not make much difference whether we pay $20,000 or $40,000, in a $40,000,000 budget," and multiply that many times, it makes a large difference when we come to determine whether the budget is to be in balance or not.

Accordingly, Mr. President, it seems to me that there is no basis in good judgment, fairness, or sound economy, to support this proviso. In the face of a vast postal deficit, accompanied by reductions in the requested appropriations, and by the prospect of having to increase postal rates, we are asked to require the Department unnecessarily to increase its costs on an essential supply item by $175,000.

To do so will disrupt the procurement program of the department. In addition, there is no assurance that a satisfactory product can be now supplied by those who are asking for a protected market, or that the efficiency of the service will not again be impaired and its employees subjected to the hazard of cut fingers.

Perhaps more important, Mr. President, is the unwise principle we are asked to incorporate in this appropriation bill. We are asked to abolish in this case the salutary requirement that postal supplies be purchased by competitive bidding, as are all other Government needs. That is a very important thing in the administration of Government, that articles be purchased on the basis of open competitive bidding. In this proviso we are asked to abandon that salutary practice.

We are asked to create an artificial market for one particular product irrespective of price, and by doing so to discriminate against American manufacturers of another product.

For these reasons, Mr. President, the junior Senator from Connecticut thinks the amendment recommended by the committee in the form of the proviso should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAYBANK. The question is on striking out the committee amendment in the Post Office Department item so far as twine and cotton surplus is concerned.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator intend to ask for a quorum at this time?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. My purpose when I rose was to ask for a quorum.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am wondering if the Senator from Massachusetts thinks it possible to make some agreement as to the debate to follow the quorum call in connection with the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] regarding the 5-percent reduction.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, who is present and can answer for himself.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to have a quorum call before the vote.

Mr. MAYBANK. I agree, of course, that there should be a quorum call before the vote, but I wondered if we could have a vote on the pending amendment, either by a division, or whatever method the Senator from Massachusetts might decide on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDRICKSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, inasmuch as there is a desire to have a yea and nay vote, we should have a quorum call ahead of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 33, beginning in line 7 and ending in line 11.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, as I understand, a vote "aye" is a vote to adopt the committee amendment, and a vote "no" is a vote to reject the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment. (Putting the question.)

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Brewster	Byrd
Anderson	Bridges	Cain
Baldwin	Butler	Chavez

Cordon	Kefauver	Pepper
Donnell	Kem	Reed
Douglas	Knowland	Robertson
Downey	Langer	Russell
Ellender	Long	Saltonstall
Ferguson	Lucas	Schoeppel
Flanders	McCarran	Smith, Maine
Frear	McCarthy	Sparkman
Green	McClellan	Stennis
Gurney	McFarland	Taft
Hayden	McGrath	Taylor
Hendrickson	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Hill	Magnuson	Tydings
Hoey	Martin	Vandenberg
Holland	Maybank	Watkins
Hunt	Millikin	Wherry
Ives	Morse	Wiley
Jenner	Mundt	Williams
Johnson, Tex.	O'Conor
Johnston, S. C.	O'Mahoney

By order of the Senate, the following announcement is made after each quorum call:

The members of the Committee on Foreign Relations have been granted permission to be absent from the sessions of the Senate while the Committee on Foreign Relations was conducting hearings on the North Atlantic Pact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and myself, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire for himself and the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 402. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury, with respect to appropriations made in title I of this act, and the Postmaster General, with respect to appropriations made in title II of this act, are authorized and directed, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to make such reductions in the amounts to be expended from the appropriations made in each such title as will in the aggregate equal at least 5 percent of the total amounts so appropriated therein. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General shall each certify the reduction in each appropriation account to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The amounts so certified shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

(b) Such reduction shall be made in a manner calculated to bring about the greatest economy in expenditure consistent with the efficiency of the service.

(c) No item of appropriation contained in either of such titles shall be reduced more than 20 percent.

(d) A statement of each reduction hereunder, including the amount thereof, shall be included in the annual budget for the fiscal year 1951.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire for himself and the Senator from Michigan is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I point out that we filed in due time notice of a motion to suspend the rule so that the amendment might be considered.

Mr. President, I do not see any object in taking a great deal of time to explain this amendment. This motion is similar to the motion made in connection with the Federal Security and Labor bills? It is a scientific approach to the reduction of expenditures. It is done to get away from the over-all or meat-ax approach.

The amendment would give to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General discretion in absorbing a 5-percent cut. There is no good administrator in the Federal Government today who cannot organize his department so that it can absorb a 5-percent cut without curtailing the efficiency of the department.

In my judgment, the issue is very simple. I hold in my hand a report from an evening newspaper—and I saw a similar report in the newspaper this morning—to the effect that the advisers to the President finally have come to the conclusion that we must reduce expenditures. I do not know whether they mean it or not. I do not know whether the President and the administrative leaders intend to pay heed to it. Apparently they are the men who give advice; and if they are giving advice on this subject, in which they are experts, certainly I think the advice should be heeded.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator from New Hampshire aware of the fact that the three economic advisers to the President, Dr. Nourse, Professor Keyserling, and Mr. Clark, have advised the President officially that expenses should be reduced and the budget cut?

Mr. BRIDGES. I appreciate that word from the distinguished Senator from Kansas. I had read the accounts in the newspapers, but I had not been aware of any official action to that effect.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. In regard to the Post Office Department, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire how a department which is running a $400,000,000 deficit could absorb a 5-percent cut. Would it not simply be added to the deficit?

Mr. BRIDGES. That is an excellent question. I think undoubtedly it would constitute a major problem in the Post Office Department. I should like to answer the question of the Senator from Vermont. I say to him that if we write into the law such a provision in regard to the appropriations for the Post Office Department, even though it has been operating at a deficit, it should certainly give the Postmaster General an indication of the intent of Congress, so that he would make some endeavor to reduce the expenditures of the Department.

As a rule I think our postal service has been well handled; but the Senator from Vermont, who has been chairman of the Committee To Investigate Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and who performed in that capacity in a very able manner, knows that in some of the great cities of the United States the Post Office Department's expenditures could be greatly reduced.

Mr. BALDWIN and Mr. MAYBANK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question, for the benefit of the Senators on this side of the aisle who have been having difficulty in hearing the discussion.

Mr. BRIDGES. Very well; I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to ask whether the Senator has stated that he filed the motion in due time, and was not filing it today, to be held over?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; it has been previously filed.

I yield now to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, in line with the question which was asked by the Senator from Vermont, let me inquire whether the Senator from New Hampshire knows that the Postmaster General has recommended to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service a means of wiping out the causes of the postal deficit, except insofar as the use of the franking privilege is concerned. In other words, I point out that although the question the Senator from Vermont has asked is a very cogent one, nevertheless the course it suggests is not consistent with the policy we are trying to follow in respect to the Post Office Department.

As the Senator from New Hampshire has said, the proposed action would be an indication to the Post Office Department to make reductions in expenditures all along the line; and such a proposition is very different from one to increase postal rates.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator, and I think he is absolutely correct.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that the Post Office Department probably could save a great deal of money by modernizing its equipment and its methods. The Hoover Commission's study indicated that there could be greater efficiency in the Department without increasing its expenditures. The question of whether the Postmaster General should be given authority to fix postal rates so as to bring the operations of the Post Office Department "into the black" was considered. Of course, the Senator from New Hampshire knows how difficult it is to increase any postal rates. It seems that practically every organization in the United States has communicated with us, asking us not to increase the postal rates on second-class or third-class matter.

So the Hoover Commission decided that as a matter of policy the Congress should decide whether it wished to subsidize the public through the Post Office Department, or whether it wished to attempt to place the Post Office Department on a self-sustaining basis. Of course, either step can be taken. The decision as to which course shall be taken is a matter of policy for the Congress to decide.

However, there is no question that the Post Office Department can effect some savings by modernizing its equipment and its methods.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. As a member of the Appropriations Committee's subcommittee on the Post Office-Treasury Departments appropriation bill, I realize the truth of what the Senator has stated, namely, that it will be very difficult to reduce the Post Office Department's appropriations to any great degree, because of the present existence of a deficit in connection with the postal service. However, if such motions are to be presented as to one appropriation bill, is it not fair to have them presented as to all other appropriation bills, so that the Congress will not be playing favorites, but will be asking every Government official to be more efficient?

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely correct. Certainly if we were to offer such an amendment to one appropriation bill, but were to fail to offer similar amendments to several other appropriation bills, a hue and cry would immediately be raised that we were playing favorites as between the Departments.

We recognize that there are certain items the appropriations for which cannot be reduced, for instance, the appropriations for paying the interest on the national debt, and appropriations for other expenditures specifically required by law. However, all other appropriations can be reduced; as to them, the field for reductions is wide open. Generally speaking, if a department head cannot cut 5 percent from his department's expenditures, and still operate his department officially, he himself is not a very efficient administrator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. It seems to me that in the case of some of the departments the only efficient cuts the heads of the departments could make would be in their deficiency appropriations. As the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, and as the able Senator from New Hampshire knows, at the present time the Post Office Department is running in the red, and in the future it will run even further in the red because of the requirements of certain laws, passed by the last Congress, of which I was a Member, providing for large increases in salaries and other expenses.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the issue is clear. One of the items the Senator from Maine discussed the other day has come before the committee. I refer to the subsidies paid by the Post Office Department to airlines for carrying the mails. That is one of the worst provisions, so far as the issue we are now considering is concerned.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Unfortunately, the law requires, as the testimony before the committee showed the other day, when Acting Postmaster General, Mr. Burke, was testifying in the absence of Mr. Donaldson—and his testimony was given in the presence of the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Oregon and other Senators—that the Post Office Department make such expenditures for the transportation of mail by the airlines. Under the provisions of laws which the Congress has enacted, the Post Office Department has no alternative. Of course in connection with that matter, some of the requirements which are imposed arise as a result of regulations adopted by the Interstate Commerce Commission pursuant to the laws passed by Congress, I believe.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think the Senator from South Carolina is referring to the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct. Under a law the Congress has passed, the Civil Aeronautics Board issues orders calling for certain payments to be made to the air lines in connection with the carrying of the mails, and the Postmaster General cannot do anything about that matter. In that connection, I may point out that hearings were held regarding the matter of payments made for air-mail subsidies to the operators of the Constellations, when they were grounded. In the supplemental appropriations bill we took action disapproving of all such payments. Some air-mail subsidies were involved.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from South Carolina know that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee is now conducting very extensive hearings in regard to that entire situation, under the leadership of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON]. It is perfectly evident that an accord must be reached, because when we have one tribunal determining the expenditures of money to be made by another agency of government, but doing so without responsibility or accountability, we have an utterly undesirable and indefensible situation.

Mail-subsidy payments extending over a period of 2 or 3 years in the past, and covering the grounding of the Constellations and the grounding of the DC-6's, were made; and in such circumstances it would be almost impossible for anyone to determine where the matter would end.

If the Congress takes a step of the character here proposed, I think that will serve a very salutary purpose in giving notice that we who appropriate the money expect some degree of accountability and responsibility to be displayed by these tribunals.

Today in the committee we have gone through this matter. Undoubtedly there are other expenditures which can be and must be reduced. In that respect, progress has been made by the departments; but, in my judgment, nowhere near the amount of progress which should be made has been made.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that I desire to associate myself completely with the thoughts by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine. However, our committee could not propose reductions in expenditures presently required by public laws.

As to the expenditures for air-mail service, I may say that I turned over to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] all the documents the committee had in respect to that matter, in the hope that he, with the assistance of the other members of the committee, would present to the Senate proposed legislation to stop the payment of such large amounts of money under the orders of the Civil Aeronautics Board. I know as well as the Senator does that it puts a premium on incompetency; it subsidizes a line that loses money, whereas a good line that does not lose money receives no benefit.

Mr. BREWSTER. What is honest and economic and efficient management in connection with the Civil Aeronautics Act is to be determined by the CAB. But I am very sure the Civil Aeronautics Board, like the Supreme Court, listens not only to the election returns, but also to the action of the Congress. I think it will serve a very salutary purpose if they realize that we are beginning to cut down a little here, and that we recognize the necessity of everybody sharpening his pencil.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. If that be the case, insofar as the air line subsidy and the law relative thereto is concerned, why not simply change the law so as to give the air lines a very liberal allowance per ton mile, instead of putting it in the form of a subsidy and encouraging somebody to lose money at Government expense?

Mr. BREWSTER. I have tried to do that, but some of the feeder lines to the particular area of the Senator from Louisiana, the southern area, would immediately be out of business, because the payments are $50 a mile, as against the 50 cents or 65 cents a ton-mile the traffic lines get. That is a very different problem.

Mr. LONG. I may say to the Senator I am acquainted with some of the air lines. Some of them the Government encourages unduly.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. I question the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire. He stated that he would apply the 5 percent reduction to all bills, and that any agency of Government that could not cut 5 percent was inefficient.

Mr. BRIDGES. I mean there are certain items in the bill, as the Senator knows, like interest on the debt and grants to States, which are established by law.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let us look at the bill. The appropriations contained in the pending bill are $63,198,246 less than the budget estimates. Of that amount, $11,783,200 represents the sum by which the appropriations for the Post Office Department are under the budget estimate. So far as that sum itself is concerned, I do not believe we are saving a red cent, because it will cause an additional postal deficit, which will have to be made up by way of a deficiency bill. So at least we should not fool ourselves that we are actually saving any money with respect to the Post Office Department.

As to the Treasury Department, the total amount by which the appropriation is below the budget estimate is $51,410,046. That represents a substantial cut. The item for which the Senate increased the House appropriation has to do with the employment of men to collect money for the United States from income and profits taxes. We allowed the full budget estimate for that, $222,000,000. It will permit the employment of 5,787 additional men to collect revenue, instead of the mere 1,500 allowed by the House. There are two ways of balancing the budget. One is to cut expenses; the other is to bring in more revenue; and I insist that a cut of the kind proposed applied in this case is poor economy.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say in answer to the Senator, as he knows, I have been very sympathetic toward the increase in the amount for the collection of taxes through the Internal Revenue Bureau, and he should understand that my amendment proposes a 5 percent cut in the aggregate over-all titles; so that the Secretary of the Treasury can use his discretion with respect to the item on which a cut is made. Therefore, he does not need to apply the reduction, let us say, to the collection of internal revenue, but he can apply it in one of the other divisions of the Department.

Mr. HAYDEN. We have cut the other divisions $51,410,000 below the budget estimate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. That has been the cut below the budget estimate, but the appropriation for the Treasury over that of last year has been increased $249,000,000, and for the Post Office, $210,000,000; so that together there is a total increase of almost $500,000,000 in this bill over what was appropriated last year. Does the Senator think we have to regard the Budget estimates as inviolate? How are we going to come out, if we do?

Mr. HAYDEN. I still insist that the Budget, as it was written last year, was a tight budget, which was proved by the fact that it could not be reduced. I still insist that the present budget, in view of the slight increase by the Congress, is a tight budget, and that it cannot be cut. On the one hand, salaries cannot be increased and, on the other hand, appropriations be reduced the next day.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I merely want to confirm what the Senator from Arizona has said; $225,000,000 of the appropriation is to pay for the increase in salaries in the Post Office Department which we voted last year. One great factor in the expenditures of the Treasury Department which seems to have been lost sight of is that, outside the additional income-tax collectors, there is the procurement program for minerals and strategic materials. I sent the Secretary of the Treasury a letter after the Senator from Michigan had proposed the 5 percent cut, and the committee voted on it. I think the vote was 13 to 4. This is what he said:

> A 5 percent reduction of the amount recommended from the Treasury Department would be $52,000,000.

He goes on to say:

> A 5-percent reduction of appropriations of $525,000,000—

As the Senator from Ohio has said—

> recommended for stock piling of strategic and critical materials, will approximate $26,000,000. Senators know of the urgent need for the balancing of the stock-piling program.

That was a commitment we made, and we must pay for it. As the Senator from Arizona knows, there is now in the second deficiency bill for strategic and critical materials a further appropriation of $40,000,000, and $270,000,000 for contract authorizations.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I merely wish to call to the Senator's attention the fact that it is estimated that 80 percent of the expenditures for the Post Office go to salaries and 15 percent for travel. That is 95 percent of the appropriation for the Post Office. If 5 percent is cut from the appropriation, it certainly is going to hurt, and I predict that the only thing that will happen is, the Department will come back next year and ask for a deficiency appropriation to cover the 5 percent. That is all that will happen.

Mr. BRIDGES. As I have said, generally speaking, I think the postal service does a good job, but, from what I know, I am certain that in some branches of the postal service, efficiency may be improved a great deal, and in some of the large cities, where there is terrific expense, very substantial amounts can be saved. A good many men can be dispensed with without impairing the efficiency of the service at all.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. I merely want to call attention to what the Hoover Commission said in regard to the Postal Department. It is indicated on the floor today that no sum of money can be taken from the bill. To prove that that is not a fact, the House allowed $3,072,817,903.93. The Senate has already increased that amount $40,250,600, so that if we would take the 5 percent from the bill as finally passed, there is no question that in efficiency, in the difference in prices of articles which have to be purchased, there could be a saving of at least 5 percent on the over-all cost of this function.

On page 33 of the report the Hoover Commission says:

> It can be said, with no reflection on postal officials—

I may say, Mr. President, that efficiency does not mean the discharge of employees; it does not mean the cutting of wages of the employees; it means management. That is what we are talking about in connection with the saving of 5 percent.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I do not have the floor.

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, is it not true that 95 percent of the expenditures of the Post Office Department are either for actual services of employees, which we might call labor, or else the money paid for carrying the mail?

Mr. FERGUSON. I do not have the figures.

Mr. LONG. The Postmaster General testified to that effect in the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Mr. BRIDGES. That has been testified to, but I should want to see definite figures to bear it out, because when there is such a tremendous cost for the maintenance of buildings and the other expenses involved, I should want to see the figures to verify the statement.

Mr. LONG. I quote those figures because that is my recollection of the figures which the Postmaster General gave this morning.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is the Senator aware of the fact that we make the Post Office Department carry the expense of custodial services for all the courthouses in the United States?

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator feel that we could not cut that expense 5 percent?

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the buildings are to be open, there must be janitors and charwomen. Why impose on the Post Office Department the expense of operating the courthouses?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to put into the RECORD the quotation which I started to read from the Hoover report, and then I should like to ask the Members of the Senate whether there cannot be a saving of 5 percent in the operations of the Post Office Department.

Here is what the Hoover report says:

> It can be said, with no reflection on postal officials that circumstances beyond their control have created a philosophy of management which is sluggish, irresolute, and wasteful, rather than imaginative, decisive, and cost conscious. Furthermore, because certain key positions in the Department are regularly filled from time to time with political appointees, there is a lack of continuity of management and little incentive for self-improvement. While it may be shown that over the years postal methods have been improved and costs reduced, it has been an uninspired, low-geared effort which progressive business management would regard as mediocre.
> In view of rising expenses and the current tax burden, it is to the public interest to correct these conditions at the earliest possible date. The Postal Establishment should clearly be put in business for itself, and on this basis management should be held strictly accountable by the Congress and the President for operating results.

Mr. President, that language indicates clearly that without any legislation, with merely doing the job that should be done, the Post Office Department could cut expenses by at least 5 percent, as could also the Treasury Department.

I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he does not agree with that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I agree with the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. On the question of management, is there not at this time a Postmaster-General who is a career man?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; I believe he is a career man.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is there not a career man as First Assistant Postmaster General, in charge of transporting mail?

Mr. BRIDGES. I think so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is there not a career man as Inspector General?

Mr. BRIDGES. That I do not know.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is a fact. They are the keymen in the operation of that vast establishment. That much has been taken care of in line with the Hoover suggestion. The report did not indicate at what point specific savings could be made. We know that formerly first- and second-class postmasters, and, at one time, third-class postmasters, were political appointees. Is it not true that all postmasters are now under the civil service?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; but the Senator knows that the civil service, with regard to postmasters, is a far cry from what we believe civil service should be.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am as anxious to save money as is my colleague, but I have reached the conclusion that if we cut the appropriation for the Post Office Department, the Department will come back with a request for a deficiency appropriation next year. If we deduct as much as 5 percent from the appropriation for the Treasury Department, big cuts would have to be made in the items for the purchase of strategic materials and the employment of field workers who we thought would produce 20 times the amount of their cost, through the moral influence to be exerted in checking a larger percentage of income-tax returns than are now being checked. The Senator will recall that it was on the recommendation of the Ways and Means Committee, when the Republican Party had a majority on that committee, that the number of field men was increased in the Bureau of Internal Revenue as a means of increasing receipts without raising taxes. We did not go so far as the Ways and Means Committee recommended in connection with the number of new collectors in the bill for field work.

Mr. AIKEN and Mr. MAYBANK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield first to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator think there is any guarantee, if a 5-percent reduction is ordered, that the Post Office Department will not inconvenience the public and then place the blame on Congress, as was done 2 years ago? I am inclined to think that the place to make the reduction is in the committee, and to make it at a place in which the committee finds the cut can be made. We had that unhappy experience not only with the Post Office Department, but we had a similar experience with the customs department when border control and port control were eliminated, so that smugglers could operate unhindered across the Canadian and Mexican borders.

I agree with the purpose of the Senator. I believe that a 5 percent reduction should be made, but I think the committee must tell where it must be made, or we shall run into the same difficulties which we encountered previously. It is a wicked thing for a department to inconvenience the people as much as possible in order to put the blame on Congress, but it has been done and may be done again.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator from Vermont is absolutely correct. He cites evidence of what occurred when Congress attempted to work out some economies. The Department handled the situation in such a manner as to embarrass Congress and get it to retrace its steps. They were caught in the act in two very classic examples. I say, in all earnestness, that the fear the Senator expresses is a legitimate one. Of course departments can do just that. There is that danger; there is that weakness in the amendment. While I think it is strong in every other feature, the Senator has put his finger on the weakness of the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to remind the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire of one thing. When we voted for the tax reduction last year the Treasury Department compiled some figures for the committee, after the subcommittee had held its hearings. The record of January, February, and March 1949, shows that there are nearly 4,000,000 more taxpayers, despite the tax reduction. I am going to put the information into the RECORD to justify the necessity for the additional tax collectors, who, I feel certain, the Senator from New Hampshire believes should be provided as he stated in his argument. This statement shows that in 1948 there were 40,891,370 tax returns, as against 44,565,422 in the same period in 1949.

I also ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a statement regarding the other argumentative provisions of the 5 percent cut, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Michigan, showing how it would affect the Treasury Department, which, after all, has to service $5,000,000,000 in interest, in addition to all the bonds.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Number of tax returns filed in the first 3 months of calendar year 1948 and for the same period of 1949

Type of returns	Calendar year 1948—January, February, and March	Calendar year 1949—January, February, and March
Individual returns	35,422,328	38,920,619
Corporations	285,303	294,345
Partnerships	348,123	325,760
Estate	6,671	6,991
Gift	15,148	16,188
Employment	3,925,226	5,250,875
Miscellaneous	1,509,571	1,700,695
Total	40,891,370	[1] 44,565,422

[1] About 10 percent increase.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT 5 PERCENT REDUCTION

A 5 percent reduction of the amount recommended for the Treasury Department would be $52,259,220. Without doubt this reduction would have far-reaching implications of a serious nature on the operations of the Department in the fiscal year 1950.

For example, a 5 percent reduction of the appropriation of $525,000,000 recommended for stock piling of strategic and critical materials would approximate $26,000,000. The Senators know of the urgent need for the balancing of our stock-piling program.

A 5 percent reduction in the appropriation of $52,000,000 for administering the public debt would amount to $2,600,000. If this reduction were to stand, it would vitally affect the servicing of the bond program.

A 5 percent reduction in the appropriation of $35,300,000 for the Bureau of Customs would amount to $1,765,000 and the enforcement of such reduction would reduce the present force by at least 600 employees. In my judgment, such reduction of personnel would vitally affect the collection of customs duties and would increase the already existing huge backlog in the examination of imported merchandise and liquidation of entries at certain of the larger ports, specifically New York and Los Angeles.

Regarding a 5 percent reduction for the Bureau of Internal Revenue, such amount would about eliminate the action taken by the Senate committee in providing about 7,000 additional positions vitally needed to collect the hundreds of millions of dollars additional revenue untapped. The Bureau would be forced to continue with 53,993 positions as compared to 59,536 requested for fiscal year 1950, and this figure is 3,959 less positions than the Bureau had during the 1947 fiscal year when the number of tax returns was less than that estimated for 1950. In connection with tax returns, I would like to call the Members' attention to the fact that for the 3-months period in 1948, consisting of January, February, and March, there were 40,891,370 tax returns filed as against 44,565,422 filed in the same period in 1949, or about a 10-percent increase in 1949 over 1948.

A 5-percent reduction in the Coast Guard appropriations would reduce the military personnel by 100 commissioned officers, 11 warrant officers, and 1,110 enlisted men. In effect, this means that over 10 ocean weather station vessels cannot be operated in 1950. Application of the 5-percent cut in the civilian employee appropriation would abolish about 60 positions in addition to some 30 positions to be abolished through disapproval of $100,000 additional funds requested. It would also nullify to a large extent the program to improve cost analysis, inventory control, and engineering administration of the Bureau.

In the appropriation for acquisition, construction, and improvements of the Coast Guard a 5-percent reduction would amount to about $500,000, and, considering such amount on top of a $2,000,000 cut already made by the House, it would require deferment of high-priority projects scheduled for 1950.

Considering the current heavy workloads of the Secret Service Division and the Narcotics Division, it is highly impractical to apply a 5-percent reduction to such divisions. Testimony presented to the Appropriations Committee indicated that the funds recommended would be sufficient to meet the minimum needs of the divisions. Also, that as to the Narcotics Division, $100,000 additional funds over the House allowance were requested of the Senate committee in connection with the enforcement of marijuana laws and the committee agreed to approval of $50,000 of this amount.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The Senate committee recommended an appropriation of $2,067,884,100 for operating expenses of the Post Office Department in fiscal year 1950. A 5-percent reduction of this amount would be $103,394,205. This reduction, together with the original Budget Bureau reduction and the reductions made by Congress, would total $160,260,405. Deducting the 5 percent from the total recommended by the Senate committee, would make available for obligations in 1950 the sum of $1,964,489,895, as compared to present estimated 1949 postal obligations of $2,125,785,225.

If the volume of postal business increases (volume of mail now about 5-percent increase in first 9 months of fiscal year 1949 over same period in 1948) or even remains at the present level, it is doubted that the services can be operated within the aggregate amount approved and recommended to the Senate by the Appropriations Committee. Members must remember that the Post Office Department cannot control certain expenditures, such as expenses for carrying foreign and domestic air mail. Also, that 95 percent of the expenses of the postal service are for salaries of employees and for transportation. The Department estimates a postal deficit in 1950 of approximately $403,000,000. This deficit is mainly in the costs for handling second-, third-, and fourth-class mails. If the Department's recommended postal increase rate and service bill, H. R. 2945, is enacted, an additional revenue of approximately $250,000,000 per annum would be received which, in turn, would reduce the estimated deficit of about $403,000,000 to $153,000,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I think the comments on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Michigan might perhaps fall into two classes. First, those dealing with the appropriations for the particular departments which they are questioning, and second, comments upon the fiscal problem of the Government as a whole.

I wish to commend the Committee on Appropriations for their foresightedness in appropriating more money for additional field agents in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, because I believe that this will yield a very greatly increased amount of taxes, and will more than pay for itself.

At first I was greatly pleased at what I thought was a cut of $51,000,000 in the appropriation for the Treasury as compared with the budget estimate, but upon closer analysis, on pages 14 and 15 of the report it became apparent that $39,000,000 of this so-called $51,000,000 cut is in a decrease of appropriations for strategic and critical materials, namely, from $564,000,000 to $525,000,000, and in a footnote it is stated that there is in addition a $250,000,000 contract authorization. So we may find that this $39,000,000 of apparent savings is not really savings, but will show up in contract authorizations, which will later be spent without requiring any further authorization by the Congress.

Should that be true—and I assume that the board in charge of the stock pile will ultimately make the purchases authorized—there would be savings of only $12,000,000.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is in the second deficiency bill, which is now before the committee. I should be glad to have the Senator come and testify. The Department not only wants $39,000,000, but $40,000,000, for strategic materials, which are so scarce. The committee has already recommended $270,000,000 instead of $250,000,000, and it is in the second deficiency bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I was merely trying to point out that the saving of $39,000,000 seems to be more apparent than real, and that in reality probably the acutal saving may be nearer the $12,000,000 figure than the $51,000,000 figure.

Mr. MAYBANK. The cut of 5 percent would be just like what the Senator is explaining. The only way to save money in Washington is to cut the deficiency bills, and not the regular bills.

Mr. DOUGLAS. At the moment, however, what we are dealing with are the regular appropriation bills, and I think it is on those bills we must act.

Mr. President, to me it seems highly important, in dealing with specific appropriation bills, that we should also keep in mind the general budget situation for the fiscal year of 1949–50, for if we do not do this, we are likely to be so influenced by the claims of particular agencies that all unwittingly we will be appropriating much larger sums than we will collect in taxes, and hence, in the absence of a general legislative budget, which we do not yet have, and this will cause the Government to operate at a very large deficit. If we are to avoid this, we must check specific needs against the general prospects of receipts and expenditures, and see the problem steadily, and see it whole. I shall try to help provide this by a brief, and, I am aware, an incomplete analysis.

THE PROBABLE AMOUNT OF THE DEFICIT

Under date of January 3 of this year, the President submitted a budget calling for forty-one and nine-tenths billions of expenditures for the fiscal year July 1, 1949, to July 1, 1950. It was also stated that "under existing law and with continuing high levels of economic activity, revenues for the fiscal year would be $41,000,000,000. This would result in an estimated deficit of $873,000,000."

The rearmament of western Europe has been proposed since then. This will call for a cash appropriation for 1949 to 1950 of approximately an additional $750,000,000, plus a transfer of approximately $400,000,000 of war matériel. This would raise the estimated deficit to above one and six-tenths billions.

In addition, the fall in farm prices will increase the amounts needed for price supports or farm-income maintenance. The increase in unemployment will cause more GI's to return to school and college—I believe the number has increased by some 67,000—with a consequent rise in benefit payments. All of these factors taken together would seem to raise the probable deficit for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1950, to at least $2,000,000,000, and probably to an even greater figure. All this, moreover, would assume that revenues will reach the total of forty-one billions estimated in the budget. This is altogether too optimistic.

The budget was based, as I have pointed out, on the assumption that the high levels of economic activity prevailing in November and December 1948, would continue. As a matter of fact, the Treasury seems to have overestimated receipts for the current year of 1948 to 1949. This estimate was $39,600,000,000. But up until May 1, total receipts had only been $31,584,000,000. We shall have to take in a little over $8,000,000,000 in the last 2 months to reach the estimated total. Last year, in a period of high prosperity, the total net receipts were only $7,200,000,000 during these 2 months. Even if we collect a similar sum in May and June of this year, we will still be $800,000,000 below the estimate. The deficit for the current year is, therefore, almost certainly bound to be greater than the estimate of $800,000,000 contained in the budget of January 3.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is my recollection that the estimate for the current year was $600,000,000, and the figure of eight hundred and some million was a deficit estimated from the next fiscal year.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The estimated budget deficit for next year is $873,000,000.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And for this year, $600,000,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator may be right, that it was an estimate of $600,000,000 when the new budget was drawn up last year. May I have the privilege of checking the figures?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. This is merely my own estimate. What I am really trying to say is that receipts for the current period are falling below what the Treasury thought they would be, and that the deficit for the current year will be greater than was contemplated in the current budget issued on the 3d of January.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator is correct. We asked the Budget Bureau a month ago to give us the figures. We got the report yesterday, and owing to the fact that final action has not been taken on the appropriation bill, the Bureau of the Budget was unwilling to give a firm estimate of what the deficit for this fiscal year or the anticipated budget for the next fiscal year would be. They said, however, that the present indications were that the deficit for this year would be in excess of the $600,000,000 that had been previously estimated, that the receipts were falling off, that expenditures were increasing, and that the deficit for the next fiscal year would undoubtedly be larger than the $872,000,000 which had previously been figured.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the revenue prospects for next year are still less encouraging. For since November, wholesale prices have fallen by about 5 percent, or from an index of 164.0 in November, to 156.1 for the week ending April 26; employment in the nonagricultural lines has decreased by about 2,000,000, or by nearly 4½ percent, and production has diminished by about 7½ percent, or from an index of 195 in November, to an estimated 180 in April. Carloadings for the week ending April 30 were 12 percent below those of a year ago. While no one can tell precisely what conditions will be for the coming fiscal year, judging from the lower level of prices, employment, production, and of national income now, as compared to that which prevailed when the budget was drawn up, it seems probable that the taxes collected at present rates during the coming year will be less than was estimated. To the degree that this is true, the deficit will be increased above the figure of $2,000,000,000 which I have previously given as a rock-bottom minimum. Unless something is done, it may well rise above $3,000,000,000 and possibly go as high as $4,000,000,000.

WHAT SHOULD WE DO ABOUT IT?

We cannot ignore this situation. While I am willing to admit the necessity for deficit financing during a war or a severe economic depression, it would, in my judgment, be extremely unsound for us to drift into such a practice this spring. In normal times or when we are within 5 to 10 percent of normal the budget should at least be balanced. Moreover, our national debt of $252,000,000,000 is so high that we do not have much of a margin of safety. For the coming year, I submit, therefore, that our goal should be to balance our budget and bring receipts and expenditures to an approximate equality.

How can this be done? There are only two ways: namely, to increase taxes or to decrease expenditures. If we were in a boom period of high production and of advancing prices, I would favor the program of increasing taxes, retiring a portion of the debt and dampening down the inflationary spiral. That was the condition which existed when the President's budget was drafted and the methods proposed were, therefore, wise for that period. The President's budget, as submitted on January 3, was based, in my opinion, on a correct appraisal of conditions which were then current. But conditions have changed for the worse since then, and I submit that it is very foolish for us to act on the basis of conditions of 5 or 6 months ago. Under present conditions, with business declining, it would seem to me to be extremely unwise to increase taxes further, and that, instead, we should make every effort to bring expenditures down to a proper level.

CUTTING OUT THE WASTE THE BEST WAY TO BALANCE THE BUDGET

I believe this can be done without hurting the vital functions of defense and welfare which our Government performs. But it can only be done by squeezing out the waste in Government costs while preserving the essential services which Government provides.

I want to speak guardedly and fairly about this waste. Many exaggerated charges about its extent have been made. I shall not do so. But I think it is the sober truth that such waste has always existed in all administrations and that despite the real and effective efforts of the present administration to reduce it, such waste still exists.

I believe that our public employees have often been unduly abused. They have been charged with being loafers and taxeaters. I think, on the contrary, that the quality of most of our Federal employees is high and that most of them are hard-working. But I should like to make two points:

First. There is a general tendency to inflate the personnel in most Government agencies. There are at least two reasons why this happens. In the first place, there is a natural tendency for the heads of bureaus and departments unduly to increase their staffs, since they do not have to meet the pay-roll costs of the employees whom they add. This is a force for economy in private enterprise which is lacking in public employment.

In private business staffs are also inflated, but there is also the restraining influence that unnecessary persons added to the pay roll must be paid out of the receipts of the company, and there is, therefore, a conservative and restricting influence in private business which we do not have in public business.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LONG. Is it not true that there is really nothing in the law at all to encourage anyone to reduce the expenses of his agency, or division, but that on the contrary the whole tendency is to give the head of an agency or bureau more recognition if he has more employees on his pay roll, which encourages him to build up his agency or section?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Louisiana has correctly anticipated my next paragraph.

Those of us who have served in the armed forces know that this is true there. I have never known a division, a corps or an Army headquarters which did not exceed even the liberal table of organizational strength which had been set for it. The same thing is certainly true of the civil functions of government as well. Those in charge of a given activity, even if they have the best will in the world, are prone to exaggerate the importance of what they are doing and to want as much personnel as possible to carry out these functions.

Secondly, and I now turn to the point the Senator from Louisiana has anticipated—while many will deny this, and while I cannot find any explicit rules to confirm it, it is generally admitted that in many bureaus, unit, division, and section heads are rated and paid according to the number of people whom they have under them. This gives a direct economic incentive for these supervisors and their superiors to build up personnel empires in order to improve their own position. There are thus powerful forces which work toward unduly expanding the public pay roll, which are multiplicative in their nature. In addition, there is a good deal of duplication between bureaus and departments, as the Hoover Commission has abundantly shown, and frequently an unduly high standard of performance.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Would it not appear that in the long run it would operate for the greater efficiency of Government if we would work out some provision in the classification law to guarantee recognition for a man who reduces personnel and costs in his section or division?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think that is one of the most needed reforms in the personnel administration of the Government, and I am glad to see that the Senator from Louisiana has it very much on his mind.

All these things operate to increase costs. These wastes are partially checked by the Bureau of the Budget, which in general does excellent work. But this Bureau cannot be expected to meet the problem fully. We must be ready to act ourselves. In the face of the almost certain deficit of two billions and a probable deficit of much more, I submit that our first job is to fry the extra fat out of our departments and agencies before we turn to more taxes.

Now, of the some $43,000,000,000 of contemplated Government expenditures, there are certain fixed charges which cannot be reduced. Such are $5,500,000,000 of interest on the public debt, perhaps $5,000,000,000 more in payments to and care for veterans, and about $2,500,000,000 in old-age assistance, old-age annuities, unemployment compensation benefits, children's allowances, etc. This leaves roughly about $30,000,000,000 in reducible or controllable expenditures for material and personnel. A 6-percent cut in these amounts would save a total of $1,800,000,000. It has been estimated, I believe, by the able junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], that a tightening of the enforcement of our present revenue laws would yield at least half a billion more. If this is so, the 6-percent economy proposed, together with checking tax evasions, would save a total of $2,300,000,000 and hence probably balance the budget unless we have a real drop in revenues.

Now, would this average cut of 6 percent in expenses work any real hardship? Here I should like to point out again that wholesale prices had fallen by the end of April to 5 percent below their level for November and 4 percent below their December level. A cut of this amount in monetary appropriations would, therefore, buy the same quantity of physical goods as was contemplated in the budget and would not entail any decrease in material. Thus, assuming that the fall in the price of strategic materials has been 5 percent, a reduction of 5 percent in the amount of money appropriated would not result in any decrease in the amount of strategic materials bought for stock piling.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. If the Senator is willing to risk his position on the floor by yielding to me, I should like to point out one common method of extravagance on the part of the Post Office Department. A clerk will stand in front of a window and pass out mail or write out money orders all day long. There is a space of about 3 square feet under the clerk's window where the floor becomes worn after, let us say, 3 years. Three square feet of new floor is required to replace the worn floor. I have never known of a case in which 3 square feet of new floor was put in to replace the worn floor. But I have known of cases where the entire floor, perhaps 50 feet square, has been ripped up, floor space which has not been worn at all except at the point where the clerk stands under the window. Yet that entire space has been renewed at a cost of several hundred dollars, whereas it would cost only a few dollars to put in a few new boards at the point where the clerk stands. That is an actual instance of where the Post Office Department wastes money. There are other cases in which it wastes money. That illustrates how the Department could save money. What I tried to point out to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] was that if we give the Department orders to cut 5 percent off expenditures they are just as likely as not to make the cut where it will hurt the public most, and bring about the most recrimination against Congress. That is why I think the committee itself has got to spell out the economies which are to be made.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Vermont. I should also like to say that it is almost impossible for Members of the Senate to deal with the tens of thousands of items which are necessarily involved in a project such as this. About all we can do is to deal with total figures, trusting that either the committee or the heads of departments or agencies will make the cuts where they are most needed, and at the same time try to preserve the vital services of the Government.

Mr. AIKEN. All the committee can do, after it has become aware of the practice of putting in an entire new floor when only 3 square feet are needed, is to cut the appropriation for that particular work. I do not know under what title it comes in the bill. There is too much of that sort of thing going on.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think I have said enough to indicate that a cut of 5 percent would not mean any reduction in the quantity of material which the Government purchases, because the fall in wholesale prices has been equal to that amount.

I now ask whether the Senate and the country really believe that a reduction of 5 or 6 percent in the total number of Government employees would injure the services which the Government performs for its people. Is there not at least this amount of fat and excess in the Government as a whole? Can anyone really deny this?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I wish the Senator would name some departments in which a reduction of 5 or 6 percent could be made. We have been hearing this argument for 2 years. Would the Senator make such a cut in the Veterans' Administration? Answer yes or no.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is the question which is always turned on every budget-cutter. But I should be greatly surprised if the number of employees in the Veterans' Administration could not be reduced by 5 percent without injuring the essential services provided to veterans.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I noticed in the press last week that the Veterans' Administration is planning a reduction of 8,000 employees.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. It shows that it can be done.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Has the Senator seen the report of the American Legion and the other veterans' organizations, showing that the reduction is being taken from the poor GI's lying in hospitals? Some of the nurses are being taken away.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not want to take anything away from the ill veterans in hospitals, but I think frequently the welfare of the ill veterans is confused with the maintenance of excessive personnel, and that many crimes are committed in the name of maintaining services. That argument is used—not by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, of course, but by others—as an excuse for the maintenance of excessive personnel. Excessive personnel is hidden behind the skirts of service to the suffering.

Mr. LANGER. I do not believe that any other Senator has gone into the matter more fully than has the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. The Senator from Virginia started 4 years ago. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] was a member of the committee at that time. We finally passed the Byrd-Langer amendment, whereby the Bureau of the Budget had to cut a certain definite number of employees from every single department. In the beginning I felt somewhat as does my distinguished friend from Illinois. However, I went further. I made a motion to make a meat-axe cut of 30 percent. By the time the distinguished Senator from Virginia got through he convinced me, first of all, that it had to be done in an orderly manner; second, that it had to be done in a scientific manner; and third, that we ought to consider the circumstances in each case. In a place like Los Angeles, where there is an increase in population of roughly 125,000 people a month, more employees must be put on in the postal service, because the city is growing, and there is more postal business. When people move from the country to the city the rural mail carriers must be kept going, even though there are only 3 or 4 or 5 on the line, instead of 30 or 40. We cannot take off the rural mail carriers.

In my opinion, the Senator from Virginia has done a job for which the entire country owes him a debt of thanks. His work has been partly undone by the Congress. When we finally passed the Byrd-Langer amendment, which took off a certain definite amount every month—and that law has been in force, and the Bureau of the Budget has enforced it—what did we find Congress doing? We found, for example, that in connection with the Marshall plan there was no limit to the number of people who could be employed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, does the Senator wish to ask me a question, or make a speech?

Mr. LANGER. I am coming to the question.

In the matter of veterans, Congress specifically exempted employees of the Veterans' Administration from the effects of the Byrd-Langer amendment.

Apparently, the distinguished Senator from Illinois has made quite a study of this subject. I should like to ask him to name any department in which he would reduce the personnel by 6 percent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It seems to me that virtually every department could be reduced by at least 6 percent. The Senator may remember a minority decision of the United States Supreme Court in the minimum-wage case. I think the opinion was written by Mr. Justice Holmes. He said that "what we know as men we cannot pretend to be ignorant of as judges." What we know as men about the excess staffing of Government departments we cannot pretend to be ignorant of as Senators.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. LANGER. Last year the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, now headed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], employed experts who went from department to department looking for some of the loafers. We had heard about men who put their feet on the desks and read newspapers, and about women who were knitting. I ask the Senator if he does not have confidence in the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, which sent out experts, without anyone knowing that they were out, to try to find some of the loafers? I am sure the Senator from South Carolina will join me in the statement that we found that, aside from one department, none of the loafing about which we had heard so much existed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have been very careful not to make sensational charges.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall be glad to yield in a moment. All I say is that it seems incredible that there is not an excess of at least 5 or 6 percent in personnel in Government departments.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I do not intend to make a speech. I assure the Senator that I wish to ask a question.

Does not the Senator believe that it is desirable to distinguish between the different kinds of expenditures which the Government makes? Some of them bring back returns in one way or another. Some of them are not expenses, but in fact investments. For example, take the case of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. For every dollar we spend on employees we get a return of between $30 and $50, and in some cases $100. How can we denounce extravagance in such a department?

Take the Customs Service as another example. We have reduced the number of customs inspectors, and as a result have reduced the income of the Government. That is not economy. Does not the distinguished Senator from Illinois believe that we should distinguish between the various types of activity in which the Government is engaged, and not try to reduce them all?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I quite agree with the Senator from Rhode Island. He was not in the Chamber when I began my address. I congratulated the committee on having recommended the appropriation of funds which would add 7,000 additional agents to the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I said that I thought this was an investment which would more than pay for itself. In fact, it would pay for itself many times over. But when we deal with departments as a whole, departments which presumably have been brought into line with each other by the Bureau of the Budget, it seems to me that if we ask the head of the department, who presumably has the interests of the country at heart, to make a cut of 5 percent, distributed in those places which he knows best, he can do it infinitely better than we can.

Mr. GREEN. That may be true; but in giving him that direction should we not distinguish between the different kinds of activities? If we prescribe a reduction of 5 percent, and not more than 20 percent in any division of the department, we make it necessary to make a reduction in all the divisions.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Let me reply to the Senator from Rhode Island before I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. GREEN. I am seeking information.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Of course, I did not draft the amendment proposed by Senators on the other side of the aisle. I do not know that I am particularly defending that amendment. However, as I read it, it does not require a cut of 5 percent in each bureau. It requires a total cut of 5 percent for the Department, and then merely provides that the cut in any activity shall not be more than 20 percent.

Mr. GREEN. That is very true. If we apply the latter condition, it may make impossible the former. In other words, unless a cut of more than 20 percent were made in the appropriations for some governmental agencies, some reductions in appropriations would have to be made for all Government agencies.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is the Senator from Rhode Island therefore contending that the proposed reduction in appropriations should be so increased so that it would be possible for us to cut the appropriations for certain governmental agencies more than 20 percent? If that is the position of the Senator from Rhode Island, I should be glad to have him propose an amendment to have cuts of perhaps up to 25 percent made in some appropriations.

Mr. GREEN. I am asking whether the Senator from Illinois agrees that it is the duty of Congress to distinguish between the appropriations for governmental agencies which bring in revenue and the appropriations for agencies of the Government which simply make expenditures.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Personally, Mr. President, when we are dealing with appropriation bills I find myself so overwhelmed by the magnitude of the appropriation figures, and so overwhelmed by the functions of the agencies concerned, that I am unable to pass intelligent judgment—I confess it—as to individual items of appropriations. But I am able to add, and I know that the Federal Government is going to be in the hole at least $2,000,000,000 for the year 1949–50, and possibly three or four billion dollars, and in view of that situation, I think we must make some reductions somewhere in the appropriations. That is all I am saying.

Mr. MAYBANK and Mr. LANGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I find it difficult to make a choice as between yielding to my distinguished friend the Senator from South Carolina and my distinguished friend the Senator from North Dakota, both of whom are most persuasive in their requests that I yield to them.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to have the Senator yield to permit me to make a comment on the statement he has just made.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, let me say that I agree with the Senator from Illinois that we must make reductions somewhere in the appropriations. But so far as a 5-percent reduction in the appropriations under this bill is concerned, I wish the distinguished Senator from Illinois to know that when the committee concluded its action on this bill, I communicated with the Post Office Department and with the Treasury Department as to the proposed cuts, and in view of my information in this connection, I say to the Senator from Illinois that, if I correctly judge his views on the basis of the statements he has made, the cuts would be totally unsatisfactory to him.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, let me inquire whether the Senator from Illinois would favor decreasing the number of deliveries of rural mail, so that it would be delivered bi-weekly, instead of daily.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, now the Senator from North Dakota is baiting a very artful trap for this new and unsophisticated Senator. [Laughter.]

Certainly I should like to have daily deliveries continued for the rural mail routes. However, of course we must bear in mind that those routes were laid out back in the horse-and-buggy days; so it would seem that today they should be consolidated or extended, now that delivery is made by automobile. I make that statement even though such a suggestion may bring down on my head the ire of the rural mail carriers. Nevertheless, I say that I think the rural routes in many cases could well be consolidated or extended.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall be glad to have the Senator from North Dakota scatter his scented bait before the trap in his endeavor to have me direct my steps toward it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I admire the Senator from Illinois too much to attempt to do that to him. I ask him whether he believes the average rural carrier can take care of more than 300 mail boxes a day.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I shall not go into the question of the exact amount of work a rural mail carrier should be expected to do. I am simply observing that the rural routes were originally laid out at a time when delivery was made by horse and buggy, at an average rate of speed of perhaps 4 miles an hour; but that today the deliveries are made by automobile, thus resulting in increased speed in covering the routes and making the deliveries. Therefore, in my judgment many of the rural routes could be consolidated, with a resultant great saving of money.

Mr. LANGER. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, it is always a delight to yield to the Senator from North Dakota for a question, and, of course, I am always glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina. However, now that I am beseiged by both Senators with requests to yield, it is difficult for me to decide to which one I should yield first. Perhaps I should yield first to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the fact that in the Post Office Department it has been the custom, in case of the death or resignation of a rural postal carrier, to make an investigation to ascertain whether the routes can be doubled up or consolidated. That has been done for many years.

I ask whether the Senator from Illinois knows—and in this respect I quote the testimony of Postmaster General Donaldson himself—that today the average length of a rural route is 50 miles, and some of them run as high as 90 miles in length.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Of course, that is quite possible.

May I ask the Senator from South Carolina a question in response to the question he has asked me: How many rural routes have been consolidated by the Post Office Department in the last 5 years?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not have that information at my fingertips.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it true that only a few hundred have been consolidated in the last 5 years?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. In my own State, many of them have been consolidated.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks the limit of consolidation has been reached.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I answer that question by saying that I do not believe the limit of consolidation has been reached, and I do not believe the Post Office Department would say otherwise. Certainly it is making such consolidations as rapidly as it possibly can.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, of course I did not commence the discussion of the rural routes. I ventured into it only when the Senator from North Dakota, in his charming fashion, led me into it. [Laughter.]

But the discussion which has occurred thus far, together with the statement of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], seems to indicate that a saving of more than 5 percent could be made in the appropriations for rural mail deliveries.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I did not make such a statement.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I know the Senator did not; but he said he though the limit of consolidations had not been reached.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. But I call attention to the fact that although there are fewer carriers, they are paid on a mileage basis, according to a law passed by Congress. So very little is saved as a result of making some consolidations.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I merely wish to observe in this connection that although I do not know the experience of other Senators, yet there has not been one case in my own State, so far as I know, of a carrier having resigned or retired that the people of the community and the prospective rural free delivery carriers have not besought my aid in seeing to it that no consolidation was made.

I do not know whether that has been the experience of other Senators.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think it is also rather striking to consider the very large number of persons who wish to become rural mail carriers, and how frequently, at times, postmasters wish to give up their jobs to become rural mail carriers.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to yield to my distinguished friend and colleague from the State of Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to have my distinguished colleague yield to me, to permit me to ask him how long it will take him to conclude the address he is delivering.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall finish it as rapidly as I can, of course. I hope to conclude in 12 minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator yield to me, to permit me to ask a question of the distinguished minority leader?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the distinguished minority leader how long he thinks it will take Senators on his side of the aisle to conclude their remarks on this bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will permit me to respond, let me say that I think there will be only one short speech from this side of the aisle, but I think probably more than one motion will be made in connection with the bill and amendments to it.

In view of the fact that other motions probably will be made, and no doubt they will require some debate, I would suggest that I do not think the bill can be disposed of within a short space of time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in view of that suggestion by the able minority leader, I think perhaps as soon as the junior Senator from Illinois concludes his remarks, I shall ask the Senate to take a recess until tomorrow.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then, Mr. President, in the interest of brevity, I shall omit certain portions of the speech I had intended to make.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wish my distinguished colleague to understand thoroughly that I am in no way attempting to curtail or limit the admirable address he is making. Certainly he should continue with it just as long as he chooses.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understand that entirely. I may say that I am distressed at the amount of time I have taken thus far. So I shall try to condense certain portions of the speech I had intended to make, and perhaps shall request to have other portions placed in the RECORD, without actually being delivered by me.

Mr. President, I think a personnel reduction of from 5 percent to 6 percent can be made without inflicting any real hardship on governmental employees, if we proceed by the simple process of not filling all the vacancies which occur.

As I understand, the average death rate in the Federal service is between 2 and 3 percent and the average separation or shrinkage rate last year was around 25 percent. Assuming that the separations are distributed evenly over the year, that would mean an average shrinkage rate of 12 percent, if none of the separations were replaced by new hirings. By filling half of the vacancies, we would obtain an average reduction in force of 6 percent, or the approximate proportion by which we wish to have reductions made. Furthermore, in any organization there is a small percentage of drones whom the heads of the organization would like to drop. Unfortunately, today the procedures for firing such persons are, because of civil service rules, frequently so consuming of time and energy that section and division heads and bureau chiefs shrink from getting rid of them. I do not know how large such a group may be; but if one's experience with the military forces and with private organizations is any guide, it would be surprising if they are less than 2 percent. Getting rid of such drones would actually raise the output because it would create better morale and and a greater will to work in the remainder of the personnel, although there are certain bureaus in departments where we could have variations in the percentage of the cut.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. LONG. I am sure the Senator realizes that in the Post Office Department, even if there is a deficit of approximately $550,000,000 a year, the salaries of the Post Office employees have been raised since the war even more than that amount, and that that increase in salary was necessitated by the increased cost of everything since the war. On the other hand, the Post Office rates have had a very, very slight increase. I wonder whether the Senator would agree with me that the only way we are really ever going to wipe out the enormous Post Office deficit, or substantially reduce it in the long run, is to adjust rates somewhat in line with the service that is being rendered, just as everything else has had to be adjusted after the war.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I quite agree with that. If we were now in a period of severe depression, and if the country were gravely threatened by unemployment, I should be perfectly willing to have deficit financing and to expand public works in order to furnish employment. But we are not now in such a period. There are danger signals up, but we cannot be certain that a depression will occur.

Mr. President, I think I have said enough, therefore, to indicate that these economies can be made without injuring the real services which the Government performs.

I submit that we must tackle this problem. But, except in rare instances, we cannot do so item by item. We just do not know enough to be able to pass judgment on the tens of thousands of items which appear in the 1,400-page budget which was submitted to us. It was to help us on precisely this point that the Congressional Reorganization Act called for the submission of a consolidated legislative budget. But for one reason or another we do not now have this before us and we must work on each of the appropriation bills as they are submitted to us. The sensible way is to propose given percentage cuts for departments and agencies as a whole and then let the administrators who presumably know their problems best decide how these cuts shall be distributed.

I favor the general outline of this plan. Although in the case of certain bureaus and departments where I think I have some special knowledge, I shall reserve the right to propose and suggest variations of these percentage cuts. For example, I think it will pay us many times over to have more agents in the Internal Revenue Bureau rather than less, and I want to congratulate the Committee on Expenditures for providing for this. But the general principle is, I think, clear.

IS WASTE THE PROPER WAY TO MAINTAIN EMPLOYMENT?

The only effective argument which I have heard against a reduction in Government costs is the contention that we are headed for a pronounced business depression during the coming year and hence, that the Government should not contract its payrolls and reduce the numbers employed since this would merely make business conditions worse.

I would reply in two ways to this. We do not know whether we are headed for a depression and, secondly, even if we are, we should not fight it by perpetuating waste, but rather by stimulating the production of much needed goods and services.

Despite the danger signs which are clearly evident, we should not conclude at this juncture that we are doomed to a severe depression. We all remember how, after VJ-day, virtually all the forecasters predicted that by the spring of 1946 there would be from 8 to 12 million unemployed. This did not happen. Then as late as 3 months ago, the predominant group of Government economists in Washington was proclaiming that the economic problem which we had to face was continued inflation. That turned out to be incorrect. Now it is being said, and apparently by some of those who a few months ago feared inflation, that we face another break like that of 1929.

It is, of course, possible that this may happen. But there is no clear proof that it will. Perhaps most reputable economists still believe that the coming year will either be one of moderate prosperity or moderate recession. It is too early to tell what will happen. Just as it would have been a mistake to have launched a big public-works program in the fall of 1945 to avert unemployment which never occurred, just as it would have been a mistake to have applied deflationary tactics in January of this year, so I believe it would be a mistake now to conclude that a depression is inevitable.

We must make decisions on the budget in the next 6 weeks without knowing what kind of a year we are going to face. In military phraseology, we should be alerted for a depression, but we should not commit our reserves prematurely. That is about the worst mistake any military commander can make. Unless the bottom falls out of business during the next 6 weeks, therefore, I submit that we should try to balance the budget during the coming year and then hold ourselves in readiness to act decisively later should matters get greatly worse. For example, I think we should give the Federal Works Agency added funds to help to get definite blueprints drawn on some of our more important public works which could be used in a depression. At present such blueprints exist on the reserve shelf for only about four and one-half billion dollars of projects—local, State, and Federal—while plans are incomplete for about sixty billion dollars more, which are needed public works. We should be ready to act, but we should not act until the situation requires it.

Secondly, even if we do ultimately act to offset by increased Government expenditure a great decline in private employment, we should not do so by maintaining waste in government. We should instead seek to clear the slums, to build housing for the underprivileged, to construct more hospitals, and to conserve the soil rather than to maintain an excessive number of clerks, stenographers, and office staff. Waste does not add to the national wealth. By using up our margins of safety, it will instead make it more difficult for us to help the people who may really need help and will prevent us from stimulating the economy at the points where it needs to be aided.

If we do not try to economize at this time by reducing waste, we will put ourselves in the position of almost never doing so. In years of high prosperity, we will not economize because we will not need to do so, while in periods of depression it will be argued that the waste will be necessary to give employment. And in transitional periods we will be afraid to move lest we make conditions worse. I think the only answer is to be against waste at all times, but to adapt the rest of our program to business conditions.

I recognize that there are other decisive factors in the economic picture in addition to the reduction of Government administrative expenses. Among those are the following: First, the Government's economic program to encourage and maintain high levels of business investment and consumer purchasing power; second, the proper balance between military and civilian expenditures in the light of the demands of our foreign policy; third, the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government as recommended by President Truman and the Hoover Commission; and, fourth, the wage, price, investment, and production policies of individuals in private business.

To these we must also give our most serious attention. Budget cutting is no substitute for wise action on these matters.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Florida for a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I have the utmost respect and deference for the economic knowledge of my good friend from Illinois, and I profess to be no economist myself, but I should like to ask the able Senator whether this general tendency which has been manifested in the Congress toward a policy of what may be called economy is not likely to be contributory, if followed throughout the country, to a deflationary spiral which will tend to bring about the unemployment to which the Senator has already referred?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is so contended, of course, by some persons, but I should say it would be more dangerous for us in a period which approaches normal to have an unbalanced budget and be compelled to float bonds to meet the deficit. That might have a worse effect on public confidence and impair business conditions, and would, in my judgment, hurt the community more than a reduction in expenditures at this time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a further question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I am asking the able Senator only for information. Even a budget deficit and the necessity for deficit financing would have a tendency, would it not, to inflate the economy instead of to deflate it, and would it not constitute probably a contribution toward the retention of the present high level of employment we now have and be a force which would counteract some of the tendencies toward deflation which we observe already in the economy?

Mr. DOUGLAS. As I have said, if we should once be so unfortunate as to get into a severe depression, I believe then we should expand public works, create employment, and maintain purchasing power. But I think it is very dangerous for us at this period to proceed on the assumption that we are going to have a severe depression. We do not know whether that will be true or not. We will not know in the next 6 weeks as we make up our minds on the budget. I think we should only proceed for the present on the assumption that we shall have approximately normal conditions and that during that period the budget should be balanced. If, during the course of the summer, conditions should become worse and if we are summoned back into special session in the fall, as it is promised we shall be, I shall be perfectly ready to reconsider the subject then. But, as of this moment, it seems to me highly important that we should not strike at business confidence by unbalancing the budget.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow a last inquiry, since we now have a level of prosperity which we have hardly ever approached in the past, and since we have a high level of employment, which has been the envy of our past, and if we now, by our public example and our public policy, give encouragement to these deflationary trends which are already popping up all over the country, is it not possible that we may later have to spend a great deal more money to get back up to this high level that we now enjoy in the economy than would be saved by the success of the policy to reduce expenditures, say, 5 percent?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I may say to the Senator from Florida that he can make a case for what he is saying, but I do not think he quite realizes the implications of his apparent contention. If what he says is true, we would be committed to an almost permanent policy of deficit financing, constantly spending more than we collect, in an effort to maintain business balance. I cannot believe that this is a healthy program. I would say that we should have deficit financing in periods of depression, but that in periods of prosperity we should have a surplus of receipts over expenditures and retire some of the debt which has been accumulated during the period of the depression. A continuous process of deficit financing would, I think, ultimately be disastrous.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his statement, but I would not wish the record to appear to indicate that the Senator from Florida favored a continuous deficit financing except in times of great distress and abnormality. If I had to choose between the two horns of the dilemma of contributing to the deflationary trends that I observe in the country or levying an additional tax, I should rather levy the tax; and I believe it is a sounder public policy.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not want to keep the Senate in session unduly. I should merely like to say that while we should be alerted for a depression, we should not commit our reserves prematurely. Even if we ultimately act to offset contraction of private employment by increased Government expenditure, we should not do so by maintaining waste in Government. We should, instead, seek to construct positive public works which will be of benefit.

LIBERALISM OR CONSERVATISM HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH THE CASE

In conclusion I should like to point out that this is not a matter of liberalism versus conservatism. To be liberal, one does not have to be a wastrel. We must, in fact, be thrifty if we are to be really humane. We are not helping the slum dwellers, the under-educated, and sick by supporting an excessive number of stenographers and clerks. We are, on the contrary, wasting money and personnel which, if saved, would remove some of these evils from American life. If by next fall unemployment should have risen to 5,000,000 persons, and if we are then in the midst of a severe economic depression, I would be willing at that time to consider the possibility of launching a public-works program to help take care of the unemployed and to revive business. But we should not do this now. We should trim our sails for the moment so that we may be ready if the storm breaks. On the other hand, there are many conservatives who say they want to balance the budget but who in practice want each particular item in which they are interested to be increased. The budget issue is simply one of arithmetic and logic. Liberalism and conservatism, like "the flowers that bloom in the spring," have nothing to do with the case.

Nor is this a party issue. The same tendency to expand personnel exists under all administrations. It would be just as strong, I believe, were the opposing party to be in power. I think I have shown that I do not want to be partisan in my discussion, but it is not improper to point out that the deficit which faces us for the current year 1948–49 has been caused by the unsound tax-reduction program of the Eightieth Congress, in the midst of an inflationary spiral. If the previous tax rates wisely supported by President Truman had been maintained, the prospective income for the coming fiscal year would have been sufficient, I believe, to meet the deficit now present for 1949–50. Although, of course, it would still have been desirable to eliminate waste. For critics of the President's Fair Deal program, many of whom voted for these tax reductions in 1948, to lay the main blame for the present fiscal situation upon the administration's housing, education, and welfare proposals, is hardly just.

I have concluded, however, that we do not have two parties, but rather three, which are struggling here on Capitol Hill. In addition to the Republicans and the Democrats, we have officialdom, or what is vulgarly termed the bureaucrats. This third party, operating as it does through both of the old parties, tends ever to want more and more and more. The officials may do it with the best of motives, but that is their tendency. But we represent the people, and the interests of the people demand at this time a balanced budget to be obtained through a reduction in waste. In this battle of the people versus officialdom, our place is on the side of the people.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS MUST COOPERATE

When a family gets into trouble and begins to run into debt, the father and husband, if he is wise, will call the other members into a family conference and will lay the facts before them. Then if the children are of the right stuff, they will all tighten their belts, cut down on their less essential expenditures, and seek to increase their income. That is what we are asking officialdom to do. We are saying this to them:

In order to defend our country against threatened aggression, in order to help our less fortunate citizens and to preserve the financial soundness of our Government, please get under the load and help us. Instead of always asking for more, see if you cannot get along with less. Every bit of waste in our armed forces makes it that much more difficult for us to rearm the western democracies. Every bit of waste in our civil branches makes it that much more difficult for us to clear the slums and to provide better housing, health, and education for the unfortunates who need help the most. Get under the load with us and help us to bring this country of ours through its difficulties.

We can do it if we will only pull together, but we shall all need to be clearheaded, courageous, and determined to put the national interest first. If we do so ourselves, we are justified in asking the administrators that they do likewise. They now have the chance to prove they are worthy of our trust and that the bitter attacks which are often made upon them are untrue. I, for one, have confidence in them. We shall be grievously disappointed if they fail. That is why I think we must reduce wasteful expenditures and do our best to balance the budget.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point an article from the New York Herald Tribune entitled "Advisers Bid Truman Ease Tax Demands" and an article appearing in the Washington Post today entitled "Advisers Ask Truman To Hold Spending Down."

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune]

ADVISERS BID TRUMAN EASE TAX DEMANDS—ECONOMIC COUNCIL URGES LESSER GOAL—OPPOSES TRANSPORTATION LEVY ON GOODS AND NEW PUBLIC WORKS SPENDING

WASHINGTON, May 9.—President Truman's economic advisers have suggested that some existing tax burdens be lightened and that the administration scale down its request for $4,000,000,000 in new levies, responsible officials said today.

The Council of Economic Advisers was reported also to feel that current business trends justify a checkrein on Federal spending to bring the budget closer to balance.

The council delivered its April report to the White House last week. It has not been made public, but it was learned that it suggested the lowering or removal of some excise taxes. Such levies as the tax on transportation of goods, in the council's opinion, add to business costs and consumer prices and impede on orderly withdrawal from the postwar business boom.

LESSER GOAL IS URGED

The advisers suggested that consideration be given to accepting a lesser goal than the $4,000,000,000 tax increase. Mr. Truman has suggested that this money be raised mostly from corporations and, perhaps, from middle and upper individual income brackets.

The council did not recommend at this time the launching of an expanded public works program, an authoritative source disclosed. The advisers have consistently urged that Federal and local governments prepare shelves of public work blueprints for use when needed to bolster employment and public purchasing power. But the present trend of the economy, which the council chairman, Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, calls a healthy disinflation, does not warrant large-scale works spending now, the council feels. Such outlays would make it harder to reach the goal of lower Government costs.

The three-member council, Dr. Nourse, Vice Chairman Leon Keyserling, and Dr. John D. Clark, were reported to be in substantial agreement on the April size-up of the economy.

While there may have been some conflict of views, it was indicated there was no such outright split as occurred early in the year when Mr. Keyserling and Mr. Clark outvoted Dr. Nourse in advocating passage of stand-by anti-inflation controls.

ADVICE TO TRUMAN

After a White House visit last Tuesday Dr. Nourse informed newsmen that the council expects some further easing of living costs. He said prices are continuing downward but not on a demoralizing basis, and that there is no need to dig into the storm cellars.

He did not divulge the council's advice to Mr. Truman. As now reported, that advice was:

It would be unwise to plunge into red-ink financing. But an effort to avoid it by sharply boosting taxes might hinder the attempts of business firms to adjust their prices to the weaker market and keep their plants running at high capacity. The safer course would be to trim Federal spending.

On the tax question, the council reportedly suggested that study be given these policies:

1. Reducing those wartime excise taxes which basically affect business operations and which produce only a comparatively small amount of revenue. The 3 percent levy on air, land, and water freight, for instance, pyramids costs because it applies anew at each step from the mine or mill to the consumer.

2. Delaying the date of the proposed increase in the social security pay roll tax from July 1—as proposed by administration leaders—to the presently scheduled date, next January 1. The levy, shared by workers and employers, bites directly into pay checks and heightens business costs.

3. Accepting a lesser goal than the $4,000,000,000 tax increase which Mr. Truman asked in January. Some officials hold that such a tax boost now might eat up private capital needed for industrial expansion, or cause business to retrench so severely that the healthy disinflation might skid into a serious recession.

No major part of the economy is now in serious trouble, the council is understood to believe, but hazards exist which will bear watching—including the possibility of a heavy fourth round wage increase and large crop surpluses.

The impression was given that the council approves the policy of the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees in the watchful waiting before taking action to raise taxes or lower them.

Mr. Truman's budget report in January predicted a defict of $600,000,000 for fiscal 1949, ending next June 30. It foresaw a deficit of $873,000,000 in fiscal 1950. Some private economists believe the 1949 deficit may be somewhat larger and the 1950 deficit much greater than the budget forecast.

ADVISERS ASK PRESIDENT TRUMAN TO HOLD SPENDING DOWN

(By Sterling F. Green)

President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers favors a checkrein on Federal spending to bring the budget closer to a balance, responsible officials said yesterday.

As far tax increases, the council is reported to have suggested it might be well to accept a "lesser goal" than the $4,000,000,000 for which the President has been asking.

The April report of the council, drafted in the light of current business trends, was delivered to the White House last week. It suggested the removal or lowering of some Federal excise taxes, it was learned.

AMERICAN POLICY TOWARD SPAIN

(During the consideration of the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill there ensued the following debate which, on request of Mr. MAYBANK and by unanimous consent, was ordered to be transposed to this point in the RECORD:)

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, during this week there will be a most momentous vote taken in the United Nations, in which the question of full recognition of Spain will be involved. Spain, which from time immemorial has been a civilized Christian nation, friendly to America, and a country with whom America has been friendly, is now in the balance before the United Nations. It has been extremely difficult for some of us to understand why it was that our country, through the State Department, seemed to be stymied in regard to diplomatic recognition of Spain. The question was put to the Secretary of State only a few days ago as to whether, when this country endorsed and accepted the Charter of the United Nations and became a member of that organization, we did away with or fettered ourselves against individual action regarding diplomatic relations. It would appear from the attitude of the Secretary of State, if we can construe his attitude at all, as he appeared before the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the State Department appropriation, that he either does not know or is silent on the subject of whether this country has its hands tied, has its tongue tied, and has its attitude tied toward diplomatic recognition of other countries of the world.

We are within a few days to vote on a grave subject, namely, whether we shall ratify and become a party to the North Atlantic treaty. If we are to become a party to it, if the Senate is to endorse that great project, and I am one who hopes that it will, then certainly—and I need go no further than to quote the Secretary of State before the Appropriations Committee—"Spain would be a most essential element in the North Atlantic Treaty"—essential from a military standpoint, essential from an economic standpoint, essential from a diplomatic standpoint, indeed, essential from every standpoint to the welfare and successful operation of the treaty, and, indeed, to the welfare of the democratic, liberty-loving, God-fearing peoples of the world.

Mr. President, what gives rise to the thought which I am trying to express before the Senate is a most able article by one of America's foremost columnists, Mr. John O'Donnell, under the caption "Capitol stuff." I ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read the article to the Senate at this time, in order that I may discuss it after it has been read.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would not ask that at this time because we are trying to conclude consideration of the Treasury-Post Office Department appropriation bill. It was distinctly understood with the chairman of the subcommittee, the chairman of the full committee, the Senator from Wyoming, and the Senator from Rhode Island that we would proceed with that bill, and then would immediately resume consideration of the District tax bill. I stated that if other matters were taken up by unanimous consent, I would agree to a resumption of consideration of the District tax bill. If a long article is to be read by the clerk and discussed at some length by Senators, it will delay everything we had in mind. I, therefore, wish the Senator would not ask for it at this time.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is too apprehensive. It is not going to be a long discussion. It will not take as long as the Senator thinks. But it is timely, in the judgment of the Senator from Nevada, that the matter be brought before the Senate, in view of the vote that is to be taken in the United Nations within a very short time.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Reserving the right to object——

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator reserves the right to object to what?

Mr. MAYBANK. I have no question with the Senator from Nevada as to the propriety of his bringing up the subject again at this time. In fact, I read the greater part of his statement before the Appropriations Committee. I may say that with some of it I agree. But will the Senator give us an idea of how long the reading of the article and the ensuing discussion will take?

Mr. McCARRAN. I cannot imagine that it will take very long, and I have no doubt the Senator will be able to get his bill through within a very short time, and then resume the former order of business, namely, the proposed sales tax for the District of Columbia. I have no doubt the Senator will be able to proceed with expedition.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator believe it will take more than an hour?

Mr. McCARRAN. I should not care to hazard a guess about that, because other Senators may want to join in and give their expressions. I have the floor. I do not want to be captious with the Senator——

Mr. MAYBANK. I understand the Senator has the floor; but the Sentaor asked unanimous consent to have an article read by the clerk. That is why I reserved the right to object. My desire was to find out from the Senator from Nevada how long he thought it would take.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not think it will take very long. That is my judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read the article in question.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CAPITOL STUFF

(By John O'Donnell)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 9.—The distinguished diplomatic thinkers in the State Department just couldn't make up their minds last week about Spain.

They were so utterly coy and artful about the situation that nobody would take responsibility for a United States vote in the United Nations on the resolution to resume normal diplomatic relations with Madrid and thereby cancel out the old Moscow anti-Spanish blackball of December 1946.

As a result of hand-wringing indecision, the boys are once more on the hot spot before the Senate. And it serves them right.

Now, when the State Department is pleading for Treasury millions to conduct global operations, the abstention by the United States gives the Department's Senate foes on the Appropriations Committee another chance to put Acheson and his associates over the barrel.

And this is what's going to be done—according to committee members McKELLAR, of Tennessee, and McCARRAN, of Nevada.

SIXTEEN NATIONS REMAIN ON THE SIDE LINES

The roll call at Lake Success on the Spanish UN resolution which "would leave member states full freedom of action as regards their diplomatic relations with Spain" showed approval by the Political Committee of the General Assembly by a vote of 25 to 16. Sixteen nations, including the United States and Great Britain, remained on the side lines. The majority of Latin-American nations backed the resolution. Moscow and its satellites opposed.

Now comes the first real show-down for the record on the attitude of Franco's Spain toward the United States after Pearl Harbor and, even before that, toward Great Britain in the perilous fall of 1940 and until this Nation entered the war.

To meet the Moscow charge that Franco and Spain were always on the side of Hitler and Mussolini, there are coming out of the files for the Senate probe the public writings of Winston Churchill, of our wartime Ambassador to Madrid, Columbia University's history professor, Carlton J. H. Hayes, and even the communications between the late F. D. R. and Franco.

Churchill wrote in the second volume of his superb war history, "Their Finest Hour":

"Spain had much to give and even more to take away. We had been neutral in the sanguinary civil war. General Franco owed little or nothing to us, but much—perhaps life itself—to the Axis Powers. Hitler and Mussolini had come to his aid. He disliked and feared Hitler. * * * General Franco's policy throughout the war was entirely selfish and cold-blooded. He thought only of Spain and Spanish interests. Gratitude to Hitler and Mussolini for their help never entered his head."

Churchill writes that at all times—this was in 1940–1—"His Majesty's Government was content" with the attitude of Spain. He mentions the dangerous fact that "nothing was easier than for the Spaniards to mount or allow to be mounted a dozen heavy guns in the hills dominating Gibraltar and the narrow passage to the Mediterranean." And he notes: "Spain held the key to all British enterprises in the Mediterranean and never in the darkest hours did she turn the lock against us."

THE SAME ANTI-FRANCO CRIES WE HEARD IN 1942

The outcries against Spain today differ little in kind or source from those which went up from the pinkos in the fall of 1942 when we were making every effort to hold Franco's friendship.

Ten days before the north Africa landings, Ambassador Hayes, after talking with F. D. R., delivered this message to Spain's Foreign Minister Count Jordana:

"Such articles and resolutions of organizations as have recently appeared in the American press advocating the rupture of diplomatic relations with Spain in no way represent the policy of the Government of the United States of America.

"Moreover, the Government of the United States of America, perceiving with much gratification the improvement of relations between the two countries * * * strongly depreciates any activities by purely private organizations or individuals within the United States which would seem intended to prejudice the growth of good feeling between the Spanish people and the people of the United States. The foregoing declaration has been personally authorized by the President of the United States and Commander in Chief of the American Army and Navy."

ROOSEVELT'S LETTER TO FRANCO ON INVASION DAY

And then, on the fateful day of the invasion, November 8, 1942, Franco sat in his Madrid office and read this letter from Franklin D. Roosevelt and, according to Ambassador Hayes, who handed it to him, "seemed pleased with it." Franco from that time was on our side, beyond the barriers of strict neutrality. The letter from F. D. R. read:

"My dear General Franco:

"It is because your nation and mine are friends in the best sense of the word and because you and I are sincerely desirous of the continuation of that friendship for our mutual good that I want very simply to tell you of the compelling reasons that have forced me to send a powerful American military force to the assistance of the French possessions in North Africa."

Appealing to Franco's "wide military experience," F. D. R. outlined the scope of the contemplated action and concluded with the promise:

"I hope you will accept my full assurance that these moves are in no shape, manner, or form directed against the government or people of Spain or Spanish Morocco or Spanish territories—metropolitan or overseas. * * * Spain has nothing to fear from the United States. I am, my dear General, your sincere friend, Franklin Roosevelt."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the article just read by the clerk is exceedingly illuminative. It might be well for this country to pause and think of some of the things set forth in that article, especially the note from the late beloved President of happy memory to General Franco at a time when this country was sending its boys into sections of the world in which a turn on the part of Spain might have been fatal to our success.

Mr. President, upon inquiry made of the Secretary of State by members of the Appropriations Committee as to why Spain had not been given diplomatic recognition, the Secretary of State was exceedingly evasive. He seemed to try to avoid the subject by saying that there was a friendly relation between Spain and the United States and that there is a chargé d'affaires there. But, Mr. President, that does not constitute full diplomatic accord. Anyone conversant with diplomatic relations will immediately recognize that the mere presence of a chargé d'affaires in a nation, after a minister or ambassador has been withdrawn, does not evince full diplomatic relations and accord. We have not in this country recognized the ambassador who is offered to us by Spain.

In this hour, when this Nation is fighting the greatest enemy of individual human liberty the world has ever known, is leading, if you please, the vanguard of democratic people for human freedom in the years to come, why is it, I ask, that our State Department refuses to recognize diplomatically a nation that has been fighting communism for the past 25 years, long before we entered into the Second World War; a nation which has stood firmly all the time, by its arms and its economy and its government activities, against the spread of communism in Europe; a nation which if it were to be taken over by the Communist forces today or tomorrow, would lend greater weight to communism than any step communism has been able to take?

Mr. President, why is it, may the Senate ask, that the State Department refuses to recognize Spain? Let us go further and ask, why was it that on last Saturday, when the question came up before the Council of the United Nations, the Government of the United States refused to vote? Why was it that it stood mute, at a time when democracy everywhere was looking to this country for leadership, when individual human liberty was praying to this Nation and to the Western Hemisphere to lead the countries of the world out of the bondage in which they are now held by communistic forces? Why was it that at that hour, when we could have struck a blow for freedom, when we could have said a word that would have given encouragement to the democratic nations of the world, we remained mute in the United Nations?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to express my deep appreciation of the Senator's bringing to the attention of the people of America this very important vote about to be had in the United Nations. We did not take advantage of the opportunity the distinguished Senator has so forcefully called to the attention of the Senate, but I ask him now, What are we going to do in the future? The Senator recalls that as a member of the subcommittee, serving with the Senator, I asked the Department of State officials what their program for the future would be, in view of the action taken by the committee of the United Nations approving recognition of Spain by a vote of 25 to 16. What is America going to do in the future? I wish the distinguished Senator, who has given this matter so much study, would indicate at least how he feels about the vote, because it is my opinion that the United States can do nothing else now than to recognize Spain with full ambassadorship. If we are to have a treaty that will defend the 16 or 18 countries involved, certainly Spain has to be admitted as one of the nations to the treaty.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, it was admitted by the Secretary of State before the Committee on Appropriations that Spain was highly essential, militarily, to the North Atlantic Treaty. A question was propounded by the chairman of the subcommittee, the senior Senator from Nevada, to the Secretary of State, to this effect, "What will be your attitude if Spain is recognized, or if the resolution is adopted giving Spain recognition by the United Nations?" To that question he replied that he did not know. Then I asked him why it was that he did not know, and he said that he would do what the President directed him to do.

I may say that another conference held at the office of the Secretary of State by me and the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House with the Secretary of State and his assistants, and the same question was propounded to him which I propounded to him in the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. He said that immediately, if this resolution were adopted by the United Nations, he would send an ambassador to Spain.

I should like to know what has intervened. We may hear, Mr. President, about important personages who have since taken a stand on the subject, we may hear about important personages who have intervened in the matter, and who are not in favor of having Spain recognized, but, regardless of that, 150,000,000 liberty-loving and God-fearing people in this country today, in my judgment, want Spain recognized, because if there is any one thing which the people of America want, if they go into this North Atlantic Treaty, it is to have the North Atlantic Treaty a success militarily, economically, and every other way. If it is not a success along those lines, then it would be better a thousand times that we never entered into it.

Some of us, notwithstanding the fact that we have been and are now inclined to support the North Atlantic Treaty, are going to question whether or not we should go into that treaty unless all the nations which should be in the treaty are brought in by diplomatic accord, and Spain is one of those nations.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I deeply appreciate the observations made relative to the necessity of Spain being one of the countries admitted to the North Atlantic treaty, not only for the good of the North Atlantic countries, but I should like to ask the Senator if it is not just as highly essential, if Spain be cooperative, for the defense of the so-called Cairo-Arabia area, which is at the other end of the Mediterranean Sea.

Mr. McCARRAN. Undoubtedly that is true.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to ask the Senator a question along another line, and when he finishes his answer to the Senator from Nebraska I shall propound my question.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think I have answered the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am very much in sympathy with what the Senator is saying, and I was a member of the subcommittee when the questions were propounded to the Secretary of State and to several of his assistants. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator if he does not feel that we could accelerate what he has in mind if the Spanish Government would recognize religious freedom in Spain.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if it is stated that the Spanish Government does not recognize religious freedom in Spain, that statement is false propaganda. Religious freedom is recognized in Spain, and there are in Spain those of nearly every denomination in the world, and they attend their respective places of worship. There is circulated in this country, I know, the charge that there is not religious freedom in Spain, but the best advice I can receive from every source is to the contrary.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I am very happy to have that assurance from the distinguished Senator, because, in all frankness, it has been reported to me that Protestants in Spain are not recognized, but on the contrary the Baptists and the Methodists, for instance, have been driven underground.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, all I can say is that I have not been to Spain, I am neither a Baptist nor a Methodist, and I have not been underground, but I am advised from the best sources I can find that the statement I have made here on the floor of the Senate is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am glad the Senator from Nevada has made the explanation about Spain he has just made. There was one time when Spain did not treat all religions fairly, but I am glad to say that in recent years, from what I hear, all religions have been treated fairly in Spain.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. On the question which was raised by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], I can say that I was in Spain myself last fall, and at that time, for the first time in 400 years, after the expulsion of the Jews, they were readmitted under the Franco government; and all religions are allowed to conduct their services. There is not the same freedom that we have here, but certainly if we act on that basis, I think we had better sever relations with Hungary and with Russia and with many other countries before we undertake to discipline the one country which, as the Senator from Nevada has pointed out, is unquestionably the most stalwart foe of communism there is to be found in the world.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, if the Senator who has the floor will yield, I want to say that I admit the pertinency of the remarks made by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate for too long, but I wish to dwell on a few cogent facts, as brought out by the Secretary of State before the Appropriations Committee. He stated that the credit of Spain was not good. Yet, Mr. President, during the last year the trade between Spain and Great Britain amounted to $450,000,000. That looks as though somebody thought the credit of Spain was fairly good. While undoubtedly British pounds were used in that particular line of trade between those two countries, my recollection is that we appropriated last year and will appropriate again this year $5,000,000,000 to stabilize the currency of Great Britain. So that if the credit of Spain is not good, then the American dollar, through the agency of Great Britain, certainly is making it good.

That is not all. The trade between Great Britain and Spain is as I have stated it. But what is one of the greatest commodities desired by the industry of Spain? It is cotton which is necessary for the spindles of Spain. Where is Spain now getting her cotton? Spain is getting her cotton for spinning from Egypt. Undoubtedly again Spain is using British pounds in that business, and undoubtedly again the American dollar is standing behind the British pound, as it does everywhere.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I was about to ask my distinguished friend, the senior Senator from Nevada, a question on that very point. At this very time we have before the Committee on Banking and Currency a bill, introduced by the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], in connection with the Import-Export Bank's dealing with European countries. I feel, as does the Senator from Nevada, that it is about time the Spanish people were recognized in international trade. I come from a cotton-producing section, but I know about other commodities as well as cotton and tobacco. I know something about the products of the Midwest and of the West. I do not think of the matter in a sectional sense. I think Spain should be given the same credit by the Import-Export Bank as other countries, such as Italy, for whose credit I have the highest respect, as well as France, which has made a substantial repayment to the Import-Export Bank. I believe Spain should be granted credits similar to those which Congress has provided shall be extended to other countries. I want to thank the Senator from Nevada for bringing up the matter.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to make an observation. It is rather a strange thing—and I say this with all due respect to my good friend from South Carolina—to find that in the last 2 years my State has become a great competitor in the production of long staple cotton. We are joining surprisingly with the State of California, as well as with the State of Arizona, in the matter of production of long staple cotton. So some of us from the West, as well as representatives of the great South, which has done so much for the Nation, are equally interested in who will buy cotton and where it shall go.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator again for his remarks. From past experience I know that the Spanish people have always bought the very finest and the very best cotton.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from Nevada know offhand, as brought out by the testimony, how much in number of bales, the United States has lost from 1946 to date because we have not sold cotton to Spain?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; I do not have the facts at hand.

Mr. WHERRY. Figures handed me show that the United States has lost the sale of more than 300,000 bales of cotton. That number of bales could have been sold to Spain during those 2 years.

I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Nevada a question. Does he recall the question asked in committee by the junior Senator from Nebraska of the Secretary of State? The question asked by the Senator from Nebraska was why there should be any conditions imposed on Spain in connection with ECA? The Senator may recall that the Secretary of State's reply to the question was that the United States was not imposing any credit conditions on Spain. Then I asked the Secretary why it was that Spain was not admitted to ECA benefits, because all we are trying to do is to rehabilitate the countries of Europe. The Senator may recall that the Secretary's answer was that some European countries participating in ECA benefits did not want Spain to be included in the group receiving ECA benefits.

I now ask, why should we impose a condition of credit upon Spain when Spain is paying her way, while at the same time we permit the participating countries in ECA to tell the United States of America not to extend aid to Spain because of conditions they impose, which are not imposed by the United States of America? I should like to have the Senator's observation on that point.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to make a short observation in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Nevada, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Let me say that what the Senator from Nebraska has just stated is the fact. The question was propounded by the Senator, and the question was answered by the Secretary of State in substance as the Senator has just stated.

I have this thought in mind. I wonder why any democratic nation, any God-fearing democratic people, and no one will deny that the people of Spain have been such all down the ages, should be denied the right to receive the benefits of ECA which we are extending to other nations of Europe, when, as a matter of fact, our object and aim is to put the people of those nations on their feet so they may in turn within a short period of time sustain themselves. That is the object of ECA. That is its purpose. If Spain is ready to join the Atlantic Pact, if Spain is ready to join the democratic nations of the world, as she declares herself to be, why should we give the cold shoulder to a great people and a great nation and a great government, if you please, at a time when the United States is reaching out for everything that will protect us and at the same time keep us out of war.

I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, not only has Spain been denied benefits under ECA, and denied participation in the Atlantic Pact, as the Senator from Nevada has said, but Spain has also been denied credits by the Import-Export Bank, a bank which was founded for the purpose of creating and maintaining good business relations between us and other countries.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I want to say something now which is based purely on information received by me. I may be in error, and I may be erroneously informed. But within the last 24 hours I was advised that a great private banking concern of America, in a great center of America, had extended enormous credits to Spain. If it be true that this great concern would extend credit to that nation, why is it that we, as a nation seeking assistance from every source, refuse even to recognize Spain diplomatically?

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, may I suggest to the distinguished Senator from Nevada that I find most interesting Dean Acheson's statement that Spain is a bad credit risk? I am not familiar with all the facts involved in the Spanish question; but if, for the sake of argument, we were to agree that Spain is a bad credit risk, are we then to assume that every nation which is a party to the ECA is a good credit risk? How can we explain to the average American citizen who wishes to know, what is good credit and bad credit in terms of risk, particularly with reference to our coming consideration of the North Atlantic Pact?

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say partially in reply to the able Senator from Washington that that question was propounded to the Secretary of State by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. He asked, in substance, Have all the other countries that have received recognition and assistance from ECA paid their bills to the United States? I am giving the substance of his question, and not quoting him verbatim. He then referred to a very outstanding nation, which I do not think should be drawn into this discussion, and asked if it had always paid its bills. Whether the Secretary answered the question or not, it was naturally the occasion for a smile, because every American citizen above the age of 6 years knows the answer.

But that does not seem to me to answer the question at all. Assuming that there is a bad credit situation—and I assume it only for the sake of argument—assuming that some may say that the credit of Spain is not so good as that of some other nation, credit is a comparative thing. It is a question of who pays, when, and how, and what the conditions of credit may be. Certainly no nation in all the world has extended such liberal lines of credit to the peoples of the world who wanted our assistance as has the Government of the United States during the past 16 or 18 years.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask one further question?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. CAIN. We are told that the only purpose of the forthcoming North Atlantic Pact is to make the security of the world more likely, and to prevent world war III. In the opinion of the Senator from Nevada, to what extent is this intention—with which all of us agree—likely to be held in jeopardy by the exclusion of Spain, which I think would be important to the purposes of the North Atlantic Pact for economic and strategic reasons, reasons of supply, and every other reason?

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say to the Senator that I am not a strategist or a military expert. However, I believe that anyone who is a strategist will agree that there is nothing more essential to the military success of the North Atlantic Pact—if it means military success—than the Iberian Peninsula. Nothing could be more essential, because from the Iberian Peninsula, the body of which is Spain, we step across, figuratively speaking, into North Africa. The Senator raises a most interesting question indeed by his interrogatory, namely, the high importance of recognizing Spain. I would go further than that, perhaps, in my zeal. I would recognize her and pat her on the back a little to induce her to come in and join us.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. No doubt the Senator agrees that if war comes again, one of the things America will most wish to accomplish is to make as certain as we can that the war is not waged on the territory of this country. If that be true—and certainly I think it is, on the basis of my limited military experience—I think we must obviously and logically do business with countries which are best prepared to provide bases from which we can take the next war to the enemy, if it comes. How can we prepare ourselves against the possibility of a war in the future without making certain, if Spain is agreeable, that we have an understanding which would permit us to wage joint war with her and take that war to a distant enemy, keeping it away from the United States?

Mr. McCARRAN. I want to go just a little further than the able Senator from Washington goes. How can we do better than to make an ally of a country which has carried the war against communism for the past quarter of a century? While we were sitting silently by she was holding the line against the growth of communism in Europe. Who will be our enemy if war is threatened, or if war comes? Certainly it will come from one source. God forbid that it should come at all; but if it should come, no one in America today doubts the source whence it would come.

Mr. CAIN. I think we can do no less, if we are serious and mean what we say as a nation. Communism is the one overwhelming threat to the survival of freemen everywhere.

Mr. McCARRAN. What the Senator has last said is true. It should be stated in more emphatic language than either he or I can express it, because there is nothing in this world so damnable as slavery. Unless we fight off communism, the slavery of communism, known to communism and fostered by communism, will be visited on a liberty-loving people.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I do not think the Senator from Nevada can answer this question, but it certainly puzzles me, and I think it puzzles a great many other Americans. Why do we do so much to stop and contain communism in certain directions, and do so pitifully little—in fact, nothing at all—in other directions? I think Spain could be cited as a fair example of the little we do in certain directions.

Mr. WHERRY rose.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me reply to the Senator from Washington before I yield to the Senator from Nebraska. I intend to yield the floor shortly.

In making reply to questions propounded to him before the Committee on Appropriations, the Secretary of State volunteered the statement that it is commonly known that Spain is a Fascist Government. I drew his attention to the fact that we had full diplomatic relations with Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and other satellite countries, and, indeed, with Moscow. All those nations have out-and-out and openly communistic forms of government. Shall we say, Mr. Secretary of State, that we will deny recognition to a democratic form of government while at the same time recognizing communism by sending our representatives of the highest echelon into diplomatic relations with communistic governments?

I wonder what is behind this policy. The question was propounded by the able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] as to whether or not the failure to recognize Spain was based on the fact that Spain was a Catholic nation. I am not ready to say that any officer of the United States of America would stoop so low or would forget the traditions of America so far as to have that as a cause for failure to recognize a nation. So I would immediately dispel that thought, notwithstanding the fact that the question was propounded to the Secretary of State—and by a non-Catholic, if you please. Of course, I dislike the idea of having any thought of religion enter in anything of this kind, and certainly I exonerate the Secretary of State from entertaining such a thought.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUNT in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska for a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to revert to an observation which has been made, and then I would suggest an inquiry to the Senator. What is our traditional basis in foreign policy for recognizing the government of another nation? Is it not based on whether a government is stable? Is not that the basis of our traditional policy, insofar as recognizing the government of a nation is concerned?

Mr. McCARRAN. In times past I think that has been the outstanding question, namely, whether the form of government is a stable one; whether it has been set up and has been fully foundationed, and has the backing of the people.

Mr. WHERRY. In other words, our action in such a case is not predicated on a question of credits or fiscal policies of the government concerned; is it?

Mr. McCARRAN. I never knew it to be.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it not a fact that in 1939, 52 nations, including the United States of America, recognized the Franco government as a stable government at that time?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think that is true.

Mr. WHERRY. And is it not also true that until 1946, the United States of America continued to recognize the Franco government, including all through the period of the war?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think that is true.

Mr. WHERRY. Then I ask what has happened between 1946 and now, so that today we do not have an ambassador in Spain; why has there been this particular change of attitude? If the United States Government felt that Spain had a stable form of government in 1939, why does our Government no longer recognize the Spanish Government? Of course in 1939, 52 nations recognized the Government of Spain; in fact, I am informed that at that time only two countries—Russia and Mexico—did not recognize the Spanish Government. If it be true that the Spanish Government at that time was recognized as a stable government, then why has there been any change since then on the part of our Department of State, representing the United States Government, insofar as a recognition of the Government of Spain is concerned?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not have the facts on which I could base a cogent answer to the question asked by my friend the Senator from Nebraska.

I am about to yield the floor, Mr. President. I took the floor at this time because there is in the offing a momentous vote to be taken by the United Nations, at its seat in New York. That vote will be momentous to the world, and especially to the United States, because the democratic world looks to us for leadership. The United States of America should not stand mute, as it stood last Saturday, on this momentous question. The United States of America should cast its vote affirmatively for recognition of the Government of Spain; and immediately after the recognition of that government by the United Nations—indeed, before such recognition—the United States should do the same, because I for one—and I say it humbly—would never have voted in favor of having the United States sign the United Nations Charter if I had thought for a moment that thereby we were giving up our sovereignty to recognize diplomatic attachés from abroad. I hope that will not be recognized as a policy of this country; because if it is so recognized, we shall certainly have gone backwards farther than any American thinks we should have.

Mr. President, just one further thought, and then I shall conclude. I have taken longer in discussing this matter than I intended to. I say to the Members of the Senate that the North Atlantic Pact may be a matter of high importance; but if it comes into existence at all, it should come into existence with an accord from all the nations that are in accord with us naturally and normally; and the nation of Spain is one of them. I do not care whether some wag or some other person or some official calls the form of government in Spain a Fascist form of government. I have grave doubt whether any person would have authority to make such a statement, or whether facts can be demonstrated in support of such a statement. I do know that the United States of America is leading the war to hold the world reasonably safe for democracy, and we are holding that line without having to fire a gun. If we can hold it, then we shall hold it by the sanction of the nations which join with us, and we should have every nation which wholeheartedly joins with us in alliance against a foe of individual human freedom.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with much of what the Senator from Nevada has said, as it has seemed to me for some time that it is long overdue for the Senate of the United States to consider the situation with regard to the relations of the United States of America with Spain. I am happy to see that the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is now entering the Chamber, as it is my fond hope that the Senate will develop the happy habit of having appropriate discussion of some of the more serious problems confronting our country in connection with its foreign relations, recognizing that although 96 Members of the Senate necessarily cannot determine all the details of our foreign policy or be informed as to them, yet as representatives of 140,000,000 people who need also to be informed, this forum is the most appropriate one in which we can enter into discussions of some of the very serious problems with which we are faced.

Within the last week, John Foster Dulles appeared before the Foreign Relations Committee and said—if he is correctly quoted—that it would be extremely unfortunate if the 12 nations of the North Atlantic Pact were to appear to act in concert in the United Nations, as that would imply the creation of a bloc at whose cooperative action the rest of the world might well take alarm.

It is for that primary reason a matter of regret to me that in the very fateful vote of last week in the United Nations, the United States of America, Great Britain, and France were associated with five of the other powers which are signatory to the North Atlantic Pact in abstaining from a vote upon the question of whether full diplomatic relations should be resumed with Spain.

I want to express my very great appreciation of the courtesy and consideration of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Texas, in remaining here for at least a moment or two, to answer one or two questions regarding the Spanish situation. I shall read to him just three lines from the New York Times of this morning, which in its editorial column phrases far better than I can a problem which I think very greatly concerns us. I read the following:

> Yet we continue to maintain diplomatic relations with all these totalitarian governments and have in fact just appointed a new Ambassador to Moscow. If to Moscow, it may be asked, why not to Madrid? Certainly Franco isn't half as thorough or as efficient as Stalin in his destruction of the basic values of democracy; and, at the head of a weak and exhausted nation behind the Pyrenees, he is incomparably less of a menace to world peace than Stalin, with his mighty armies and demonstrated policy of territorial expansion and political penetration.

I would ask the Senator from Texas whether he can explain to the Senate why it is that we can have an Ambassador in Moscow, and not have one in Madrid?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator I have never favored the withdrawal of our Ambassador from Spain. In the United Nations, when we met last in New York, and when I was a delegate, I was on a committee dealing with the resolution offered by Poland, which would have withdrawn all ambassadors and other representatives and given a broadside against Spain. I opposed that in committee, but after doing so for several days, my delegation and the Secretary of State did not agree with me, and I had to accede to the vote of the delegation and not vote according to my real sentiments. But they knew my sentiments, because I stated them in the committee and to the delegation.

I have never seen any logic in maintaining diplomatic relations with Russia, for instance, while refusing diplomatic relations with Spain. If there is any danger or threat in either one of them, it is certainly not very great in the case of Spain. I do not approve Spain's form of government. Neither do I approve Russia's form of government. But the Senator will understand that traditionally we have not required foreign governments to agree with our political concepts, as a basis either of recognition or of diplomatic representation. We maintained diplomatic relations with Japan when she was a totalitarian state under the edicts of the Emperor. We maintained relations with the old-time Czar in Russia. We have maintained relations with the present Government of Russia, notwithstanding its political and social concepts.

I may say to the Senator, however, that there is among certain foreign nations great bitterness toward Spain. I think it is pressure from those nations which has influenced our State Department and others to refuse recognition to Spain on an ambassadorial basis. We have our chargé d'affaires at Madrid, but that is not comparable to an ambassadorship.

There is an erroneous idea in the minds of some people. We do not maintain ambassadors in foreign countries for the benefit of those countries. We maintain the ambassadors for our benefit, in order to keep in touch with all the transactions that may occur, affecting our interests. We appoint ambassadors to serve the United States of America. I see no reason why Spain should be excluded from that category. So far as I know, Spain has committed no act of aggression against the United States and has expressed no hostility toward the people of the United States. Spain does not have our form of government, but that of course is their own business. It is the prerogative of the people of Spain to adopt whatever form of government they desire. Personally I see no reason why we should not have an ambassador at Madrid. Does that answer the Senator?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes. I have one more question. I assume the reference to other countries is presumably to Great Britain and France, who, Great Britain with its labor government and France with its somewhat socialistic government, have deprecated diplomatic relations with Spain and abstained, as we did, in the vote in the United Nations last week. I assume, and I should like to know whether the Senator is aware of it, that while we are carrying on trade relations with great difficulty with Spain as a result of this ban, Great Britain did $400,000,000 worth of business with Spain last year, and France did $100,000,000 worth of business with Spain last year. I saw it myself when I was there last September. They were carrying on apparently very normal and full trade relations. Would the Senator advise whether it seems consistent for these countries to discourage our having ambassadorial representation or trade relations with Spain, when they are carrying on such a vast volume of commercial traffic with Spain at this time?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator wants to know whether I regard that is inconsistent. I regard it as very consistent with their policy of building up trade in Europe to the exclusion of some of our trade. I think the Senator has accurately in mind the two countries to which I referred. Great Britain, I assume because of her labor government, is I understand very much opposed to recognition, by having ambassadors in Spain, and I assume the same thing is true of France. I may say to the Senator that recently people from my section have had great difficulty in transacting business with Spain along the line of exporting our cotton to that country. Spain normally is a large consumer of American cotton, but her credit standing is not of the highest, and we have been practically excluded from the Spanish market by reason of that situation.

I introduced a bill in the Congress to instruct the Export-Import Bank to investigate the matter and to make a determination. Pending the consideration of my bill, the State Department reversed itself, in a way, taking the position that the Export-Import Bank was free to do business with Spain in that regard, if it found the credit standing of Spain sufficient to justify it. So we are at least making progress along that line.

Mr. BREWSTER. Is it not a fact that under ECA we have furnished over $400,000,000 worth of cotton to other countries of Europe, and that meanwhile Spain has been obliged to go to Egypt to get her cotton from the sterling bloc, which indirectly is naturally financed by the American venture?

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator I am not advised as to the particular details, but I understand in a general way the Senator is correct in his statement.

Mr. BREWSTER. I want to express my very profound appreciation of the continuing courtesy of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in the very frank statement and very helpful statement which, in my judgment, he has made.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator very greatly for his kindness and generosity. The Senator from Texas, while not in possession of a great world of information and knowledge, is always glad to contribute whatever he can toward the views of Senators, and to the views of the Senate, because I assume we are all engaged in the very laudable enterprise of representing our own people and of advancing the interests of our own country.

Mr. BREWSTER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK rose.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I should like to continue briefly with the discussion, based to some extent on what the Senator from Texas has said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina desire to ask the Senator from Maine to yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. No. I thought perhaps the Senator had finished.

Mr. BREWSTER. No; I should like to proceed briefly. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial from the New York Times of this morning be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks. I refer to the editorial from which I have already read certain excerpts.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNITED NATIONS AND SPAIN

Late in 1946 the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted a resolution denouncing the Franco regime in Spain and calling upon all member states to withdraw the chiefs of their diplomatic missions from Madrid. Some member states promptly did so. Others have not done so, to this day. Now the political committee of the General Assembly has adopted a new resolution amending the 1946 declaration to the extent of leaving member states full freedom of action as regards their diplomatic relations with Spain. The vote on this resolution was 25 to 16. Most of the Latin-American nations supported it. The United States, Britain, France, and five other nations which are signatories to the new North Atlantic Pact abstained.

Our own Government's abstention on this vote presumably reflects a judgment that no great issue is involved in the question of restoring full diplomatic relations. To a large degree this is true. American opinion disapproves strongly of the totalitarian Franco regime. But American opinion also disapproves strongly of the totalitarian Stalin regime in Russia and of the totalitarian puppet regimes in all the satellite states. Yet we continue to maintain diplomatic relations with all these totalitarian governments and have, in fact, just appointed a new Ambassador to Moscow. If to Moscow, it may be asked, why not to Madrid? Certainly Franco isn't half as thorough or as efficient as Stalin in his destruction of the basic values of democracy; and, at the head of a weak and exhausted nation behind the Pyrenees, he is incomparably less of a menace to world peace than Stalin, with his mighty armies and demonstrated policy of territorial expansion and political penetration.

Whether we are represented in Madrid by an Ambassador or by some State Department official of lesser rank is not a question of great moment. We are confident, however, that our Government knows where to draw the line, and that it is no more prepared to strengthen a totalitarian of the right than it is to strengthen the more numerous totalitarians of the left. Specifically, in the case of Spain, this means no American loans to Franco and no attempt to bring Spain within the democratic framework of the North Atlantic Pact.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The distinguished Senator from Maine is familiar, I think, with the fact that in the meeting of the Appropriations Committee's Subcommittee on State, Justice, and Commerce, the other day, the Spanish question was discussed at some length, with the Secretary of State present. The Secretary of State was asked certain questions. Based upon that discussion, with which the Senator is familiar, does not the Senator feel that it is very inconsistent for this country to take the position that it cannot maintain full diplomatic relations with Spain, while at the same time it is maintaining such relations with countries like Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Russia, and many others?

Mr. BREWSTER. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire, whom do we think we are kidding when we take an attitude that we cannot have diplomatic relations with Spain and abstain from voting in the United Nations on the question when it arises there, although, as the Senator points out, we have relations with other countries? We make ourselves, in my judgment, perfectly ridiculous in the eyes of the world. What do most intelligent people of the world think of a country which sticks its head in the sand and thinks no one can see the utter inconsistency of the course being pursued?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, another question, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does it not seem odd to the Senator from Maine, if we are supposedly fighting communism all over the world and if communism is an international conspiracy, which I believe it to be, and I think any thoughtful citizen will recognize it as such, that we can be so tough in one place and so soft in another?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is very interesting to me that, throughout the period of the war, we were able to recognize Spain. There has already been inserted in the RECORD the very kindly and generous letter which the late President Roosevelt sent to Franco at the time of the African invasion. We kept an ambassador there. We know the entire origin of the move to sever diplomatic relations came from Moscow. There is no doubt regarding that. Moscow is the inspiration of the opposition at this time. Why must we be guided by a move so obviously inspired from Moscow? During the war we got along in the maintenance of relations with Chiang Kai-shek, in China. We had Hurley, Chennault, and Wedemeyer there, the Chinese people carried on the war, and Japan was defeated after 15 years of battle, so far as China was concerned. Following the end of the war we adopted the so-called soft policy to which the Senator has referred. Then Wedemeyer, Chennault, and Hurley were thrown into the discard, and there was followed in our State Department a policy which was implemented by a 10-month embargo on the shipment of arms to China and by 10 months of denial, following that, so that for 20 months the Chinese Government was not able to get American implementation in aid.

Meanwhile we have seen the situation in Manchuria and the catastrophe which has ensued. Is it not a rather curious and deadly parallel that the very same influences which led us down the path of destruction in the Chinese affair in the past 3 years are the very same forces which say we must have nothing to do with Franco Spain? What would be our situation if Franco had not prevailed? Suppose the Communist regime had triumphed? It is said that Hitler and Mussolini were back of Franco. Who was back of the republican regime in Spain? Has anyone ever challenged the statement that Stalin poured in Soviet power without limit in order to achieve a victory in that key spot of Europe which has been recognized as such for a century and a half, since the peninsula campaign of the British? Still we hear the same siren voice saying we must have nothing to do with Spain. Poland stands up as the Soviet's catspaw to demand that we shall continue the ban upon the recognition of Spain.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. When the United Nations was created and the distinguished Senator from Maine and myself, as well as many other Members of this body, were supporters of it, it was my hope and my thought that the United States of America would take the leadership in that great international organization for the things that were just, decent, and moral. When we saw the vote on Spain in the United Nations, where did the leadership come from? Did it come from my country? No; it came from little countries which had taken leadership on that great issue. My country, the most powerful in the world, which should have been taking the leadership, sat back with its arms folded and did not participate. I should like to ask the Senator if he can throw any light upon that situation.

Mr. BREWSTER. I can conceive of no more pitiful spectacle than that of the United States, which we thought was to lead the democratic world back to peace and security, standing silent while one of the most momentous issues was being decided, having no mind of its own, completely frustrated by the situation.

Mr. President, I think it is time we examined some of the reasons for that frustration, which are known to every Member of the Senate, however undesirable it may seem that they should be discussed. The subtle word is constantly passed that the alternative to communism is Catholicism. We know that word is uttered constantly in the lobbies, although Senators do not care to bring it out upon the floor. We are even told that some very distinguished members of the American delegation are those who are most earnest in their opposition to the recognition of Spain, because, forsooth, Spain is a Catholic country. It is high time that the American people decided to tear the mask from this situation.

Where will such a line of thought lead us? To what conclusion must it bring us? I think Mr. Stalin answered that question very well. As we contemplate the problem of war, the menace to all the things in which we believe, does anyone doubt? Does not the entire country ring with it? Are not the radio and the press filled with stories of the menace to our institutions from Moscow; that Moscow is the threat; that Moscow, as the New York Times says, is mobilizing? Let me again read the words of the New York Times editorial:

Yet we continue to maintain diplomatic relations with all these totalitarian governments and have, in fact, just appointed a new ambassador to Moscow. If to Moscow, it may be asked, why not to Madrid? Certainly

Franco isn't half as thorough or as efficient as Stalin in his destruction of the basic values of democracy; and, at the head of a weak and exhausted nation behind the Pyrenees, he is incomparably less of a menace to world peace than Stalin, with his mighty armies and demonstrated policy of territorial expansion and political penetration.

What did Stalin say on the famous occasion when there was abroad the suggestion that the Pope was seeking to establish peace in the world, dedicating himself to the leadership of the Prince of Peace? Stalin cynically inquired, "How many divisions has the Pope?"

I wonder if the Americans who defend our current policies have not as much realism as Stalin had in appraising the military menace of the influence of the Vatican in world affairs?

I think it is high time that the American people, not merely in the interest of our own self-respect, not merely in the interest of consistency in the conduct of our diplomatic relations, not merely in recognition of a century of tradition when we have recognized powers which have been so long established, but in the interest of our own security and progress toward the peace we all desire, should tear the mask from the subtle influences which now keep us silent and mute in the United Nations when it is to be determined whether diplomatic relations shall be normalized with the Government of Spain.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator believe that the public of the United States or the public of the world can have faith in our intentions if, when an issue such as this comes up in the United Nations, which is the assembly in which such matters are discussed, the representatives of his country and my country, the country of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], whom I see sitting before me, and of every other Member of this body, remain mute and let the ball be carried by some little countries of the world which do have moral character and moral courage? I simply do not see how the leadership in our country can expect us to have faith in their intentions when we are tough in one instance and soft in another, playing ball all around the lot.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think the eagle has been converted into a sparrow when we take such a position as we have taken in recent days.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Like other Senators who are not members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I am trying my best to put the many pieces of a very difficult jigsaw puzzle together.

If I understood the Senator from Texas several minutes ago, he said that within recent months, in the past several years, anyway, the State Department had authorized the Export-Import Bank to extend credits for the benefit of Spain.

Mr. BREWSTER. Within recent weeks.

Mr. CAIN. If that be so, how can it be true that such moneys could be loaned from a bank the capital of which has largely been contributed by this country, when this country refuses for one reason or another to establish and maintain diplomatic relations with Spain? To me that seems confounding contradiction.

Mr. BREWSTER. Our policy in this matter is controlled apparently by the United Nations, that is, that has been the story up to recently; we were merely complying with the resolution adopted by the United Nations 3 years ago.

Mr. CAIN. But that is certainly not so as today.

Mr. BREWSTER. That does not prohibit our carrying on certain relations, such as making a loan, which does not come within the inhibition. The provision simply was that we would withdraw our Ambassador. Now the question is before the United Nations. The vote was 25 to 16 in favor of restoring normal diplomatic relations, we remaining silent, along with 8 or 12 signatories of the North Atlantic Pact. That looks like a concert of action by Great Britain, France, and the United States.

Mr. CAIN. Does the distinguished Senator from Maine have a sound reason to offer as to why there was no evidence of spoken, articulate leadership, either for or against the resolution, on the part of our own representatives?

Mr. BREWSTER. The only explanation I have heard is that because of certain opinions within the Department and within the committee which represents us, because of certain strong feelings of certain members, and because of the attitudes of the labor governments of Britain and France, we decided that inaction was the better part of wisdom, and so we remained silent and unrecorded on an issue of such profound importance.

Last week I read in the press from Paris the statement of the republican government in exile of Spain that they did not want us to normalize diplomatic relations, because, they said, "If you will simply keep up the embargo for a little while longer, the Franco government will fall, and we will take over—we will be restored to power." In other words, the same Communist influences that have come to dominate China in large measure are to be reestablished with their direct connection with Moscow; because no one has ever denied the intimate relationship between the republican regime in Spain and the Moscow government. Instantly Moscow would have established a toehold upon the most important piece of land on the continent of Europe.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Would the Senator from Maine agree that before we take any positive action on what is known as the North Atlantic Pact we ought to consider seriously reestablishing diplomatic relations with Spain, if our sincere and deep desire is to create in the North Atlantic Pact the concert of nations which has the very best chance of preventing world war III, or of winning such a war if it comes?

Mr. BREWSTER. Irrespective of the North Atlantic Pact, I believe that diplomatic relations with Spain should be immediately normalized. I believe it would tremendously reinforce the entire significance of the North Atlantic Pact if our relations with Spain were once again normal. Whatever else is charged against Franco, no one has ever suspected him of having any Communist leanings, which is more than can be said of many of those who insidiously argue at this time that we should adopt another course.

Mr. CAIN. Let me put the question in another form. If Spain does not become a member of the North Atlantic Pact, is it the Senator's opinion that whatever that pact may be, in the absence of Spain it will necessarily be much weaker, and have less chance of achieving its objectives, than if Spain were part and parcel of it?

Mr. BREWSTER. That is in the realm, to some extent, of military strategy, on which I would certainly not presume to speak with authority, but I never heard anyone challenge the idea that the Iberian Peninsula was one of the most strategic spots to be found on the entire globe.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I should like to propound a question regarding the consistency of our policy toward Europe and the world. Lately we have heard much about what happened to the cardinal in Hungary.

Mr. BREWSTER. Cardinal Mindszenty?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes, Cardinal Mindszenty. Notwithstanding our complaints about what was done to the good cardinal, though Spain has never done such a thing, we still have diplomatic relations and an Ambassador in the country where the good cardinal was persecuted, but because of Russia's influence with France and Italy and England, we still do not have an ambassador to Spain. I cannot see the consistency of the policy. I say this in all sincerity, without agreeing with many things under the Franco government. As the Senator has stated, if any government has fought communism, it has been the government of Spain under the present regime. Hence, I cannot see any reason for helping France when her soldiers are killing Chinese in China, or helping the Dutch to put a dictatorship in Java, and at the same time saying, "We do not like the Franco government, so we will withdraw our ambassador."

Mr. BREWSTER. I thank the Senator from New Mexico very much. We still have an Ambassador to Hungary, although we have called him home for consultation. But there has never been a proposal that we should withdraw the Ambassadors in the United Nations from Hungary and the other countries which have persecuted Cardinal Mindszenty, and the Protestant leaders as well. All the countries behind the iron curtain and the Soviet Government in Moscow are still carrying on perfectly normal diplomatic relations with us.

I think we are deeply indebted to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations for his extremely frank statement about this matter. It would appear that it is the overwhelming sentiment of this body, if I may judge by the expressions from various parts of the country, that our policy should be very seriously reexamined, and that without delay.

Mr. MAYBANK rose.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does the Senator from South Carolina desire to ask a question?

Mr. MAYBANK. No; I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. BREWSTER. I shall conclude very shortly. I have had this matter very much on my mind.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so I may make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] asked that the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside so he might send a matter to the desk to be read by the clerk and to be debated upon the floor. Reserving the right to object, because I feel very much the same as does the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Maine respecting the matter, I acquiesced. I wonder if there would be objection to having the debate on this issue follow completion of action on the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill? I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, is the Senator asking that we defer our discussion?

Mr. MAYBANK. No. I ask unanimous consent that the discussion of the matter now before us, in which many Senators have taken part, shall be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following completion of action on the Treasury-Post Office bill, so that the record of the proceedings of the Senate on the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill appear at one place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TAYLOR in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent request is agreed to. Of course, if action on the bill is not completed today, that is another matter.

Mr. BREWSTER. I assume the request did not go to the extent of applying beyond today, since we would certainly wish the remarks now being made to be included in today's RECORD.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Maine is eminently correct. The order entered into yesterday, following the unanimous-consent agreement then reached, provided that if action on the Treasury-Post Office bill was not completed today, the Senate would resume consideration of the District of Columbia sales-tax bill.

Mr. BREWSTER. So the request of the Senator from South Carolina is that the remarks now being made in connection with Spain shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the close of today's session, or immediately following completion of action on the Treasury-Post Office bill, if that shall occur today?

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous consent request made by the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, it was my good fortune last year, on returning from the Interparliamentary Union in Rome, to visit in Madrid for a week. I have not previously discussed what I there observed, but what I learned there has given me increasing concern as I have seen the deadly parallel with what happened in China under our policies of what is threatened by the possible unsettling of our relations in Europe as the result of our attitude toward Spain.

I talked with those of our embassy who remained in Madrid. They naturally were not in a position to take issue with the policies which we were pursuing, although at that time, in September 1948, it was fully and confidently expected that relations would once again become normal, because there was no responsible authority in Madrid associated with our embassy or affairs who did not privately say that our policy had been an utter failure, and who was not tremendously concerned because of the obvious attempts of our British and French allies to establish their trade relations while we were suffering under the difficulties resulting from the ban. At the very time I was there France and Britain were urging our Government not to favor relations and not to resume relations with Spain.

It came home to me especially—while I was not so much aware of the cotton difficulty, a crop we do not raise in the State of Maine—that in the matter of aviation the Spanish regime was intensely desirous of normalizing our aviation relationship. Spain is the natural door to the Mediterranean and to much of southern Europe. Spain had much desired the resumption of normal relations in connection with aviation. We were developing a great program of service for our aviation activities around the world. We were seeking the adoption of American methods very generally throughout the world in order that in any future operations, in peace or in war, there should be no difficulties or delays as a result of the diversity of equipment in the Air Force. And Spain was intensely desirous of securing American equipment, both in planes and in the ground services, which are the indispensable auxiliary of the operation of our Air Force. Yet that could not be done as the result of the policies which we were following, while England was there at that time seeking not only to sell but to force the Spaniards to take British outmoded equipment, both in planes and in ground services, in order to get rid, apparently, of the equipment which they knew was not going to be useful in the future.

Forgetting all about the commercial aspects of this question, which are not of such great significance in view of the other problem involved, I ask what of the security of America? What of the operation of our Air Force? I wonder what the aviation directors of our military forces would say regarding this matter? I wonder if their voice has been heeded in connection with the attitude of the State Department upon this score—whether or not the Department has considered the significance of our attitude with respect to our future security in the event of the development of the Moscow menace until it shall result actually in an attack and an aggression. These are the questions which I have pondered throughout the winter.

Our chargé d'affaires came home. We were repeatedly told throughout the past 5 months that it was expected we would support in the United Nations the proposal of certain other countries to normalize relations with Spain. Senators will remember that all through the fall and winter we were told that the United States would not take an active voice, but would support the proposition when it was presented. That was the story right up to one week ago. I wonder whether or not the subtle gentlemen who conduct our diplomatic activities had in mind that they desired to keep the Voice of America silent, that we were to stand mute when that issue was presented, and not dare to open our mouths?

We have heard from the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who has said that he was utterly out of sympathy with this policy from the very start. We have not heard from the other members of the Foreign Relations Committee, but we have heard from many Members of the Senate in private and in public. We have heard from every American, practically without exception, who has visited Spain. Members of this body and other distinguished Americans whose judgment is certainly entitled to some respect, I think, are all of one accord.

What is the subtle and sinister influence that forbids us to take a stand upon the simple and definite question of whether or not in the United Nations in the next day or two we shall stand up and be counted and say that if we can have an ambassador in Moscow we can certainly safely have an ambassador in Madrid? How long must we listen to the influence of London and Paris, who meanwhile carry on their business in full force behind a diplomatic screen, while we here in America are told it would be a great mistake to have an ambassador in Madrid?

If I read the newspapers rightly our Secretary of State was quoted as saying that it was not of very much significance whether we had an ambassador there or not. Does he think that the American people are so simple as that? Does he not know, through his vast experience in diplomacy, that there is a very considerable difference? If there is no difference, why do we not have an Ambassador in Madrid? Moscow seems to think it is of very great significance. The Polish representatives seem to think it is of very great significance. Why all the furor if it does not mean anything whether we have an ambassador or not? I think any who have the slightest association with international affairs know that the position of an ambassador is very different from that of a chargé d'affaires; that the ambassador can go freely to the chief of state and the foreign minister, while the chargé d'affaires cannot visit the one, and can with great difficulty have access to the other, so long as we pursue a course such as we are now following.

As the Senator from Texas, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, pointed out, we maintain ambassadors in foreign countries, not for their benefit, but for our own. Why do we have an ambassador in Moscow? I trust it is not in order to serve the Soviet. It is in the hope that he may learn something about what is going on. Then why should we not have an ambassador in Madrid, to advise us—not because of Spain, but because of America and all the vital interests which are represented in this land. That is why I believe that an hour of the time of the Senate could be well spent learning at first hand something of the reasons.

I trust that the frank expression of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will ring not only across this country, but overseas in the chancelleries of England and France, serving notice that the American people no longer desire to have our vital interests subordinated to the machinations of those who, either because of their ideology or their selfish commercial interests, desire longer to delay the action for which the American people should now be fully prepared.

EVACUATION OF REFUGEES FROM SHANGHAI

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a communication that I received on February 24 from the State Department relative to the so-called White Russian refugees in the city of Shanghai, and to ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. George L. Warren, the Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons in the Department of State.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 24, 1949.

The Honorable WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: I have received your letter of February 15, 1949, concerning the evacuation of refugees from Shanghai.

According to the latest information received by the Department of State, 3,082 refugees had been evacuated to the Philippines by February 19, 1949. Of these, 99 were evacuated by two air flights in January and 791 by 17 air flights in February. The remainder were evacuated by boat. It is now expected that an additional thousand will be evacuated by boat to the Philippines by February 28, 1949.

In addition to the evacuation to the Philippines, 150 refugees were evacuated by three air flights to Japan in December, 45 by one air flight to Sydney, Australia, and 240 by four air flights to Haifa in January. Three thousand two hundred refugees have also been removed by boat either directly to Naples, Italy, for on-shipment to Palestine, or to San Francisco for transit through the United States and on-shipment to Palestine from the port of New York. The total of all refugees evacuated to date is 6,717.

The Department of State is following very closely the effort of the International Refugee Organization to complete the evacuation of endangered refugees from Shanghai and is extending every possible cooperation in this effort.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE L. WARREN,
Adviser on Refugees and Displaced Persons.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, since the IRO has been evacuating these refugees, they have moved 5,723 White Russians to the island of Samar in the Philippines, and over 4,000 Jewish refugees have been removed to Israel.

As of information received yesterday there remained in the Shanghai area, I am informed, some five hundred to two thousand White Russians, who wish to be evacuated to the island of Samar to get out of the way of the Communist forces closing in on Shanghai. This figure is rather widespread, because communication from Shanghai to the rest of the world is uncertain. The estimate of the State Department is that between 500 and 2,000 Russians are still in Shanghai, and would like to get out. I think that every Member of the Senate can recognize the fact that these people were driven out of their home country during the Bolshevik revolution in 1917, following the fall of the so-called Kerensky government, had finally wound up in Peiping, Tientsin, Shanghai, and other Chinese cities. There are many of them who, I believe, for good reasons fear that if the Chinese Communists finally take Shanghai they may be delivered into the hands of the Russian Communist forces, and for many of them that will result in their execution or servitude in Siberian prison camps.

It seems to me that this Government and the IRO have considerable responsibility to see to it that none of these people who want to get out of the clutches of the Communists shall be allowed to fall into their hands. If we do not have adequate facilities, either commercial plane, or shipping facilities, to get them out before Shanghai falls, there is some obligation on the part of both the IRO and the United States to get these people away from there by some means.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks there be printed an article written by Maj. Gen. D. P. Barrows, former president of the University of California, republished in the Chinese-Russian Gazette of Shanghai, dealing with the problems faced by these refugees.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The United States Senator KNOWLAND from California has introduced in the Senate a bill requesting a change in the law on the DP's which was enacted in 1948 and which stipulated the admission to the United States of 8,000 persons of Russian descent, living at present in China, whose life and freedom are endangered now due to the spread of communism. These people are the remainder of a very large colony of Russians, who escaped across Siberia in 1918 from communism in Russia, finding temporary refuge in Harbin and then in Shanghai.

Heads of some of these Russian families were former officers of the Russian army, others belonged to the aristocratic circle.

However a great percentage of these people belong to the middle class; they possessed a varying degree of wealth, which they had accumulated through hard work and as a result of the education they had received under the old regime. Nevertheless, in the Marxian jargon they are all called "bourgeois." A great number of the people of this category were executed or simply brutally murdered at the time of the terror after the seizure of power by the Bolsheviks in 1917.

The more fortunate, however, were able to escape into the neighboring countries of Russia, primarily into the Far East. Now again they are threatened by the Red revolution.

What will happen to them in case they shouldn't be able to go further? Their destiny, probably, is tragic, especially as they are hated by the Bolsheviks, and the Communists will never be satisfied until they attain their goal.

Several years ago Moscow offered "amnesty" to the Russians if they returned. Many Russians were so lonesome for their native land that many accepted this offer of the Bolsheviks because of this feeling.

We do not know the fate of those who went back, but one of the most outspoken leaders of the anti-Communist movement, Ataman Semenov, fell into a trap of the Bolsheviks. The author of this article has participated as a military observer in Semenov's military operations in the Transbaikal province. Together with the Ataman there were six or seven of his officers, and all of them were, after a widely publicized "trial of the white guards," publicly hanged in Red Moscow in 1946.

The IRO has already transferred some of the Russians to the Philippine Islands, where they are able to remain for a limited time. Senator KNOWLAND's bill concerning admission of Russians into the United States of America is limited to persons who for "political reasons" left Russia in the period between October 1917 and January 1925. He would further exclude those who applied for Soviet citizenship or who accepted USSR citizenship and did not renounce it until January 1 of this year.

The present exodus of Russians out of China reminds us of the memorable days of the great flight of the Russians in the years 1918 and 1919, which the author of this article has personally observed during his stay in Siberia. General Barrows was sent to Siberia for the first time exactly 30 years ago in order to make an appraisal of the military situation and in August he joined the American Expeditionary Forces in Siberia.

The number of persons anxious to run from the terrors of the Bolsheviks was then particularly large; there were hundreds of thousands of them.

They were all temporarily settled along the Siberian railway and the adjacent Eastern Chinese railway, where they lived in very great hardship.

The people were housed mainly in passenger and freight cars.

With the approach of cold weather one could always observe puffs of smoke from the stoves of the cars.

Fortunately in those years there was an abundance of foodstuffs in Siberia. The harvest was enormous and due to the impossibility of exports to Russia large supplies of grain were stored in Siberia. Fresh butter prepared for exportation and packed in barrels was so plentiful that it was used for lubrication.

At every station and railway siding peasant women were selling eggs, roasted poultry, and wild fowl. A great amount of tea was stored which had been obtained chiefly from China via Mongolia. In any case the refugees were able to make a living.

The author knows among the Russians a large number of people who have a very good education.

The author had never had a chance to meet so many interesting people as these Russians; many of them, however, died during the last 30 years.

But those who remained alive are the people for whom Senator KNOWLAND is pleading and for whom he asks admission to the United States. Their admission to America will make it possible to achieve the goal for which the world is striving at present.

They will do no harm to the Americans. On the contrary, we will benefit from them.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement relative to the White Russians in China.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHITE RUSSIANS IN CHINA

1. BACKGROUND

Prior to the collapse of the Czarist and Kerensky regimes in Russia, the number of Russians in China proper (excluding the Manchurian and Sinkiang border areas) was small. Shanghai, for example, had scarcely a half-dozen Russian families.

During the winter of 1918–19, however, a vanguard of White Russian emigrés arrived in that city. It was composed of adherents of the non-Communist White Russian regimes who had escaped the spreading Red power in European Russia and Siberia. In 1923, a large contingent of White Russian officers with their families, retainers, and supporters reached Shanghai by ship from Vladivostok. Others came overland by way of the Manchurian and North China railroads. Most of the refugees settled in Shanghai but Russian colonies also sprang up in Peiping, Tientsin, and other cities. An estimated 35,000 emigrés were in China by the mid-twenties. A final wave arrived after the seizure of Manchuria by the Japanese.

Many of the refugees did not remain in China but reemigrated to the Americas or to Australia. Others became Chinese citizens. A large number, however, remained stateless, enjoying whatever protection was afforded by the International Settlement in Shanghai and the various other foreign concessions.

The main White Russian colony, located in Shanghai, found an economic niche for itself between the high, privileged position of the Europeans and Americans and the low status of the mass of Chinese inhabitants. Despite the aristocratic heritage which so many of them possessed, the Russians plunged into manual work. Many became doormen, elevator operators, chauffeurs, and bodyguards. Some opened small businesses. The Shanghai Government enlisted a paid battalion of Russians into the city's volunteer corps and employed emigrés in the police force. Not a few found a place in Shanghai's vast night-club and entertainment industry.

After the Japanese seizure of the International Settlement in 1941 a lot of the White Russians became increasingly difficult. Although they were not interned as were Allied nationals, their employment opportunities were sharply curtailed.

At the end of the war the fortunes of the White Russians took a turn for the better due to UNRRA operations and the presence of a large body of United States forces in Shanghai. The prosperity resulting from the job opportunities thus created was short-lived, however, and the situation of the Russians once again became precarious.

2. RELATIONS WITH THE U. S. S. R.

Early in 1946 the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics announced that it would extend national status to those White Russians desiring it. The amnesty was offered seemingly without strings. In order to obtain Soviet citizenship, the émigrés were merely required to apply at the nearest consulate, pay an 11-ruble fee, submit passport photos, and answer routine questions.

The reactions of the White Russian community were mixed. Die-hards labeled it a trick to lure them back to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for liquidation. At the other extreme pro-Soviet refugees regarded the offer as a gesture of Stalin's supreme magnanimity. Many of the refugees—a good percentage of whom had been born in China and had never been in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics—were inclined to look upon the move with favor. Their antipathy for the Reds, nurtured by their elders, had mellowed considerably as a result of the Allied victory, and they wanted desperately the security and stability of a fixed nationality.

At the time the offer was made there were between 12,000 and 16,000 Russians living in Shanghai and several thousands more in Peiping and Tientsin.[1] More than half the community in Shanghai registered for Soviet citizenship. Later, the U. S. S. R. agreed to repatriate on a voluntary basis, those Russians desiring to leave China. Several thousands sought to return. The repatriation movement got under way during the summer of 1947. Letters from the first repatriates are reported to have dampened the initial enthusiasm for Soviet citizenship. These told of difficult living conditions prevalent in the U. S. S. R. and hinted at political oppression.

Some White Russians renounced their newly acquired status and reverted to the status of stateless persons.

3. WHITE RUSSIANS AS PROSPECTIVE CITIZENS

According to an article in the Christian Science Monitor, December 31, 1948, of the White Russians who made no attempt to take advantage of the Soviet amnesty of 1946, 4,390 are extremely anxious to emigrate to the United States. About 600 of these are in real fear that their lives will be endangered should the Chinese Communists seize the city. The break-down given by the Monitor of the 4,390 is as follows:

Men	1,506
Women	2,021
Children	863
Total	4,390

It is assumed that prospective emigrants to the United States would come from this group.

As prospective citizens of the United States the White Russians, on the whole, possess qualifications which compare favorably with those of other groups. Most of the younger men and women have had schooling and speak English fluently. They are almost universally anxious to tie their loyalties to a country which will offer them a real sense of belonging.

Their survival in the intensely competitive and frequently hostile environment of Shanghai is testimony to their economic potentialities. Not a few of them are skilled mechanics and technicians whose services should be readily usable in this country.

The people have strong spiritual qualities. During their stay of a quarter of a century in Shanghai, they have built and maintained about a dozen Orthodox Russian Churches. They have also demonstrated a willingness to care for the indigent and the sick of their community through cooperative charitable undertakings.

[1] A valid estimate for all of China proper is not available.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished minority leader to advise the Senate whether he thinks we shall be able to get a vote on the amendments to the appropriation bill tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. In answer to the distinguished acting majority leader, and the Senator who is in charge of the appropriation bill, I will say that I had already told the distinguished majority leader it was my feeling that the Senate was ready to vote on the motion before the Senate, and there would be two motions made after that. I am quite satisfied I can assure the acting majority leader at this time that it will not require any great length of time to dispose of the motions to be made. I told the majority leader at the time he inquired that I thought we might run until 7 o'clock tonight. I know I can assure the Senator that there is no disposition to delay a vote on the bill or on the amendments, and I am satisfied that the cooperation tomorrow will be such that we can conclude the appropriation bill and continue with the District of Columbia sales-tax bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. If we take a recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow, I am wondering if the Senator would agree with me that probably between 2 and 3 o'clock we might finish the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I would not enter into an agreement with regard to it.

Mr. MAYBANK. No; I do not ask that.

Mr. WHERRY. But at this point I do not see why we cannot dispose of it before 3 o'clock, unless something should develop. I do not anticipate that anything will develop to interfere.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, last evening we made a unanimous-consent request, which was stated to the Senate this morning, to the effect that the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill would be deferred if we did not finish it today. I have discussed the matter with the chairman of the District Committee, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH], and we have reached an agreement. I think we should carry on with the appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 11, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 10 (legislative day of April 11), 1949:

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS

Leo E. Trombly, of Altona, N. Y., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 7, with headquarters at Ogdensburg, N. Y. (Reappointment.)

Clara E. Sarvela, of Duluth, Minn., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 36, with headquarters at Duluth, Minn. (Reappointment.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of Hosts, Thou whose ways are past finding out, we fervently pray Thee to guide us in all those things that make for godliness in thought and action. Make us deeply just and serious in all our deliberations, and empty of every selfish and ignoble desire.

More and more we would learn that mercy is more divine than reason, that truth is greater than fiction, that reality surpasses all dreams, and that goodness will ever outlive greatness. Grant that we may meet the future unafraid, sustained and nourished by the mercy and love of an infinite God. Stir and direct our wills to do Thy will as it is done in heaven. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

J. EDGAR HOOVER

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this day marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the appointment of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover as Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation by the late Harlan Fiske Stone, who was then Attorney General.

In the shifting sands of Washington officialdom, 25 years is a long period of time for one man to be the executive head of an agency which with each passing year has grown in importance to the security of America.

But as the FBI has grown, so has the stature of its illustrious Director, whose name in the minds of our people is virtually synonymous with the agency he directs. The record of Mr. Hoover's great service is a record of rare ability, of undying devotion to duty, of integrity, of outstanding achievement in the field of law enforcement. He has built an agency which enjoys the confidence and the high esteem of all our people.

With the alarming infiltration of subversive influences in our Government in recent years, the people of America feel reassured that the agency which is charged with uncovering these evil forces is directed by a real American, a great American.

Mr. Hoover has rejected many remunerative offers in private life in order to continue with the work he cherishes—the service of the United States. His kind of self-sacrifice represents the highest ideal of public service.

On his twenty-fifth anniversary, Mr. Hoover merits the commendation and the gratitude of the American people. Personally, I congratulate him and wish for him many more years of outstanding service for the land he loves.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I wish to concur in everything the gentleman from Massachusetts has had to say about J. Edgar Hoover. As a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I was associated with Mr. Hoover for many years. I regard him as one of our greatest living Americans. I wish the FBI were an independent agency so that he could do his great work without restriction.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentlewoman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to join in paying tribute to the Honorable J. Edgar Hoover and thank him on this anniversary for the tremendous work that he has done in apprehending criminals and in saving our country from many new and horrible crimes. We cannot repay him for his tireless, unselfish work in good citizenship as well as for the more dramatic efforts. I believe few really know of his many activities or the wide scope of his successes.

Mr. WILSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WILSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I join in congratulating Mr. Hoover on this anniversary of the FBI for the wonderful work that he has done. I hope and pray it may continue.

HOOVER COMMISSION PROPOSALS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the need to cut Federal spending and reduce the size of government cannot be argued. Not only is the Federal Government's operation cumbersome, but it is needlessly costing more billions than our economy can stand.

The Commission to reorganize our Government, often referred to as the Hoover Commission, has made a thorough study and presented recommendations for reducing the Federal Government's size, preventing duplication, eliminating obsolescence and saving the taxpayer an estimated $3,500,000,000 annually.

The Commission's recommendations must be carried out. I am ready to take my full responsibility in support of the Hoover Commission's proposals. I say this realizing that some agencies which in my opinion have done an excellent job may be affected by such reorganization. However, the survival of our economy and the solvency of this Government are the paramount considerations.

Let us have reorganization and economy first and then attention can be given to any gross errors that may have resulted.

I hope the reorganization plans will be accepted.

FRANCO SPAIN

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Speaker, it is a world-wide relief to the sincere statesmen of the world that the Political Committee of the United Nations General Assembly has finally undertaken to allot to Spain the consideration due her in the society of nations and the formulation of the world peace that is yet to come. The editor of the News of May 9, 1949, of Washington, D. C., has stated Spain's case in these words:

FRANCO SPAIN

The Political Committee of the United Nations General Assembly has voted, 25 to 16, in favor of lifting the 1946 ban on the appointment of ambassadors and ministers to the Franco government in Spain. The question now goes to the General Assembly for final action, and the issue there is in doubt.

Representatives on the committee of the United States and 15 other nations did not vote either way. However, if we duck the issue again in the General Assembly, our refusal to vote will be counted against the proposal, which requires a two-thirds majority for approval.

Our Government initiated the original boycott resolution against Spain. That mistake should be acknowledged by joining in the movement for its repeal.

Franco's government isn't our kind of government, but that is not the test. If we exchanged diplomats only with those nations of which we approved in every particular, we would be doing business in a very restricted world.

Spain is under a dictatorship, yes. The Soviet Union, Poland, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, and Czechoslovakia—with all of which we have full diplomatic relations—also are under dictatorships.

Franco attained power by revolution—by force and violence. So did the other dictatorships. So did several Latin-American governments to which we have extended full recognition.

Franco's particular crime is that he gained control of Spain with the assistance of Hitler and Mussolini. But that was a case of dog eat dog. Stalin's international brigades were fighting on the other side. If they had won, we probably would have a Communist Spain today. Would that be good?

We voted to boycott Spain in 1946 largely as a sop to the Soviet Union. In doing so, we ignored the fact that Spain had not been guilty of attacks on any other nation, which was more than could be said of Russia. After Hitler and Mussolini helped Franco, he did nothing to help them.

Franco has shown every evidence that he desires to live at peace with the rest of the world. His country is one of the bastions against communism and occupies a strategic area vital to us and the other members of the North Atlantic group.

Our Government should vote to lift this foolish boycott.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOLLING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a column by Thomas L. Stokes.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution of the City Council of Chicago.

MINE INCENTIVE-PAYMENTS BILL

Mr. BARING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks and include a newspaper article from Lovelock (Nev.) Review Miner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARING. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Public Lands Committee, it has been my privilege to work on the Murray-Engle mine incentive-payments bill, H. R. 976. I have sat through extensive hearings on this measure and have heard the history of similar bills previously reported by the committee. I am appalled by the differences in viewpoint between the members of the committee, reflecting the needs of the country, and the Government agencies, reflecting the opinions of I know not whom. I find my colleagues willing and able to get into a spirit of compromise. I find representatives of the Government taking the attitude that they know better than the elected representatives of the people what is best for those people and, further, asking for dictatorial powers and refusing to compromise.

In spite of all this, Mr. Speaker, the Mining Subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands has reported a bill which seems to fairly represent all points of view. While waiting for the cooperation of the agency—in this case the Interior Department—which, by the way never was had, months of valuable time have been lost. Though our procuring agencies have made desperate attempts to fill our stock piles from foreign sources, information before the committee indicates small success. In the meantime mines in my State of Nevada and elsewhere are shutting down in ever increasing numbers and decreasing the chance of obtaining critical and strategic minerals and metals where it is easiest and safest to get them—practically in our own back yard.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot square the attitude of the Interior Department with what is happening to the mining industry and with stock-pile requirements, which remain very great. Not only are we foregoing the stock piling of present production, but we may lose permanently the reserves in some of the mines now being shut down. From the national defense standpoint the situation is nothing short of criminal.

When H. R. 976 comes to the floor of this House—and this should be soon—I trust it will have the full support of the administration. If it does not, I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that there is somewhere in the Government a fatal lack of rapport between the people and their administrators, which should be brought to the attention of the President.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

[Mr. JENSEN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE LEAP FROM PATRONAGE TO PURGE

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, the newspapers and the radio this morning bring us up to date on the latest whim in the will of the man in the White House.

Last week the President used the threat of a withdrawal of patronage from members of the Democratic Party who do not follow his dictates. And he quickly whipped his national chairman into line to enforce the threat against southern Democrats.

Now it appears that the President wants to go further—a lot further. He takes a jump from patronage to purge.

He tells a group of White House callers that there are too many Byrds—B-y-r-d-s—in Congress. And he further stipulates just the kind of Congressmen he wants, namely, only those who think and vote his way.

The challenge of a purge threat was quickly accepted by the Senator from Virginia, who refuses any part of White House dictatorship, and who has strongly opposed the Truman program of high taxes, big spending, and socialization of the Government and the people.

Now, this leap from patronage to purge clearly indicates that the President is planning a third-term attempt.

He cannot purge the Virginia Senator until 1953, and he cannot purge if he is not around, so it looks like he is getting set for the race in 1952.

And it may be, Mr. Speaker, that the patronage-to-purge maneuver will turn out to be quite a hurdle, and the warbles from the mocking birds—b-i-r-d-s—in Congress will not be sweet to his ears.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

[Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts addressed the House. Her remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence, entitled "Railroad Mail Rates Called Subsidy for Federal Government."

Mr. COLE of New York (at the request of Mr. ARENDS) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a statement.

Mr. MACY. Mr. Speaker, following up the comments permitted in the RECORD a week ago Monday, May 2, on the subject of the Hulbert Flag, I now ask unanimous consent to include further remarks on Flag Day, just ahead of us on June 14, and include a Flag Day address that I made several years ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial, The Battle of Hollywood, from the Fortnight magazine.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. HAYS of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. HOWELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. TAURIELLO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article from the Buffalo Evening News.

Mr. DENTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein two resolutions, one passed by the Common Council of the city of Evansville, and one by the United Labor Group of Evansville.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an article on the first woman ambassador from India.

THE J. EDGAR HOOVER FOUNDATION

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, in the course of my service on the Judiciary Committee over a period of 16 years, it has been my privilege to come to know, respect, and admire J. Edgar Hoover, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Today marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of his appointment to that position and I cannot let the occasion pass without voicing tribute to the man and to his many good works. Mr. Hoover is more than a faithful public servant and an honest, vigilant and fearless law-enforcement officer; he is a force for good in the whole community of our Nation.

In building the FBI into a vital instrument in the constant war against crime, in establishing the bureau as the key link in America's chain of internal security against subversive elements, he has at the same time elevated the G-Man into a character beloved by our youth. Today the FBI Special Agent has come to mean in their minds what the plumed knight of ancient chivalry represented when you and I were boys.

The growth of this conception has served to make crime and criminals unpopular not only in the public mind, but particularly with our youth, who are the citizens of tomorrow.

This is a notable achievement in itself and one whose value as a deterrent to crime is immeasurable in normal terms of statistics. Nevertheless, juvenile delinquency still remains a major problem in the Nation.

But the greatest present need is for a national, continuing agency, to advise and guide communities, to coordinate the efforts in different regions, to correlate the experiences of one community and apply the lessons learned to a comparable area, to help plan specific programs of youth development, and give counsel and help in trying to eliminate poor housing and other conditions which stand in the way of such programs.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I propose the creation by this Congress of a national foundation to study and combat juvenile delinquency; and I further propose that it be officially designated "The J. Edgar Hoover Foundation" in honor of the man whose quarter of a century of service as Director of the FBI represents the greatest individual contribution to this cause. All of which is embodied in the bill I now offer.

I feel this would be only a fitting tribute on the part of this Government, in recognition of a public service already acknowledged by the conferring of honorary degrees by many colleges and universities and by many other organizations and publications.

MME. VIJAYA LAKSHMI PANDIT

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the House to the fact that yesterday there arrived in our Nation's Capital a distinguished representative of a new and great sovereign nation, India, and we mark the arrival in Washington of the first woman ambassador to the United States from that great and friendly power. As the chief member of her country's delegation to the United Nations General Assembly in 1946, a great record for human rights and liberal thought in government was established by this distinguished, beautiful, and gracious lady, the sister of the Prime Minister of the sovereign nation of India.

We wish her Embassy much success and we feel certain her fine intelligence, wide experience, and full knowledge of world problems will be of assistance not only to India but to our Nation as well.

ATHEISM

Mr. SABATH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the Catholic Church has for years been in the forefront of those who battle for justice for labor and for all social justice. Likewise the Catholic Church has been and is a leader in the world-wide fight against communism and its godless creed of atheism.

Over last week end His Eminence Pope Pius XII, in a talk to a group of Catholic businessmen and also through an editorial in the Vatican newspaper, took occasion to denounce some of the evils of capitalism.

The newspaper L'Osservatore Romano blasted the selfishness of capitalism and called it a parasite which grows progressively and prevents expansion of the number of persons who can benefit from wealth, according to the New York Herald Tribune. The New York Times report directly quoted the editorial as saying that the spirit of capitalism was fundamentally more atheistic than "communism which, as an economic system, does not run counter to the nature of Christian doctrine as strongly as capitalism."

"Capitalism," the Times further quoted the Vatican newspaper, "is atheistic in its structure; gold is its god." It defined capitalism as substantially greedy.

The supreme pontiff in his talk to the businessmen said that the position of employers and workers is not that of irreconcilable antagonists but of collaborators in a common task in which both profited from the national economy.

They eat, so to speak at the same table—

Said the Pope—

since they live, in the last resort, from the net global profit of the national economy. Each of them draws his pay and hence their mutual relationship should not make either the servant of the other.

All this is clear, consistent, and reasonable. It is in line with deep philosophical conclusions of His Holiness, whose statesmanship and humanitarianism have been proven over the years.

Yet, in this connection, we read in the RECORD of yesterday a denunciation of the Pope's views by my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], who saw fit to deplore the truthful and courageous statements of His Eminence. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] went so far as to interpret them as a sign of appeasement of communism.

I do not read such an interpretation into this interview. The Pope in his every move and every utterance has carried the fight against communism to every part of the world. He asks no quarter and gives none.

Yet, unlike my friend and colleague from Georgia, he does not at the same time blind himself to the evils of capitalism. He does not consider that by pointing out these evils in our own system we are surrendering to the Communist system or embracing it.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] should by now have come to the realization that the surest and best methods of preserving capitalism as the system of economy and democracy as our political way of life is to cure it of its defects. Likewise that the surest and best method of encouraging communism is to continue the abuses of capitalism. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], instead of providing a defense for the capitalistic group, should lend his capable efforts to the cause of labor as well.

I concur in the statements of Pope Pius XII, and in this connection, I ask leave to insert articles appearing in the New York Times of May 8, 1949, and in the Washington Post on May 8 and May 10, and a statement which I prepared some time ago, but which due to my illness I was unable to deliver on the floor. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a statement which I have, entitled "Pope Pius XII and 10 Momentous Years in the Papacy."

POPE PIUS LAUDS LABOR AS PAPER BLASTS CAPITALISM

ROME, May 7.—Pope Pius XII told a group of European businessmen today that workers have a right to a "just share in responsibility for industrial development."

The pontiff's words coincided with publication of a fierce denunciation of capitalism in the Vatican's daily newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano.

The Vatican paper said that communism shorn of its atheism, would be less un-Christian than capitalism. Instead of the Catholic Church being an ally of capitalism, as some have charged, the fact is that catholicism long has considered capitalism a cancer at least as much a "sin against nature" as artificial birth control, the Vatican paper said.

The editorial called capitalism a parasite which grows progressively and prevents expansion of the number of persons who can benefit from wealth.

Pope Pius told the businessmen the solution he had in mind would call for a great spirit of unselfishness on part of employers.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Post of May 10, 1949]

POPE HOLDS RIGHTS OF STATE LIMITED

ROME, May 9.—The Catholic Church approves the idea of nationalization of property within certain limits, but the policy can be carried too far, Pope Pius XII told a group of visiting businessmen and industrialists Saturday. His talk was made public today.

"The mission of public rights is, in effect, to serve the private rights, not to absorb them," the Pope said.

"The (national) economy—any more than any other branch of human activity—is not by nature an institution of the state."

Pope Pius said also that employers and workers were not irreconcilable antagonists but collaborators in a common task, in which both profited from the national economy.

SEES PROFITS SHARED

"They eat, so to speak, at the same table, since they live, in the last resort, from the net global profit of the national economy," the Pope explained.

"Each of them draws his pay and hence their mutual relationship should not make eithe the servant of the other."

The Pope made his speech, an exposition of the views of the church on the relation of public to private interest, to two groups of visitors. One group was made up of Catholic businessmen from Canada, Chile, and Europe; the other, of European industrialists holding a convention here.

In the elaboration of forms of public organization, the Pope said, the time came when the questions of state ownership and nationalization of enterprises arose.

"There is no doubt that the church also—within certain just limits—admits nationalization and judges 'that one may legitimately give to the state certain categories of properties, those which represent such a power that one could not abandon them into the hands of private individuals without imperilling the common interest,'" the Pope said, quoting from the Papal encyclical "Quadragesimo Anno."

(The encyclical in question, on the reconstruction of the social order, was issued by Pope Pius XI on May 15, 1931, and thus the speech of Pius XII was a commentary on it in the light of events in the 18 years since it was issued.)

"But to make of this nationalization a normal rule of public organization of economy would be to reverse the order of things," the Pope continued.

It is not true, he held, that every private enterprise is by its nature a society in which all persons, whether owners or not of the means of production, should have the right to share in the property or at least in its benefits.

"Such a conception starts from the hypothesis that each enterprise enters by nature of the sphere of public right," the Pope said. "It is an inexact hypothesis."

VATICAN PAPER ASSAILS ATHEISM IN CAPITALISM

ROME, May 7.—L'Osservatore Romano, Vatican newspaper, appeared today with an editorial that said that the spirit of capitalism was fundamentally more atheistic than "communism which, as an economic system, does not run counter to the nature of Christian doctrine as strongly as capitalism."

According to the newspaper, capitalism "is atheistic in its structure; gold is its god." The newspaper defines capitalism as substantially greedy and says its aim is to dominate because it is never satisfied.

The point of the editorial, which was written by its editor in chief, Count Giuseppe Dalla Torre, was an attempt to refute the Communist contention that the Catholic Church favors and supports capitalism. Nothing could be further from the truth, the editorial asserts, and adds that proofs of this could be had by reading the papal encyclical as well as the speeches of Pius XII on social questions.

POPE PIUS XII AND 10 MOMENTOUS YEARS IN THE PAPACY

Regardless of one's religious convictions, be he Catholic, Protestant, or Jew, we cannot overlook and allow to pass unnoticed signposts of human and spiritual progress in the world.

On March 12, 1949, the present occupant of the papal throne, Pope Pius XII, completed 10 years in that high station. Born in Rome, the supreme pontiff on March 2d of this year celebrated his seventy-third birthday and on April 2, 1949, observed his fiftieth anniversary as a priest. He is the first native Roman in over 200 years to be elected pope. Cardinal Eugenio Pacelli was selected as pope after having served as secretary of state to Pope Pius XI. The position of secretary of state to a pope is hardly a stepping stone to the papacy since the last pope to be selected after serving as secretary of state was Cardinal Michelangelo Dei Conti in 1720 who assumed the name of Pope Innocent XIII.

Pius XII came from a family which served well the Holy See. His father, Advocate Ernesto Pacelli, was a consistorial advocate in the Vatican and represented the Catholic viewpoint in the capitol as counselor of the municipality of Rome. Francesco, brother of Pope Pius XII, succeeded his father as consistorial advocate and acted as one of the negotiators who brought about the treaty and concordat between the Vatican and Italy in 1929.

The past 10 years have been a period of epoch-making history by the papacy. No pontiff in history has been called upon to face and solve so many difficult and momentous problems affecting the entire world.

Fortunately, the present pope was exceptionally well equipped to face these complex situations. He possessed a wide and exhaustive knowledge of the political, social, and industrial history of all nations. He knew personally their leaders, and studied all phases of the national life of various nations.

He combined this educative knowledge, with a perspicacity and keenness of judgment and piercing understanding of men, their hopes, desires, and aspirations, with the result that he gained upon the elevation to the papacy, at once and instantly, the confidence and well wishes of all nations, their leaders and their peoples.

He was, for example, stationed many years in Washington as papal delegate to the United States. Thus, he came to know intimately and on favorable terms, America and Americans. It was in Washington that he came in contact with the representatives of every nation in the world, thereby increasing his number of acquaintances and his knowledge of events and peoples.

How well the supreme pontiff has met and successfully carried out the tremendous responsibilities of his pontificate may be attested to by the record His Holiness has made thus far. In his Summi Pontificatus of October 30, 1939, to the Bishops, the Pope emphasized the absolute need of erecting, on Christian principles, a moral, social, and public life. He set forth the various steps clearly and lucidly whereby this result could be attained. These views were aimed directly at the totalitarian dictators, Hitler, Mussolini, and Hirohito, then on the march toward a devastating and cruel and inhuman war. This brave, courageous, and forthright statement was made at a time when the Nazi aggressor was already advancing into defenseless Poland and planning assaults upon struggling and defenseless peoples of the world, in violation of the laws of God and man.

Early in his papal career, he became the exemplar, the spokesman, for all who believed in the love of man for his fellow being and for those who desired an enduring world peace. His Christmas appeal of 1939 is famous for its admonition and suggestions on how to attain peace and order. He declared that,

First. All nations large or small, strong or weak must be independent.

Second. Nations must be freed from armament races.

Third. Intelligent development must be permitted of international bodies in order to correct the faults of the past and prevent future failures.

Fourth. A sincere examination of the true needs and fair demands of all peoples of the world, their ethnic needs and requirements, as well as minority representation.

These and other basic principles of moral conduct were constantly advanced and developed in his thirteenth encyclical, entitled "In Multiplicibus," issued October 23, 1948. Therein, he again urged prayers for peace, pleading in particular for the end of the Palestinian conflict.

It is well-known how much the Pope suffered in mind and in body during the tempestuous and sanguinary years and events of World War II. Then the Vatican was the refuge of thousands upon thousands of penniless, homeless and stricken people. The Pope was besieged from every corner of the world for aid, financial and material, assistance of all kinds and characters.

The persecuted and the displaced were welcomed into the friendly embrace of a wise, kind, and loving spiritual leader striving to put in order, a chaotic and disordered world bent on self ruin and destruction.

Here, in fact, is a man of God who has enriched the world with an advocacy of love of man for his fellow being, with his kind and intelligent service to the suffering and the downtrodden, with his courage, bravery, and outspokenness in fighting inhumanity and evil, when it might have been wise and expedient to remain silent—indeed, it is a high privilege and distinct honor for me although not of his great faith, to pay tribute today to the distinguished leader of the Catholic Church. I have marveled at his splendid works and endeavors for justice, charity, and peace in the world.

I have admired his exhortations on behalf of a true ethical conduct of life. May His Holy Eminence be granted by a tender and merciful God, further physical, moral, and spiritual strength in continuing a fruitful life, dedicated as always, to the defense and protection of poor and suffering mankind, to the friendless and the homeless, at the same time tempering and staying the hand of the strong, the oppressor, and the tyrant.

His Eminence Pope Pius XII already recorded as the great humanitarian of the age, after the usual deep thought given to the subject, has called attention of the world in the official Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore Romano that "communism which as an economic system does not run counter to the nature of Christian doctrine as strongly as capitalism."

The Supreme Pontiff and the Catholic Church is recognized as one outstanding power and influence in the world opposed to communism. With every force and with every effort at his command, the Pope has carried on courageously and with effect this fight. And notwithstanding his opposition to communism, His Eminence has spoken out forthrightly and without fear or favor, that he feels there is a greater percentage of capitalists found to be unbelievers than among the communists.

I claim that many who are classified today as Communists living in the satellite countries, are members of the Catholic faith. The nationals of Poland, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Bulgaria, be they worshippers of the Roman, Greek, or Russian Orthodox church are Catholics and believe in God. However, they have been oppressed and dominated by the corrupt and tyrannical ruling classes for so many years, that in desperation they rose against their oppressors and overthrew them hoping for a better life and political and economic freedom. Though still suffering and in misery, they are devoted to God and faithful to the church.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection I read with interest the remarks of my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] who saw fit to deplore the truthful and courageous statement which His Eminence made recently in Rome to a group of European businessmen.

I do not read into this interview the interpretation made by my distinguished colleague from Georgia. The Pope in his every move and every utterance has carried the fight against communism to every part of the world. He asks no quarter and gives none.

My good friend from Georgia need not fear that the Supreme Pontiff will relax in his fight against communism. What my esteemed friend from Georgia does truly lament, is the merited denunciation of capitalism because of its sorry and unfair treatment of the worker. The Pope in his talk on this subject said, that employers and employees were not irreconcilable antagonists but collaborators in a common task in which both profited from the national economy. Continuing, Pope Pius XII stated:

> They eat, so to speak, at the same table since they live, in the last resort from the net global profit of the national economy. Each of them draws his pay and hence their mutual relationship should not make either the servant of the other.

My distinguished and esteemed colleague from Georgia is a stout defender of capitalism. His talents, his acumen and resourcefulness would indeed be a worthy asset if also with equal zeal he placed them at the disposal more often of the laboring man who at this time sorely needs friendly help.

(Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a statement that appeared in a Rome paper as well as two other American papers.)

POPE PIUS BLASTS CAPITALISM

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the gentleman from Illinois has seen fit to pick a quarrel with what I had to say yesterday concerning a news item that I saw in Sunday's Washington Post.

It was in sorrow, not anger, that I spoke. The language used was that of kindness and of love.

For years I have been applauding His Holiness, the Pope, and the Catholic Church for the fight that they have made for the cause of freedom and of peace, and to see something indicating giving comfort to the enemy naturally caused me pain and what could I do less than make my grief known.

Out of this great, broad, and deep Catholic sea of wisdom, justice, moderation, charity, love, and mercy I have drawn much sweet water, but this had the bitter taste of gall. I know, Mr. Speaker, that it cannot represent the views of His Holiness, the Pope, nor of the Catholic Church, and I would have it understood that I meant no attack upon either.

Mr. Speaker, may we not all join hands and joining hands join hearts that no dissension hinder the progress of peace and government.

THE LEAP FROM PATRONAGE TO PURGE

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, when my colleague from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS] addressed the House a moment ago in regard to the apparent dissension between Democrats I could not help but think of Mark Antony's oration at Caesar's funeral when he said:

> Mischief, thou art afoot.
> Take whatever course thou wilt.

I simply rise to call attention of the Democrats to this quotation from Mark Antony's oration which is very much akin to the one that was made a few moments ago and I trust that the Democrats will take note of the comparison.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mark Antony also said, "I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him."

Mr. JACOBS. He also said:

> Mischief, thou art afoot.
> Take whatever course thou wilt.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALLEN of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address delivered by his colleague, DONALD L. JACKSON.

Mr. FULTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include statements by the Standard Steel Spring Co., of Pittsburgh.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a brief biography from Who's Who on the Ronne Antarctic Research Expedition.

Mr. MCCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker I call up House Resolution 209 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Un-American Activities is authorized and directed, upon requisition of the Department of Justice, to transfer to its custody for presentation as evidence in the Government case, United States v. Alger Hiss, five strips of 35-millimeter film and three metal containers uncovered by said committee during the Eightieth Congress, such film commonly known as the "pumpkin film."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, unless Tom Clark has changed his attitude, you might as well put them back in the pumpkin, where we found them; I speak advisedly as a former member of the Committee on Un-American Activities.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I very much regret the statement of my good friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, and I trust that he will see fit to strike his remarks from the RECORD. It is unfortunate that he made that statement. It is an attack upon a good and patriotic man and made in a forum where he has no opportunity to make reply.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF THE SWISS GOVERNMENT

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4392. The question is on the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. YOUNG) there were—ayes 42, noes 68.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 191, not voting 68, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE PUBLIC HOUSING COMMISSIONER TO SELL CERTAIN RESETTLEMENT PROJECTS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2440) to authorize the Public Housing Commissioner to sell the suburban resettlement projects known as Greenbelt, Md.; Greendale, Wis.; and Greenhills, Ohio, without regard to provisions of law requiring competitive bidding or public advertising, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3709, as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or any other provision of law, the Public Housing Commissioner is hereby authorized by means of negotiated sale or sales and without competitive bidding or public advertising, to sell and convey, at fair market value as determined by him on the basis of an appraisal made by an independent real-estate expert selected by the Commissioner and subject to such terms and conditions as he may determine to be in the best public interest, to such purchaser or purchasers as he deems to be responsible, all right, title, and interest of the United States in or to all or any part of the suburban resettlement projects known as Greenbelt, Md.; Greendale, Wis.; and Greenhills, Ohio (including improved and unimproved lands, war housing constructed on lands of or adjacent to said suburban resettlement projects and personal property used in connection with said projects or housing): Provided, however, That the Public Housing Commissioner shall, during such period as he deems to be reasonable, give a first preference in such negotiated sale or sales to veteran groups organized on a nonprofit basis (provided that any such group shall accept as a member of its organization, on the same terms, subject to the same conditions and with the same privileges and responsibilities, required of, and extended to other members of the group, any tenant occupying a dwelling unit in such project at any time during such period as the Commissioner shall deem appropriate, starting on the effective date of this act, and who shall be a tenant therein at the time of making application for such membership), and may sell to such groups at fair market value (as determined by him on the basis stated above) or at cost (as determined by him, including the apportioned cost of structures, lands, appurtenances, and personal property transferred, together with the apportioned share of the cost of all utilities and other facilities provided for and common to the project of which any property being sold is a part), whichever is lower, except, however, that in the event two or more such groups desire to purchase any such project they shall be required to submit sealed bids therefor and the award shall be made on the basis of the highest acceptable monetary return to the Government: And provided further, That evidence is furnished to the Commissioner, satisfactory to him, that the compensation paid or to be paid for organizing such groups, for negotiating the purchase of such property, and for financing such purchase is fair in relation to the purchase price and reasonable on the basis of time effectively devoted to such services on a professional or similar basis: And provided further, That in the event of a sale other than for cash, the Commissioner shall require a down payment of at least 10 percent of the total purchase price, the balance to be amortized over a period of not more than 25 years, the unpaid balance to bear interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum and the payment of any unpaid balance to be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust against the properties sold. The Commissioner is authorized, as a condition of any sale hereunder, to transfer, or to require the transfer or an agreement for the transfer of, streets, roads, public buildings, federally owned utilities, playgrounds, swimming pools, and parks including adequate open land surrounding or adjacent to each project to the appropriate non-Federal governmental agency, at such times, to such an extent, and upon such terms and conditions as he shall determine to be in the public interest.

"SEC. 2. As used in this act, (1) the term veteran means any person who shall have served in the active military or naval service of the United States at any time on or after September 16, 1940, and prior to July 26, 1947, and who shall have been discharged or released from active service under conditions other than dishonorable, and (2) the term 'groups organized on a nonprofit basis' shall include but not be limited to, mutual ownership or cooperative housing associations or limited dividend corporations which by the terms of their charters and bylaws have limited their rate of return to a rate no higher than the Public Housing Commissioner deems reasonable and necessary."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so only for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], the chairman of the committee, if he will not explain briefly what the Senate amendments are?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that passed the House by unanimous consent. It provides for the sale of Greenbelt, Md.; Greenhills, Ohio, near Cincinnati; and Greendale, Wis., near Milwaukee.

There are certain groups largely composed of veterans who are very anxious to purchase these properties that are now in a position to proceed with the purchase. The Senate made no material changes in the bill. It provided, however, that limited-profit corporations might participate. That will permit an organization in Cincinnati, which is greatly interested in the purchase of Greenhills, to participate in the purchase.

Our bill provided that the tenants in the project will have a right to remain there if they join the cooperative, but it provided no time in which they should designate their intention. The Senate bill provided that the Public Housing Administrator may fix a time in which the tenant shall become a member of the cooperative; otherwise there might be an organization for the purpose of purchasing who would not know its rights until the tenants had expressed their desire whether or not they should remain.

I think the Senate amendments are meritorious. They meet with the approval of all those who are interested in the purchase of these properties. I have heard from those in Cincinnati and those in Wisconsin. They are heartily in favor of the bill as passed by the Senate. For that reason I ask that the House concur in the amendments adopted by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUBSISTENCE EXPENSES AND MILEAGE ALLOWANCES

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCSWEENEY] and by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 205 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3005) to regulate subsistence expenses and mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees of the Government. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3005. The bill which this rule makes in order has for its purpose to increase the subsistence allowance of Federal employees when they are on travel time. For a long time now it has been found that Federal employees who were required to travel and to pay their subsistence found that the cost of subsistence when away from home was greater than the Federal allowance. It has been found desirable to increase that in a moderate amount so that they will not be out of pocket by reason of their travel.

The bill is reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I know of no opposition to the resolution or to the bill. The resolution authorizes debate not to exceed 1 hour.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Virginia has so well explained, House Resolution 205 does make in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 3005, under 1 hour of general debate.

H. R. 3005 was reported by the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. It has two principal features. The first would increase from $6 per day to $9 per day the ceiling or limit which could be expended, and for which a Federal civilian employee could be reimbursed, for subsistence. It also provides an increase of the ceiling on the mileage allowances for travel on official business by private car or private airplane from 5 cents to 7 cents per mile.

There is a rather exhaustive report on this bill from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. There has been a general acknowledgment of the fact that $6 a day in many instances is not sufficient to meet the cost of subsistence for Government employees and officials, and that the amount ought to be increased. You will note from the report that minority views have been expressed on this measure. Seemingly the only division which arose in the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in the consideration of this bill was as to just what the ceiling or limitation on the allowances should be. In other words, the question was how much should be fixed as the amount allowable, if expended, for the subsistence of various Government officials and employees. As I understand it, of course, if any official of the Government cannot recover from the Government more than his actual expenses up to the limits fixed. This bill is one which should receive the careful and sympathetic attention of the Congress. I hope the rule will be promptly adopted.

Mr. MCSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, we have no further requests for time. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve iself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3005) to regulate subsistence expenses and mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees of the Government.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3005, with Mr. BATES of Kentucky in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, H. R. 3005, provides for regulating subsistence expenses and mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees of the Government. This bill is very easy to understand. It provides for an increase in the per diem allowance for Federal employees and also grants a slight increase in the mileage allowance.

At the present time Government employees who are required to travel on official business are allowed up to a maximum of $6 per day to cover their extraordinary expenses while they are away from their station. This is grossly inadequate, in view of the present-day living and traveling costs.

Testimony before our committee developed the fact that the average hotel room costs approximately $5.27 a day. By the words "average hotel room" I do not mean accommodations in the best hotels, but rather the average hotels where Government employees would ordinarily stay. Five dollars and twenty-seven cents for the room leaves 73 cents out of the $6 for meals, tips, and other incidentals. There is no possible way one could stretch 73 cents into three meals.

To my mind, in view of the evidence and testimony, there is no question but that the per diem allowance should be increased. We cannot expect Government employees to go out on official trips and be required to spend out of their own funds just for the privilege of working for the Federal Government. This is exactly the situation today. Many witnesses before the committee submitted their actual travel costs showing that on their official trips they were required to use their own funds to pay obligations that should fall upon the Government.

The pending bill provides for an increase up to $9 per day. That is only $3 more than the present allowance, and I should like to point out that under the terms of the bill the $9 rate is not mandatory. There is no question in my mind but that many departments will be able to send their employees out on per diem allowances of less than $9 per day, and the bill will permit them to do so. The departments have expressed their intention to do so when compatible with circumstances.

Hearings before the committee brought out that many of the departments today do not allow the full per diem allowance. This is especially true in sparsely settled areas and the western sections of the United States, where camp parties or survey groups of the Federal Government are sent out. In such instance the per diem allowance could be limited to a dollar or two a day. At the present time the per diem for such trips is often as low as $1.50 per day.

On the other hand, where employees are sent to metropolitan areas under this bill, the per diem allowance can be adjusted to meet the higher costs found there. There must be necessarily left a reasonable degree of latitude to the discretion of the heads of the various agencies. The hearings brought out that the Government agencies and departments are doing an excellent job of administering per diem costs, and I am confident that should this bill be enacted they will continue to follow the same sound policies.

The legislation also provides for increasing the mileage allowance for privately owned automobiles used for Government business. At the present time the mileage rate for private automobiles is 5 cents per mile. This bill would authorize the payment of 7 cents per mile.

There is no question but that an increase in the mileage rates should be approved. In the last session of Congress we passed a bill granting 7 cents a mile for rural mail carriers, United States marshals, and their deputies. As I recall, there was no opposition to the legislation last year.

The price of automobiles has almost doubled since the 5-cent-per-mile rate was originally established. Then, too, there has been great increases in the cost of repairs and many Government employees who are required to use old automobiles are subject to much heavier operating expenses than in the past. Another factor the committee considered was the fact that gasoline prices and repair-maintenance costs have materially increased over the past few years.

The bill also contains a provision increasing the rate of mileage allowance for private motorcycles and private airplanes which are used in connection with Government business. For private motorcycles the proposed rate change is from 2 cents to 4 cents a mile and for private airplanes from 5 cents to 7 cents per mile.

I should like to point out to the committee that mileage may not be allowed under the law unless it is determined that the use of a private car, motorcycle, or airplane is more advantageous to the Government. That requirement is retained in the pending bill except that a specific determination of advantage will not be required where payment on a mileage basis is limited to the cost of travel by common carrier.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments held extensive hearings on the bill. It was favorably recommended by the Comptroller General, as well as the Bureau of the Budget. Many witnesses were heard and everyone who came before the committee favored the bill.

Similar legislation passed the other body during the last session of Congress. There was no dissenting vote against the bill. When the measure came over to the House a brief hearing was held by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments but Congress adjourned before the House could act on the measure.

I cannot conceive that there should be any opposition to the bill at this time. The Democratic platform states:

> We will continue our efforts to improve and strengthen our Federal Civil Service and provide adequate compensation.

Surely there should be no opposition on this side of the aisle. The Republican platform also contains a similar provision. It states:

> We propose a well paid and efficient Federal career service.

In view of this there should not be any opposition on the other side of the aisle.

Data submitted by the Bureau of the Budget indicated that the maximum cost of the bill, as amended, would be $57,800,000 per year, based upon total estimated cost for civilian travel of $151,000,000 for the fiscal year 1949. Of that total, slightly more than 54 percent would be chargeable to the per diem for subsistence, or approximately $40,800,000 while almost 20 percent or $12,000,000 would be required for the increased automobile mileage allowance. Again, the estimate of $52,800,000 is a maximum, and the actual expenditures under the bill would be less than the maximum, to whatever extent travel orders authorize rates below the maximum.

In addition to testimony and data supplied by the Bureau of the Budget, your committee heard representatives of the Civil Service Commission, the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Interior, Justice, Labor, Post Office, and Treasury. The testimony of these witnesses contains numerous examples of actual cases in which employees, particularly those required to visit large cities under crowded conditions, actually have been required to spend amounts considerably in excess of $10 per day for lodging and meals. Your committee also heard testimony from various employee unions to the same effect.

I would like to have seen the maximum per diem allowance for Federal employees increased to $10 and in preparing this measure I used that figure. The committee, however, in amending the bill, reduced the maximum allowance to $9.

I am willing to go along on that figure because, while it may not be adequate in a small number of cases, it will enable the average Government employee to carry on his official duties while away from his station without being required to use his own funds. The bill is fair and represents an answer to a need. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KARSTEN. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. I wonder if the gentleman can give us an estimate, and a close estimate, of the amount of money that was expended in the fiscal year 1948 for travel and per diem expenditure by the Federal employees?

Mr. KARSTEN. For the fiscal year 1949 I have the figure, and I imagine that will furnish a comparison. It was $317,000,000, of which military travel was $166,000,000 and civilian travel $151,000,000. There is no attempt to deal with military travel in this bill.

Mr. JENSEN. Of course, the Members of Congress who are trying to hold down Government expenditures—and many of us feel that the Federal Government is greatly overstaffed, possibly to the tune of 750,000 employees—it is rather difficult for a Member of Congress who would like to be fair with the Federal employees to go along on this bill which permits this $9 per day when we know that the Federal Government is so terrifically overstaffed. If the Administration would make an attempt to reduce the personnel of the Government to the point it should be many of us could go along with this bill.

Mr. KARSTEN. I, too, favor the strictest economy in the operation of our Government. I believe we should not spend a nickel that is not necessary, but I believe the gentleman from Iowa, whom I have known ever since he has been a Member of Congress, is fair. He certainly would not ask a Government employee to go up to New York at his own expense while traveling on official business.

Mr. JENSEN. No; but as long as we are providing everything for all of these Federal employees, everything the administration asks for, we are going to keep on piling up additional needless administrative help on the backs of the taxpayers.

Mr. KARSTEN. I might also point out to the gentleman that the $9 rate provided in the bill is not mandatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. KARSTEN. As I say, this $9 is not mandatory. The department heads have a great deal of discretion; as a matter of fact some employees are sent out on a per diem of $1.50. The same practice is going to be followed in the future, regardless of whether the per diem is $9 or $6; they can reduce it.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KARSTEN. I yield.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. The gentleman from Iowa probably operates on the theory that if you could get the employees to travel at their own expenses you would have a more efficiently operated Government.

Mr. KARSTEN. That, no doubt, is his philosophy.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KARSTEN. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I may state for the benefit of the gentleman from Iowa that the per diem figure for 1948 as furnished by the Bureau of the Budget was $328,000,000.

Mr. KARSTEN. That is somewhat higher than the 1949 estimate.

Mr. WAGNER. For 1949 it was $317,000,000.

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, H. R. 3005, a bill to regulate subsistence expenses and mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees of the Government, is a realistic acknowledgment of the unrealistic travel and expense law under which the servants of our Government are operating. The fact that the subsistence phase of the law dates to 1926, and the automobile mileage to 1931, is evidence enough of the situation.

In the hearings before our committee it was brought out that the $6 per day ceiling during the thirties did actually represent a ceiling. Many Government employees could travel for less than this amount and did do so, however, the $6 figure in recent years has been so unrealistic that budget officials of the various departments or agencies have simply granted the $6 automatically knowing that it was inadequate to meet even the bare essentials of living away from home. Our committee heard considerable testimony, much of which has been set forth by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN].

The estimated cost of the increase will be $40,000,000. While this is an estimate, and a sum not to be lightly regarded, it is in my opinion a fair increase.

While serving in the General Assembly in Indiana, it fell to the lot of a house-senate committee of which I was chairman, to revise the subsistence pay for employees of the State of Indiana. After much research on this particular subject, we raised our per diem subsistence from $6 to $8. It should be remembered however that in arriving at the $9 figure for the Federal level, that in Indiana when a Government employee leaves his post of duty in Indianapolis, any place in which he might stop would be a second- or lower-class city. For this reason a higher ceiling than the $8 established in Indiana is a fair recognition of the differential that should be accorded to employees who are required to live in our larger cities.

It should also be borne in mind that the $9 figure does represent a ceiling. We have ample evidence that those departments or agencies using the greatest amount of travel allowance, have adequate facilities for administering the law so that many of their personnel will travel for less than the ceiling.

The increase in this bill for automobile travel from 5 cents to 7 cents per mile is also another realistic realignment which was long overdue. The increased cost of auto travel due to higher original purchase price which means greater dollar depreciation as well as increased operating cost, will make this a fair piece of legislation for those employees who must travel by privately owned automobiles.

In conclusion may I simply say that this legislation represents the result of much of the constructive thinking of our committee and I can commend it to the House without qualification.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARVEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The action taken by the committee, in my opinion, is the proper action to take, because the Federal employees have not been getting enough to cover their traveling or per diem expenses. But if we fixed it at $9, the tendency might be to encourage more travel instead of less travel. In the case of a good many of our agencies there is too much traveling doing nothing. If Congress could limit the amount of travel only to necessary travel on the part of employees, we would really save money by the $9 ceiling.

Mr. HARVEY. I agree with the gentleman, and that was brought out in the committee. Possibly there are good arguments on both sides of the question, but it must be remembered that all classes of Government employees travel on the same subsistence and per diem, which means that some of the higher-grade employees, as far as civil service or classification is concerned, are going to travel even at the $9 ceiling at a distinct loss.

I would just simply like to say that it is impossible ever to arrive at the best figure in a case of this kind. We thought we did arrive at a fairly accurate one, because the extensive reports we had of expenses actually showed that a person traveling under ordinary conditions would have expenditures of around $8.80.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Well, I do not dispute that, but what I have in mind is this, that there is a lot of traveling on the slightest provocation to go to some convention or meeting, or even a trip that is not necessary, and that is where it increases the expenses for this travel all the time.

Mr. HARVEY. I would agree that probably there is some of that element entering into it.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARVEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I first of all want to commend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARVEY] for his very able presentation of this matter, and to say also that as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments he has studied this matter very carefully. I join with the gentleman from Indiana, my colleague, in support of the measure. I would like to say at this point, in view of the interrogation by the gentleman from Minnesota, that certainly I, too, on many occasions am convinced that there is unnecessary travel by Government employees. I can understand that the urge to move around can strike now and then, and probably the urge does result in travel that should not be made. However, each of the appropriation bills that comes along fixes the amount of money for travel for the agency involved, and it would seem to me that the job for us is to fix fair, realistic pay scales for maintenance and travel, and then to govern the matter of over-all travel in the agency by a careful study as to how much travel is advisable and necessary, and limit the appropriation to that amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. Chairman, I believe that our good friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN], the chairman of the subcommittee, has made a very able presentation of the history of this bill and a very able presentation of the necessity for its passage.

I might say that our whole committee conducted extensive hearings and arrived at a conclusion that the $9-a-day figure was an adequate and a fair figure. There were some of us on the committee who were of the opinion that the $9 was not sufficient; there were others who thought the figure should be placed at $10. I believe that a reading of the committee report will bear out the fact that it was almost a unanimous approval of the $9 figure. Of course, as was brought out by the genial gentleman from Missouri, this $9 figure does not mean that every person traveling will get $9. There are some cases where a person goes to a small town and where expenses are considerably less, and it is the duty of the head of the Department to see that the travel allowance be in keeping with the territory in which the person is traveling.

I believe further that the figure of 7 cents a mile is a very fair figure, because statistics will show and the testimony will show that 7 cents is hardly a sufficient amount when one is traveling, whether for pleasure or on Government business or any place in the United States with the average automobile today. I do not believe that we in Congress, nor the taxpayers of this country, should expect any Government employee to dig into his pocket, and I believe with the past figure of $6 a day, which had been prevalent for some time, that in at least 80 percent of the cases when Government employees were traveling, they had to dig into their pockets in order to come out even. Nor should we expect them to live in third- or fourth-rate hotels. They are doing a job; they are employees of the Government, and they should live somewhat within their means and within the custom they have been going through in the past. I have found from experience that the average Government employee is doing an excellent job and should be given a decent salary and decent per diem when he travels.

I rise in support of this bill and hope it will be passed.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. Do I understand that under this bill the employees who have traveling expenses turn in the actual amount of the expenses, and if it is less than $9 per day they will not get $9 a day, or can they just turn in so much a day for each day they are out of the office?

Mr. WAGNER. Not having been a member of that subcommittee, I cannot answer that. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN], though, who will probably be able to answer the question.

Mr. KARSTEN. A great deal of discretion was left to the heads of the various executive agencies. They set the per diem ceilings. In some cases the per diem may be as low as a dollar or a dollar and a half. We find that prevalent out in the West, where employees go on pack trips or camping trips, carry their supplies on their backs, and prepare their own meals. Their only expense is perhaps a dollar or two a day. They will not receive $9. On the other hand, where you have employees going to metropolitan areas where they are subjected to higher living costs, the bill will permit the payment of a per diem up to and including $9 a day. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. REES. What I am trying to find out is, will the ordinary employee just turn in an expense account for $9 per day for the number of days he is away from his office, or is he required on each occasion to file a voucher and an accounting of the amount of his expenses?

Mr. KARSTEN. He cannot turn in $9 a day unless that is the figure fixed by the head of his agency. The agency heads are given a great deal of discretion in these matters. The agency can say it will be $6 a day or $8 a day, depending on the circumstances. That is the policy they have followed, and that is the policy they have indicated they are going to continue to follow.

Mr. LANHAM Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LANHAM. I think the gentleman from Kansas has in mind a practice that was followed by the Government until a few years ago, under which each employee did submit his itemized statement of expenses.

Mr. REES. That is the way it had been handled until rather recently.

Mr. LANHAM. The policy was changed, as I understand, some years ago because of the accounting expense, so that now the department heads determine what the per diem shall be and, to save accounting expense, simply pay that per diem instead of the exact amount of the expenses.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the gentleman from Georgia for his contribution.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER].

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation.

Prior to my becoming a Member of Congress I was deputy comptroller of the State of New York for 6 years. As such, it was incumbent upon the comptroller's office to make studies from time to time of travel allowances and subsistence allowances for State employees. I recall very well that when I first came to Albany, N. Y., we were giving the State employees $7 a day and paying them 5 cents a mile for driving privately owned cars on State business. The State recognized that amount was inadequate, and engaged the services of Runzheimer & Co., of Chicago, who are specialists in this field, to make a complete study of other agencies, whether Federal or State, and private industry, to see what they were paying for mileage and subsistence allowances.

I believe it was in 1945 that the comptroller raised the subsistence allowance from $7 to $8 a day and the mileage allowance from 5 to 6 cents a mile. Again in 1948 recognizing the fact that increasing costs made it difficult for State employees to find adequate housing and to operate their cars without serious financial loss to themselves, it became evident that another increase in rates was inevitable. Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, as recently as July 1948 a new rule was adopted in the State of New York increasing the subsistence allowance to $9.50 a day and the mileage allowance to 7 cents. I only mention that to show you that I have had some experience in this matter in previous years. As a member of the committee I attended all the committee hearings and listened very carefully to witnesses who appeared before us in their efforts to demonstrate that the $6 per day now given to Federal employees was inadequate. I do believe there is some unnecessary travel on the part of Federal employees. However, that is a matter of administration. I believe, that with the cooperation of the department heads, much of this travel could be eliminated. Certainly there is no Member of the House who is more economy-minded than I am. On the other hand, I feel that it is extremely unfair to conscientious Federal employees who are required to perform their duties away from home—I think it is very unfair to require those people to pay money out of their own pockets as was demonstrated so many times during the hearings. I call to your attention at this time that $9 per day is a maximum amount and that in many cases, as I think some of my distinguished colleagues have pointed out, the cost per day will be far less than $9. I am sure it is the intention of every Member of the House to be fair to Federal employees and accordingly I sincerely urge all Members to vote for this legislation, as I believe it to be fair.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER].

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments on his selection of the gentleman from Missouri, as chairman of the subcommittee which considered this bill, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN], deserves great credit for his zeal and efforts in bringing this bill before the House. I think it is only simple justice that we compensate these faithful public employees so that at least they will not be out of pocket for personal expenditures made conducting Government business. Back in Ohio, in our towns, our local employees are allowed as high as 12 cents a mile for travel and are allowed all of their expenses—that is, their necessary expenses. I was rather surprised some time ago as a member of the joint House and Senate committee, when we held extensive hearings throughout the United States, to find that we were also limited to $6 a day. Although this measure will not increase per diem allowances, I was just Scotch enough to resent the fact that after paying my hotel bill and buying my breakfast, I had to start out the day several dollars in the red. I certainly know the resentment of the Members of the House and the other body where they were personally affected, so certainly we should do no less for these Government employees than we would prefer to do for ourselves.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in this legislation and would like to make some brief observations, especially as they relate to my experience as a member of the House Committee on Civil Service and afterward on the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House.

It is my opinion that a number of the agencies in the past few years especially have been extremely negligent in their duty to check the expenses of employees who are away from their offices on Government business.

I do not want to be misunderstood. Employees who are away on Government business should have their necessary expenses paid for the necessary time during which they are away. Of course, they should not be required to use their own funds for necessary expenses.

On several occasions, however, my attention has been called to the fact that employees in some of our agencies spend considerable time in planning trips across the country in order to take a little vacation at the expense of the Government. I know these are in the minority, but even so, there is too much of it going on. Furthermore, there are a number of cases where several people make a trip when one could do it alone, and then we have the other situation whereby a representative of an agency goes away and stays a week or two when he could do the job in a much shorter period of time.

Furthermore, agencies, instead of handing out this money in a lump sum, $6 a day or $9 a day, or whatever it may be, should require accounting of the use of the money that is expended by the Government, because, after all, it is paid out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BURNSIDE. We found in checking the executive expenditures that there are about 3,000,000 items, and it would cost about $10,000,000 to process those $11,000,000 of expense accounts. If we would do the same thing with all of them we would run up a tremendous cost to the Government in checking each of these expense accounts. We are doing our best to get away from that.

Mr. REES. I appreciate the gentleman's observation, but unfortunately they go through too much red tape in checking these items. It would not cost much money if it were done in a businesslike way, if it were done as you would do it if you were running a business concern. You know what industries and commercial houses do. Just apply a little common business sense in handling these expenses, as you would in your own business. That is all I ask for.

I hope the Committee on Expenditures will make some check and conduct investigation with respect to the amount of money that is being expended by the Federal Government, to see if we cannot cut out a lot of unnecessary trips and reduce expenses.

For instance, the other day my attention was called to three men from one agency who went out on the same trip. They were going to have a conference first up in one State and then attend a convention on the west coast. Perhaps all three of them had to go. I hardly think so. But somebody ought to check into that and hold down these expenses. This bill giving them $9 a day—if that is what it takes, all right, well and good; but it will encourage a great deal of travel that would otherwise not occur. I do not think any Member of this House wants anyone to take money out of his own pocket to pay expenses that should be charged to the Federal Government in order to make a necessary trip. I am wondering whether or not this committee has any idea how much time is taken by the representatives of these various agencies in traveling over the country, in carrying on the business of the Government. Somebody ought to check into it. It needs a real investigation and study. A great deal of money might be saved if you would do it.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. Yes, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARDY. It does present quite a problem, but I think there is a very practical difficulty in making a determination as to what trip is necessary and what trip is unnecessary.

Mr. REES. What I am thinking is to bear down on the agencies a little, and keep the unnecessary trips out as much as can be done. I am wondering if this committee could not take some real action on that subject matter and see that it is done. I think the action of this Committee on Expenditures would be very helpful.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. REES. I yield again to the gentleman from Virginia, a valued member of this committee.

Mr. HARDY. I just wanted to point out that the subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures recently has been looking into some of these travel matters of one of the agencies. It is a tremendous job. I hope it may be possible to expand it a little further. I believe some good is being accomplished, and I hope that the agencies in question will themselves take account of just the point that the gentleman from Kansas has raised.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY] would just stick around here in Washington over some Sunday and stay around the streets, he would see Government cars with boats on top. I can understand that because I have the desire once in a while to go fishing, but you see those cars traveling around on Sunday and on Saturday afternoons when the departments are not working, Government cars. I assume they are checking the number of fish, the number of ducks, or something somewhere. You will find it all the time. If you try to learn what they are doing and why they are on the road on Saturdays and Sundays you will find it utterly impossible. For instance, not long ago, someone over in Niles, Mich., which is on the direct route from Chicago to Detroit, complained that on the Fourth of July and the subsequent Sunday there were a number of Government cars with Government licenses on them driving around the resort centers, South Haven and up to Holland and places like that. The only answer that we got in trying to find out what those cars were doing was that they had to go up the coast road because the other was under repair. That is as far as they ever got with it.

Mr. REES. The gentleman from Michigan has made an important observation. I think it is a matter that should have more attention than it presently receives.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. HARDY. We know that kind of thing goes on all the time, but I just wonder how we can correct it by talking about it and not acting.

Mr. REES. I would just like to say to the gentleman that such things come about largely through laxity of the heads of the departments. They should be held more accountable.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield to permit an observation on that?

Mr. REES. I yield.

Mr. HARDY. Undoubtedly there may be some laxity on the part of the agency.

Mr. REES. Yes; there is on the part of too many of some of our agencies.

Mr. HARDY. Laxity on the part of the agencies themselves, but there is also some laxity on the part of the Congress that we have not been able to check up on these things.

Mr. REES. It is difficult even to get a vague idea of how many cars are used in the Government business. We know there are hundreds and thousands of Government cars. I have tried to find out how many automobiles there are in these agencies but nobody seems to furnish that information. I expect to discuss that subject matter at a later date. There seem to be more and more automobiles for more and more agencies of the Government. I hope somehow, some time, we can find a way to check this thing.

Mr. HARDY. That same kind of abuse occurs in private industry as it does in the Government; while it cannot be to the same degree, there certainly is evidence of it. This matter of abuse of the use of Government cars and transportation is one thing I should like to find out about. We are working on it. The gentleman, of course, recognizes what a task faces this committee in looking into the expenditures of these various Government agencies. In order to do it if we proceed much further than we have already gone we shall need more money to carry on the investigation.

Mr. REES. If there is abuse in private industry, only the private industry suffers. If there is abuse by Government agencies, the taxpayers suffer. In my judgment money spent to investigate this thing is money well spent through the savings brought about. If you spend a little money to make this investigation you will stop much of this abuse. The very fact that a committee is acting as a sort of watchdog will have a salutary effect.

The hearings on this bill are not very adequate. About all they consist of is the testimony of some people who came before the committee and testified that they ought to have more money for travel and subsistence. That is all there is in this report.

Mr. HARDY. May I make a further observation?

Mr. REES. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. As chairman of the subcommittee investigating this matter, we hope to have this information that will enable the committee to do a good job.

Mr. REES. I will be glad to support the gentleman in his effort, because we appreciate the active interest the gentleman from Virginia takes in this important matter. I know we can depend upon the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY] to do his part in dealing with this important problem.

Mr. Chairman, I know it takes a tremendous amount of money to run the Government. I know, too, that a considerable amount of travel is required, but I am convinced that a great deal of the travel on behalf of the Government is unnecessary and could be cut out.

You will observe from this bill that this Government spent last year more than $317,000,000 for travel allowance alone, and $151,000,000 of that amount is for civilian travel. That is a pretty good-sized sum to spend for travel expenses in peacetime.

The bill you are approving today calls for an additional cost of $52,800,000. That again is too much and ought to be reduced. I hope the Appropriations Committee of the House, together with the Expenditures Committee responsible for bringing this legislation to the floor, will see to it that these expenses are materially reduced.

One thing more, this bill does not take into consideration the travel allowance of thousands of automobiles operated by the various agencies of Government, whose operating costs also run into the millions of dollars.

Again I say the whole thing should be investigated with a view of bringing more economy in the travel expense of our Government.

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TAURIELLO].

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill, but before I make any comments I wish to compliment the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN], for the fine work he and his committee have done on this bill. I personally would give more money than is recommended in the bill being considered by the committee, I feel that $9 a day is not adequate enough, and I speak from experience, having been associated with a governmental agency for some time. We are all agreed that the average cost of a hotel room today is at least $5.50. When we go to some strange city on business, either Government or otherwise, and you ask for a fair-priced room, they seldom have such a room. The result is you get into the $6 and $7 bracket. So that the $9 a day is not adequate enough, in my opinion, and if I thought I could get to first base I would offer an amendment to increase this allowance to $12 because I feel that would be more adequate in allowing Government employees to travel with some degree of dignity and to live on the same plane as they do when at home.

You and I enjoy one of the greatest nuisances in this country. That is the tipping nuisance. This alone usually amounts to at least $2 a day.

When you are traveling on official business, what happens? You go from the station to the hotel in a taxicab and the doorman grabs your bag and carries it to the door, which costs you 25 cents. From the door to the hotel desk somebody else grabs your bag and you have to tip that individual. From the desk to the room some other bellhop grabs your bag and you have to tip him. You have to tip them adequately or the chances are they will turn around and call you down. I know of instances when this actually happened.

So I feel that the $9 recommended in this bill is not adequate enough. However, I will support the bill because I feel that half a loaf is better than none.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the pending legislation as it is written. I was a member of the committee and helped write the bill. Now, you are going to ask, Where are you going to get the money? I am interested in that just as anyone else, so I am going to try to show you how we can get the money.

Let us look at the situation just as it faces us. In my business we send men out on the road. If we send a man out on the road to travel we pay him a salary and they are supposed to get their expenses also. If we cut them down so that they cannot live in the right places and sleep in the right kind of hotels, after a while they would become discouraged. They might be the best salesmen in the world and they will not stay with us but will go to some other manufacturer who will look after them. I look at this situation in the same way. We pay these Government men $6 a day expenses now when we know it costs them $9 a day to get along. We have tried to make it economical, we have tried to make this bill sound. Some members thought it ought to be $8 a day expense money, one of the members of the committee thinks it ought to be $12. I do not. I think it ought to be $9 and I am going to stand pat on $9 and see how we get along in an effort to treat the Government employees in the right way.

Where are you going to get this money? I will show you. I picked up the Sunday Times-Herald and in great big headlines appears this statement: "Bill sets retirement at 55. Early passage predicted by Senator JOHNSTON." I understand that the President is in favor of the bill.

When you take a man 55 years old and you tell him he can retire and you are going to pay him a pension, in my opinion it is utterly silly. No man 55 years of age in good health ought to retire. If I was 55 years old and they put me on the side lines I would do some kicking and I am here now to kick against any bill that provides for the retirement of people at the age of 55. That means that everyone between the ages of 20 and 55 who are working have to pay that fellow to sit idly by for years to come whereas he could be earning his salary and would be kept off the Government pay roll. It is not economy for Government to retire workers at age 55, so just count me against it. I am not surprised the President is for it for he is for most anything that will sink us financially, such as ECA, aid to education, socialized medicine, and so forth.

What we are doing here in this country of ours now is trying to sink the ship or go into bankruptcy, and you are only going to sink the ship by adding this great burden on the fellow that works. And I do not want to do that. Well, that might be one way to bankrupt the United States of America.

Here is another one:

I pick up the paper and I read that in Great Britain recovery is realized. ERP aid praised in remarkable achievement. Trade balance in sight. When you find out that Britain had a balance of $2,500,000,000 last year, when they figure that they balanced their budget after we gave them $970,000,000 from the American Government, I want to tell you that it is just silly if you fellows sit here and pay out any more money in this ERP. Why, it ought to make all of you ERP and ERP and ERP. You ought to think of the American people. Think of paying these fellows that travel now for Uncle Sam $9 a day when the British Government has a balance of $2,500,000,000, added to that the $970,000,000 of American money, then it is just silly when you vote that way, and I hope that every man that votes that way that his constituents will realize what he is doing, and say to him, you vote to bankrupt our own country.

Now, what are we going to do to get the money to pay these fellows, our own citizens who go out and spend their own hard-earned cash trying to get along working for Uncle Sam? Do you not think it is foolish for them to have to do so? Then, another thing, another place you can get some money, boys, and that is by economizing in all of these expenditures of government where you know that it is an extravagant waste of the taxpayers' money. There are so many places where you can save, in every department of government. You say you want a balanced budget. You remember that the Eightieth Congress gave you a balance of $2,500,000,000 last year and $900,000,000 the year before. This year you are asking for $40,000,000,000, and you will spend $45,000,000,000 if you do not watch out. Now, if you spend $45,000,000,000, the goblins will get you, too. You fellows have to keep your eyes open or something will swallow you up, and then we will lose our form of government, and then it is just too bad. Why in the name of all that is good and sound do you take on such bills as socialized medicine, arming nations under the North Atlantic Pact, and so forth, when it means financial ruin to our own Government. Men, do not do it. I plead with you to economize in our Government spending.

Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], was going so fast that he could not stop to get the answer to his question of "Where are you going to get the money?" I can tell him where we will get part of it. We will tax the woolen industry and the woolen mills, that is what we will do, and we will hike the income taxes on this rich manufacturer. That is where we will get part of it. And everyone will contribute through higher and additional taxes.

Now, I cannot feel very sorry—I wish I could feel sorry—for the so-called poor, underpaid Federal employees, or half as sorry as I do for that group of Congressmen who come down here and serve so faithfully and so well and who always bemoan the fact that it is costing them so much money. I feel in accord with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I cannot be retired when I am 55 years of age, because I am away past that now. I notice that some of the local papers in Michigan suggest that six of the Republican Congressmen are going to retire, and they name me as one of them. Now, I am going to retire when a majority of the voters of my district say I cannot hold the office or when I cannot render adequate service, and I hope that the newspapers will make note of that.

I came down here in 1935 with a purpose in mind. It had to do with economy in Government and the welfare of our people and Nation. We have not gotten very far along with that program. We made a little progress in 1946, and then the people were deceived by a lot of honeyed words and they turned us out. Now we have to start all over again. So, I see the necessity—get that; my own people may not—I see the necessity of staying here for the present.

Unfortunately, I am the only one on the committee who is opposed to this increase. There are 25 conscientious, well-educated, economy-minded citizens on that committee, and they are all but one—and that is myself—in favor of this increase. Now you wonder why I am not in favor of an increase. They say that the Federal employees are spending their own money when they go out on their jobs. I can see where $6 a day will not pay the expenses and 5 cents will not cover the automobile travel. But that is not the only consideration we should have in mind.

My argument is this: Ever since 1932, when the great President, Mr. Roosevelt, promised economy, both parties, especially the Republican Party, of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is a great ornament, a great contributor of ability and all that, and I assume in funds—I hope so anyway, to the campaign war chest of the Republican Party, have promised economy.

I have been here since 1935, and if you gentlemen can recall any instance in which this Congress, the Congress as a whole, has practiced instead of talking economy, I wish you would tell me about it. If we are going to keep faith with the people, sometime we must begin to practice economy as well as preach it.

What about the Federal employees? They take those jobs with their eyes open. They know they will have to travel and eat while away from home. Most of them know they are going to have to pay their own travel expenses. It is strange, too, that if they are underpaid and if the jobs are not desirable there are so many individuals in our districts who want jobs in the Federal Government. Why? Because they are poor jobs, because they are not worth while? No. Because those jobs are good jobs, the pay adequate. Over all, they are good jobs.

We know that the average Federal employee works but 220 or less days per year. Our farmers and the people in the factories and in the offices work pretty nearly every day in the week, 5 days anyway, and the farmers 7.

There is something else that the Federal employees have. They never miss a pay check. They do not work for someone who goes bankrupt, who stops operations. The Nation is bankrupt, all right, but we continue on because we have the tax roll. So those Federal employees know that come pay day they are going to get a pay check, and it is going to be in full, everything that was promised them. In some districts at least there are five applicants for every Federal job available, in spite of the fact that we are putting them on in an ever increasing rate.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says, "Where are you going to get the money?" and he is all for economy, but he comes along and he wants to vote a $3-per-day raise, and it will cost the Government $50,000,000 a year. He says, "Where are you going to get the money?" Have they taken that into account? No; they have not.

Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. No, no, Bob. You have had your say.

Mr. RICH. I want to ask you a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I cannot yield.

The committee wants these people to have this additional $3 per day. I have said before and I concede they cannot travel on $6 per day, but they went into these jobs with their eyes open. I came down here, and I am like a lot of you. It is going to cost us money, but I love it. Nobody drafted me for the office I hold, and nobody so far as I know except here and there an individual has asked that I stay here. But I have made my views clear on that before.

So these Federal employees should not complain. No one compels them to go into the Government service, but they want to be given $9 a day for travel and subsistence. And what do you give to the old people? Fifty dollars a month. Of course, it is not comparable, I know, but to a certain degree it is.

How are you going to tell the people back home, your old folks, some of them the victims of misfortune, practically all of them honest. They have done their best, but for some reason beyond their control they cannot support themselves. So the Congress matches the payment up to the $50 per month that will be made to the States for their subsistence.

Then we come along and say $9 a day, and the gentleman from New York would boost it to $12, for travel and food for Federal employees who have good, safe jobs. I wonder where he gets his money. I wonder where he thinks we would get the money. He will say New York pays it to its State employees, and where does New York get its money? From the outlands, from the out districts. The money gravitates into New York, where on every piece of business from the States they just take a little toll. Maybe they can do it in New York, but my folks cannot do it.

It all boils down to this, my folks have to work, they have to sweat, they have to get calluses on their hands and on their feet to get these dollars which we take away from them to pay this $9 per day.

Inasmuch as no one is compelled to take one of these Federal jobs and, since every man who goes into it knows what he is going to get, I say let them be content. Let us begin to redeem at least one of our campaign promises. Let us begin to practice economy instead of talking about economy and all the time voting for an increase in expenditures. I know that there will be but about 10 votes cast against this bill, but at least so far as I am concerned the record will be clear. My views are set forth in a report I wrote on the bill and which reads as follows:

MINORITY REPORT

PROMISES WITHOUT PERFORMANCE

Ever since 1932, when Presidential candidate Franklin Delano Roosevelt included in his campaign promises one which definitely promised a 25-percent reduction in Federal expenditures, both Democrat and Republican party platforms and the candidates of both parties have repeatedly promised the taxpayers of this Nation a reduction in Federal expenditures.

The failure of our national policy makers to keep us out of a war—a war which gave us a Stalin and a communistic Russia, in lieu of a Hitler and a Nazi Germany, as public enemy No. 1, is a partial excuse for the stupendous increase in our national debt and the confiscatory taxes with which our people are, and the future generations will be, burdened. It is an excuse for, but not an answer to, our failure to economize.

Two wars—the first fought to end all wars—the second to carry the "four freedoms" throughout the world, have left the world with active fighting on four fronts, millions of slave laborers, and millions of people under the domination of Communist leader Joe Stalin. While we ourselves are not in a shooting war, we are in a "cold war," an economic war. We are at the moment signing up allies to form a coalition of nations which we hope will win the next world war. We are back to the Old World balance-of-power theory.

If the refusal of Congress to bring about some economy, greater efficiency in our executive departments, our repeated gifts of billions of dollars to other nations and peoples continue, it is evident that we will ultimately come to the end of our resources. It is equally apparent that, having reached that point, we will not only be unable to help others, but to adequately defend ourselves.

Notwithstanding these two wars, the nations of the world are not at peace. We are about to enter into an Atlantic Pact which, whatever may be its legalistic wording and interpretation, commits us to be a participant in any war which may come to any one of the nations signing that pact. We on one side, Russia on the other, are striving to reestablish the old balance-of-power arrangement. But in this case we do not reserve to ourselves the right to go in, or stay out of, a war—no matter by whom, or for what cause—started.

We are now committed to an additional Marshall plan of some $5,550,000,000. Our national defense program, if you wish to call it that, calls for an expenditure of something like $15,000,000,000. Aid to veterans will require around $6,000,000,000. The interest charge on the national debt will cost something like $6,000,000,000 per annum. Other programs require other billions.

From the foregoing, which is brief and incomplete, and from the facts known to every member of the committee, it is perfectly clear, and I doubt if anyone will ever deny, that, unless we economize on some front, we will go the way of all nations which have consistently and persistently in their expenditures exceeded their incomes.

We promise our constituents that we will cut down Federal expenditures but, due to the pressure of first one group, then another, we do not keep faith with our people.

In the current CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 7, 1949, page A607 and subsequent pages, there is a statement by the chancelor of the University of Kansas, entitled "America the Profligate," from which I quote this paragraph:

"In 1933 our national debt was $22,000,000,000; in 1948 it has swollen to $252,000,000,000; 11 times as great.

"In 1933 there were 572,000 Federal civilian employees; in 1948 there were 2,200,000—or 4 times as many. In 1933, also, these Federal civilian employees were paid $972,000,000; in 1948 they were paid $6,000,000,000, or over 6 times as much. And in 1948 the Federal Government added an additional civilian employee every 3 minutes—or 513 per working day, or 150,000 for the year.

"In 1915 there were 158 Federal bureaus and divisions; in 1932 there were 529; in 1944 1,141; in 1948 2,700. Our very laws foster the growth of bureaucracy, because our civil-service law bases the pay of Federal employees on the number of underlings.

"We have taken onto the Federal pay roll 24,283 personnel specialists; there are twenty-odd lending agencies, there are 45 agencies concerned with housing. For some strange reason there are 400 people in the Legal Division of the Department of Agriculture. There is 1 employee in the Bureau of Indian Affairs for every 6 Indian families in America. Chicago alone has 530 Federal offices.

"In a recent year the Federal Government gave hand-outs to individuals and grants-in-aid to local and State governments totaling $5,500,000,000. One Federal agency spent $100,000,000 to keep prices down; another spent $80,000,000 trying to keep prices up.

"And in all this welter of bureaucratic confusion there is no complete accounting system and no complete set of books."

On page 2049 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 9 there is a statement by Senator BYRD which shows that in 1948 the executive department added to its pay roll more than 101,000 additional employees. The table on the following page shows that, in December of 1948, the pay of the civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government was $64,000,000 more than it was in the preceding month.

The present bill increases the travel allowance of civilian Federal employees who are required to leave their post of duty on Government business from 5 to 7 cents per mile when using their own automobiles.

The bill proposes to increase the subsistence allowance from a maximum of $6 per day to a maximum of $9 per day (original figure was $10).

It is assumed that the cost of travel and the cost of sustenance has over the years increased. No doubt that is true, but whether those costs will go up or down during the next few years is wholly problematical.

The most recent report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics shows that we have had a 5-month consecutive decrease in the national over-all retail prices, and this decline is the longest consecutive one in 10 years. The same report shows that food prices have continued to decrease for seven consecutive months.

From statements on record, there is proof that both President Hoover and President Roosevelt were utterly mistaken in their predictions on the question of future employment and cost of living—the first predicted that prosperity was just around the corner—the second predicted unemployment, the necessity for creating some 8,000,000 Federal jobs. Each was completely mistaken, though each had the advice of a staff of so-called experts.

One thing experience has demonstrated, and that is that seldom, if ever, when a job in the executive department has been created or a rate of pay established, is the job either abolished or the rate of pay lessened.

The argument in support of this bill is that no Federal employee should be required to spend his own money while engaged in Government business away from his assigned place of duty. That argument would be sound if the Federal employee did not know his rate of and total pay and his duty when he applied for the job.

The answer to the argument is that, on the whole, except for top positions, there are many applicants for every Federal job—and from qualified applicants who know the rate of compensation and the task for which they apply. To those of us who believe in the law of supply and demand, that situation is proof positive that Federal employees are not underpaid; that they receive ample compensation for the work they perform. Men do not usually apply for underpaid jobs.

It is true in some instances that the monetary rewards for services rendered in some of the professions, in some businesses, and in some industries are greater than for a comparable service rendered in the executive departments of State or Federal Governments. But the direct financial compensation of the civilian employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government is but a part of the story.

The Federal employee, with one exception, has sick leave of 15 days and a vacation allowance of 26 working days each year. In the one exception, the postal employees, the sick-leave allowance is 10 days and the vacation leave is 15 days.

The Federal employee has a 5-day week. If a holiday falls on a Thursday, he will sometimes get Friday as well as Saturday off. Sometimes, if there is some celebration in which the administration is interested, as recently when President-elect Truman returned to Washington, there is an additional day or two of vacation.

In short, the Federal employee's workyear calls for about 220 days of employment; his compensation is on a yearly basis. (Days in a year number 365. Subtract 26 days of vacation, 15 days for sick leave, 52 Sundays, 52 Saturdays, and certain other holidays—leaves less than 220 8-hour workdays.)

The Federal employee has retirement pay, for which he, of course, pays a part.

The Federal employee never misses a pay check, no matter how much his employer—the Government—may lose during a year. No matter how great the Federal deficit, the Federal employee gets his check on the appointed day.

The Federal employee, all things considered, has one of the best jobs available in the United States of America. He takes that job with his eyes open, knowing his rate of compensation, the task confronting him, and the approximate effort required to efficiently perform that task.

There is no more reason for paying the cost of his food and lodging while absent from his post of duty on the regular work pertaining to his job than there is for paying every man who works at a job for the time and expense of traveling to and from that job or while away from home.

Mr. James Doran, Chief Post Office Inspector, testified that, with few exceptions, the employees of his Department would be fully compensated if they received $8 per day for subsistence.

It would seem that a per diem increase from $6 to $9—a net increase of $3 per day—is an invitation to travel, unfair to the average taxpayer and grossly excessive when compared with $50 or less per month paid to millions of our needy citizens.

True, the cases are not comparable, but the wide spread between $9 per day paid the Federal employee and the $1.70 per day paid the needy, aged, and unfortunate citizens, should give us pause.

All admit the necessity for a reduction in Federal expenditures—very few will, when the occasion arises, meet the issue, vote to reduce expenditures. Very few will refuse to yield to the demand of the bureaus and the Federal employees for an increase in Federal expenditures.

While the $9 per day is the maximum, not the minimum, experience and the record show that every dollar appropriated to the various departments for these particular items is expended.

If in one bureau of a department there is a reduction of employees, an increase in the rate or the number of employees in other bureaus invariably absorbs the whole appropriation and sometimes calls for a deficiency bill.

If the promises of candidates for office that Federal expenditures would be reduced, if they were elected, are ever to be kept, even the most simple-minded will recognize the fact that some time we must make a beginning. Why not here? Cannot we at least hold the line?

Respectfully submitted.

CLARE E. HOFFMAN.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time to my good friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN].

Mr. KARSTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, it is terribly difficult to follow my colorful friend from Michigan to speak on this bill. In passing, and I think I can do it modestly enough, because I am not a member of the subcommittee, I do want to praise the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN] and the members of his subcommittee for the really fine work that they have done on this bill. As I say, I am not on the subcommittee, but I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER] made a great contribution to the committee because of his experience. He was quite modest and did not tell you much about it here, but he did make a real contribution in the preparation of this bill.

As the gentleman from Michigan himself has said, the bill was reported out unanimously by the committee, except for the vote of the gentleman from Michigan. I think that the gentleman from Michigan opposed the bill just because he was born in the objective case.

I am sorry I overlooked one gentleman on the subcommittee who also made a great contribution in the drafting of the bill. That was the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARVEY] who also had much experience. In giving special praise to these gentlemen I do not mean to omit any of the other members of the subcommittee who also made their contribution.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. LANHAM. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. As I understood you, you said that the gentleman from Michigan opposed this bill because he was born in the objective case. My reason for opposing this bill grows out of—not a reason; but one reason, perhaps, is—yes, maybe it is a reason—it is because I still have the calluses on my hands from the time that I had to work to earn money. Many of my constituents are in the same fix.

Mr. LANHAM. I think most of us Congressmen have calluses on different parts of our anatomy. I do not know whether the gentleman from Michigan is in that category, but I should think that since he has been down here for quite a time, that probably the calluses are gone from his hands.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Let me say that I love the gentleman from Michigan. I would not have his people retire him for anything. You know, I think he is sort of a hair shirt. All of us need a hair shirt at times. The gentleman from Michigan, I think, is the hair shirt of the House of Representatives. I just hope his people do not retire him. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed, I rose to say something else.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Will the gentleman just yield for one short statement?

Mr. LANHAM. I will yield for just one question.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. All right, but it is not a question, it is a statement.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman will make it short, I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The calluses are still on my hands, and my objection is to those who have the calluses somewhere else getting this increase. That is one reason for my objection, or at least, one of them.

Mr. LANHAM. I am sure the House is going to vote to allow this increase, because we cannot afford to ask our faithful employees to spend money out of their own pockets when they are on trips assigned to them by their superiors. There is one other matter that I would like to call your attention to. I agree with the gentlemen, especially on the left, who have raised the question of the unnecessary trips that are made by Federal employees. Something was said about unnecessary trips to conventions. I want to say that there is something even more serious than that. I had intended to offer an amendment to this bill which would have corrected this matter which I wanted to talk to you about just briefly, but I understand that it may not be germane to the bill, so I am going to try to handle it in a separate bill.

Not only are the expenses of many Federal employees to conventions paid, but actually dues and various fees are paid in various organizations—in more than a thousand different organizations—by the Federal Government, and any number of men—not just one or two but any number of Federal employees—are sent to those conventions, and they will stay there 2 or 3 days or a week when they do not need to be there on Government business more than an hour or two. It has gotten to be such a racket that the armed services have asked a very high-ranking official to make an investigation of the procedure. The things that he has disclosed to me are really alarming. I am going to place in the RECORD a brief, with the consent of the committee, which will disclose in a measure what is going on. I hope when the proper time comes the House will back us in this effort to stop this unnecessary expenditure for attending conventions all over the country, with crystal ball rooms, strip-tease girls, and liquor, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] knows.

Should officers and employees of the Government be permitted to belong officially to, and attend meetings, at Government expense, of religious, cultural, scientific, vocational, professional, and technical societies; trade associations, and standardizing bodies, labor unions, clubs, lodges, and fraternal orders; better-government groups, and other private organizations?

Congress attempted, with great wisdom, to answer this question in the act of June 26, 1912 (5 U. S. Code 83) which reads as follows:

No money appropriated by this or any other act shall be expended for membership fees or dues of any officers or employee of the United States or of the District of Columbia in any society or association or for expenses of attendance of any person at any meeting or convention of members of any society or association, unless such fees, dues, or expenses are authorized to be paid by specific appropriations for such purposes or are provided for in express terms in some general appropriation. This section shall not be so construed as to prohibit the payment from the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture of expenses incidental to the delivery of lectures, the giving of instruction, or the acquiring of information at meetings by its employees on subjects relating to the work of the Department authorized by law.

Later, in the act of February 2, 1935 (31 U. S. Code 551), Congress stated more emphatically a policy relative to this matter. That act reads as follows:

That, unless specifically provided by law, no moneys from funds appropriated for any purpose shall be used for the purpose of lodging, feeding, conveying, or furnishing transportation to any conventions or other forms of assemblage or gathering to be held in the District of Columbia or elsewhere. This section shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of expenses of any officer or employee of the Government in the discharge of his official duties.

The conclusive thinking which prompted these two acts of Congress was that membership in private organizations is a matter which pertains to the individual; that his purpose in joining a church, lodge, club, union, society, association, or other private organization is to receive personally the benefits to be derived primarily from attendance at meetings; and that the individual officer or employee, who receives personally, the benefits of such membership should share alone the expense which he incurs by reason of his membership obligations.

On the other hand, Congress has recognized that cooperation in, and coordination of, activities of private organizations, which relate to authorized activities of the Government, requires frequently that departments and agencies of the Government have official representation at meetings of private organizations. The Congress has, therefore, made generous appropriations thereof.

In fact, Congress has been too generous and has not scrutinized, as carefully as it might have done, the possible interpretations of the proposed provisions of various appropriation acts which it has enacted from time to time. For example, an appropriation act provision which authorizes expenditures, not to exceed $50,000, for expenses incident to attendance at meetings is entirely too broad to insure that taxpayers' money will not be wasted for joy-riders and lavish entertainment of officers and employees at Government expense. It is possible, under such appropriation-act provisions, for officers and employees of the Government, who are members of a private organization and who would otherwise attend meetings of such organization at their own expense, to receive reimbursement by the Government of expenses incurred in attendance at meetings of such organization upon the premise or pretense that work being done in the department or agency concerned is benefited by such attendance. Such provisions permit officers and employees of the Government to attend meetings, at distant places, over periods of a week or longer at Government expense, including luxurious travel and hotel accommodations and lavish entertainment, when the only matter of material interest to the Government under discussion at such meetings is scheduled for a mere 1- or 2-hour discussion at a specified hour on a certain day. It is also possible, under such broad provisions, for officers and employees to be reimbursed for unjustifiable expenses, disguised under such names as—

Registration fees which may be defined as special membership fees extracted by some private organizations of their members, in attendance at meetings, as a means of raising slush funds required to defray such extraordinary expenses as rental of a crystal ballroom in which joyous deliberations are to be held; the employment of loud music makers and enticing strip-tease dancing girls; and the cost of stimulating drinks, big cigars, elaborate decorations, souvenir programs, conspicuous membership badges, etc.

Appropriation-act provisions which permit attendance, at Government expense, of officers and employees, who are members of an organization, at meetings of such organizations upon premise or pretense that work being done in the department will be benefited thereby does not appear to be in accord with the apparent intent of the act of June 26, 1912 (5 U. S. C. 83) and the act of February 2, 1935 (31 U. S. C. 551). That intent was apparently to prohibit payment of expenses incident to membership in private organizations as distinguished from the payment of expenses incident to the performance of official duties. The reimbursement of the personal expenses of members of an organization upon the premise or pretense that their attendance at meetings of such organization will benefit work being done by the Government presents an attempted justification of the misuse of taxpayers' money which, to say the least, appears highly untenable.

Aside from the apparent misuse of taxpayers' money, the practice of paying the expenses of members of an organization upon the premise or pretense that their attendance will benefit work being done by the Government gives rise to a discrimination against certain officers and employees which should not be tolerated in the Government service. This discrimination is brought about by the fact that Congress does not appropriate sufficient funds to permit attendance, at Government expense, of all officers and employees of a department or agency, who are members of an organization holding a meeting, and departments and agencies, not having sufficient funds for all, is permitted to pay the expense of the few members, who would otherwise attend at their own expense, in discrimination against the larger number of members whose attendance might likewise benefit work being done in the department but who do not receive reimbursement of their expenses.

Another ill effect of the practice of permitting officers and employees to attend meetings as members of an organization and as representatives of the Government is that it permits dual relationships without due regard to the act of March 4, 1909 (18 U. S. C. 93), which reads as follows:

> No officer or agent of any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, and no member or agent of any firm, or person directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm, shall be employed or shall act as an officer or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm. Whoever shall violate the provision of this section shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than 2 years.

The most serious effect of permitting officers and employees, who are members of an organization, to attend its meetings, at Government expense, as members of the organization and as representatives of the Government, is to permit departments and agencies of the Government to have membership representation in private organizations in compromise of the sovereignty of government and in violation of the American concepts of government which provide for the separation of government and society, church and state, and government and enterprise; to permit officers and employees of the Government, in violation of the American doctrine of free enterprise, to assume functions in private enterprise which should be performed by personnel in private enterprise; and to set a precedent for the infiltration of government in society, church, and enterprise which could lead eventually to a merger of government, society, church, and enterprise like that which exists in fascistic and communistic countries. Such infiltration, if permitted, would strike at the very foundation of our concepts of government and our free institutions. Trends of this nature should be viewed as creeping socialism, which, if permitted to advance, could soon become galloping communism.

Still another ill effect of permitting departments and agencies of the Government to accept membership in private organizations is that such departments usurp and confer on such organizations legislative authority which the Constitution of the United States confers exclusively on the Congress. In accepting a membership in a private organization, the department or agency concerned subscribes to the constitution and bylaws of such organization and subjects itself to legislative action of the membership of such organization. Therefore, the Government becomes committed to actions decreed by the membership of such organization without authority of Congress.

The fact that officers and employees of the Government vote at meetings, in the name of their respective departments and agencies, permits the American public to gain the impression that the Government is sponsoring those organizations and sanctions their actions. For example, if officers and employees, in attendance at a meeting of a standardizing organization, cast a vote in the name of their department or agency, to approve the adoption of a certain standard, the impression is gained by the American public, at least by implication, that the Government approves such standard and sanctions, without due process of law, the boycott of similar products.

Reportedly, there are more than 1,000 private organizations in which officers and employees of the Government hold membership. It stands to reason that the Congress cannot permit departments and agencies of the Government to accept membership in any of these organizations without discrimination against other organizations which seek sponsorship by the Government. It is submitted, in this connection, that private organizations desire especially to print the names of officers and employees of the Government in their letterheads and other advertising matter as a means of conveying to the American public the impression that their actions have the approval of the Government itself. Therefore, if one organization is to have the right to use the name of the Government in its letterhead, all other organizations will seek the same right. This fact alone should indicate clearly to persons of reasonable intelligence that departments and agencies of the Government cannot accept membership in any one private organization without accepting membership in hundreds of other organizations. It emphasizes clearly that departments and agencies of the Government should have a liaison relationship with private organizations which are engaged in activities relating to the authorized work of such departments and agencies, but that they should not have a membership relationship in organizations which are not created and controlled wholly by Congress.

Seemingly, the time has come for the Congress to state more emphatically that taxpayers' money will be spent only for Government liaison representation at meetings of private organizations. No man can serve two masters. It is not the policy of the Government to permit interested persons to act as agents for the Government. The dual attendance of officers and employees of the Government at meetings of private organizations as members of the organization and as official representatives of the Government should be more specifically prohibited, if necessary, by an amendment to the act of March 4, 1909 (18 U. S. C. 93) and other criminal statutes which prohibit interested persons from acting as agents for the Government. See Fifth United States Code, pages 99–100 and Eighteenth United States Code, pages 198, 203.

But, if the Congress desires to correct the mistaken belief that departments and agencies of the Government must have membership representation in private organizations which are engaged in activities relating to their authorized work, and if the Congress desires to prohibit the usurpation of its legislative functions by departments and agencies which attempt to confer legislative authority on private organizations by accepting membership therein, it would appear that the Congress should declare that—

> It is the declared policy of the United States to maintain, to the extent that the material interest of the Government may be involved, a liaison relationship with all organizations, but to accept membership only in organizations which are created, and controlled wholly, by the Congress.

It would further appear that a uniform provision should be made in all appropriation acts, beginning with those now under consideration by Congress, which will authorize only the payment of "expenses incident to liaison attendance of duly designated liaison representatives at meetings of private organizations for the accomplishment of official missions or the performance of official duties in in connection with authorized activities" of the department or agency concerned.

Note: The word "liaison," which now has common usage, was little known prior to the First World War when it was learned and used by American soldiers in France. It became necessary, during that war, for adjoining American and French units to maintain contact with each other and for respective commanders of such units to keep informed of the plans and movements of each other.

This contact was established by the sending of an officer by the French commander to the headquarters of the American unit to obtain information relative to American plans and the sending of an officer by the American commander to headquarters of the French unit to receive information relative to French plans. These officers were called liaison officers. However, the French liaison officer did not become a member of the American unit nor the American officer become a member of the French unit. They were merely sent to the respective headquarters for liaison purposes, to wit, to serve as a communication link in obtaining information, to keep their commanders informed, and to help coordinate mutual plans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANHAM], has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Travel Expense Act of 1949."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I invite the attention of the chairman of the committee reporting this bill in order to ask a couple of questions. What is the additional cost to the Government if this bill should be passed?

Mr. KARSTEN. It is estimated the additional cost would be a little in excess of $50,000,000. That is the maximum figure but not necessarily definite. It may be less, but that is the maximum it could be.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is based upon an estimate on the current number of employees, or what?

Mr. KARSTEN. It is based on the current number of employees and the estimated travel that will be performed over the next fiscal year. Of course, you cannot ascertain a thing like that definitely. It is merely a Dr. Gallup system that they employ in arriving at a conclusion.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, every agency makes an estimate of the travel money it needs for the ensuing year. A great many of them came before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations for Independent Offices. I am interested in what this is going to do to the budget and the appropriation for these independent establishments of the Government.

Mr. KARSTEN. The total travel cost for the fiscal year 1949 is estimated at $317,000,000. The military travel amounts to $166,000,000. That leaves $151,000,000 for civilian travel. The cost of this bill will be a little in excess of $50,000,000 in addition to the $151,000,000.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then I should like to inquire with respect to the meaning of the language which is used in section 8. The first two lines of section 8 appearing on page 4 of the bill reads as follows:

The Subsistence Expense Act of 1926 and the Auto Mileage Act of February 14, 1931, are repealed.

Then the section concludes with this language:

Provided, however, That acts making appropriations for the fiscal years 1949 and 1950 (whether approved before or after the approval of this act) which authorize or permit, in either general or specific terms, the payment of travel or transportation expenses without regard to the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended, or the Standardized Government Travel Regulations, shall be construed to authorize payment of such expenses from the appropriation concerned without regard to this act.

Now, does that proviso suspend the application of this act as far as the appropriation for the fiscal years 1949 and 1950 are concerned?

Mr. KARSTEN. If the gentleman will yield further, I would like to answer his question. The adoption of this section will repeal the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, the Auto Mileage Act of 1931, and will modify all other acts, general or special, covering the type of expenses and allowances embraced by this bill, including those acts authorizing travel without regard to the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926 and/or the Standardized Government Travel Regulations, and those authorizing reimbursement of actual and necessary expenses, and those using similar language, except as noted below, but only to the extent of inconsistency or conflict with its provisions. A similar repeal clause is found in section 9 of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926. However, appropriation items for examination of estimates in the field and inconsistent provisions now contained in appriation acts for the fiscal year 1949, and any similar provisions which may be contained in appropriation acts presently being considered for the fiscal year 1950, will be retained. This will preserve certain existing exceptions to the general travel-expense laws until the respective Committees on Appropriations shall have had an opportunity to consider whether such exceptions are necessary or desirable under those laws as changed in the bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Let us bring that down to cases and consider this proviso in section 8 dealing with expenses and mileage to be paid out of the appropriation acts for 1949 and 1950. Does that say they will be on the new basis or on the old basis?

Mr. KARSTEN. It will be on the basis of the new rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. I believe we can save some time this way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from South Dakota would yield, as I construe that language—and I could be wrong—it simply means that the new rate is authorized, but that it does not, by this same term, authorize the appropriations for travel made for this fiscal year by the Committee on Appropriations to be increased in the same proportionate amount.

Mr. KARSTEN. We have no power to appropriate, as the gentleman realizes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; is it not a fact that what this language purports to do and what it means is that the language which frequently used in appropriation measures which provides for exemptions and appeals and which by the very terms of the appropriation language excludes it from the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926 and the Standardized Government Regulations is not affected, so that if the Committee on Appropriations wanted to make an exception in the field for a committee it is not bound by these two standardized expense items that are referred to, but those provisions will still continue to be effective? Is that what this means and all that it means?

Mr. KARSTEN. That is exactly what it means.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Finally, do the words "this act" in line 6, page 5, refer to the bill under consideration as an act, or to the Subsistence and Expense Act of 1926?

Mr. KARSTEN. It refers to the bill presently under consideration.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I thank the gentleman as I believe this discussion will facilitate the operation of the bill if it becomes law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, first of all may I say that this is a long-delayed piece of legislation in the interest of doing the fair-minded, honest Government employees, simple justice, and I shall support it.

It is easy to find fault with the expenditures of the Government and to point out specific cases where Government employees violate the law in the matter of travel. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, a member who has spent a great deal of time examining travel estimates that have been submitted by the various executive agencies of Government, I can say that I know there can be shown instance after instance where Government employees have violated existing law in the matter of travel. This is a matter that is repeatedly being called to the attention of the administrative agencies of our Government and it is an administrative matter.

We know that people sometimes find it convenient to travel to Kentucky when the Kentucky Derby is on, we know that they sometimes find it convenient to travel to Florida when the sunshine is at its best; but may I say that from my observation the overwhelming majority of the rank and file of Government employees do not want to travel and in many instances resist the action of their superiors in compelling them to travel because they are required to pay a large portion of the expense out of their own pockets.

What is the situation presently? Every agency of Government submits a proposal to the Appropriations Committee for a travel estimate. Thus this Congress through its Appropriations Committee has all the opportunity in the world to write in language in an appropriation bill limiting them in whatever way the committee sees fit and to only appropriate the amount of money that this Congress deems proper to be spent for travel, even under this bill. Every single agency comes up with its estimates for travel. We go into them meticulously, including the matter of the number of automobiles, the matter of replacement and the use of those automobiles. But all the laws in the world cannot govern human conduct in every little aspect. I know there are people using Government automobiles who ought not to use them, but I also know that Government agencies have committees that are at work all the time trying to correct that practice, and disciplinary action has frequently been imposed upon those who violate the rules and regulations with respect to the use of automobiles.

I want to see the honest, decent Government employee adequately compensated if in the performance of his duties and functions he must travel in the public interest. It seems to me it is beside the question to point to the fact that the Congress has failed to properly take care of the aged. I agree with that. But that is another problem. That problem is not before the House at the present time. I hope it will come before the Congress soon and I have been urging it for a long time; but in this matter do not claim that every Government employee is attempting to filch the Government in the matter of travel. When a man is compelled to travel, I know in agencies with which I am familiar, they outline and set up not only the purpose of the travel but the routes to be taken and they know from a spot check what the expense ought to be for hotel and suitable accommodations. There is no one filching very much on the Government at $6 a day, I can tell you that, and they will not be filching much on the Government at $9 a day, either, under present conditions. So I hope we will not be misled by a little flamboyant argument which to me does not touch the merits of the situation at all.

We have it within our control to limit the appropriations, if necessary, for travel and to make any investigation we desire to see that those who are in travel status comply with the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRICE. I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I thoroughly agree with every word he has said on this subject. From my acquaintance with the operation of the different departments, in my opinion they are overrigid in the requirements that they set up on travel.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, I want to say, and I am not critical, that I have never taken a trip at Government expense in the 10 years I have been in Congress. I have never taken a trip of any kind or character. I perhaps should have taken some. But I note when some of the bills come in by Members of Congress that have been taking trips all over the world, and making investigations in the field, that their expenses are not limited to $6 a day that the Government employees are limited to, regardless of what their status may be. Now, there is a matter of simple justice that is involved here for the Government employees. You hired them. We hired them. If we have too many employees, let us get rid of them. If we are spending too much for travel, let us cut the appropriations. That is the place to do it and not in a bill such as this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. When used in this act—

(1) The term "departments and establishments" means (A) any executive department, independent commission, board, bureau, office, agency, or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government, including wholly owned Government corporations and the municipal government of the District of Columbia, and (B) any office, agency, or other establishment in the legislative branch of the Government (except Members of Congress and offices and committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives), and (C) any office, agency, or other establishment in the judicial branch of the Government.

(2) The term "subsistence" means lodging, meals, and other necessary expenses incidental to the personal sustenance or comfort of the traveler.

(3) The term "per diem allowance" means a daily flat rate of payment in lieu of actual expenses.

SEC. 3. Civilian officers and employees of the departments and establishments (except justices and judges), while traveling on official business and away from their designated posts of duty, shall be allowed, in lieu of their actual expenses for subsistence and all fees or tips to porters and stewards, a per diem allowance to be prescribed by the department or establishment concerned, not to exceed the rate of $10 within the limits of the continental United States and in case of travel beyond the limits of the continental United States not to exceed rates established by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget for the locality in which the travel is performed.

SEC. 4. Civilian officers or employees of departments and establishments or others rendering service to the Government shall, under regulations prescribed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and whenever such mode of transportation is authorized or approved as more advantageous to the Government (except that no determination of advantage is required where payment on a mileage basis is limited to the cost of travel by common carrier, including per diem), be paid in lieu of actual expenses of transportation not to exceed 4 cents per mile for the use of privately owned motorcycles, or 7 cents per mile for the use of privately owned automobiles or airplanes, when engaged on official business within or outside their designated posts of duty or places of service. In addition to the mileage allowances provided for in this section, there may be allowed reimbursement for the actual cost of ferry fares, and bridge, road, and tunnel tolls.

SEC. 5. The departments and establishments may advance, through the proper disbursing officers to any person entitled to per diem or mileage allowances under this act, such sums as may be deemed advisable considering the character and probable duration of the travel to be performed. Any sums so advanced and not used for allowable travel expense shall be recoverable by set-off of salary due, retirement credit, or otherwise, from the person to whom advanced, or his estate, by deduction from any amount due from the United States, or by such other legal method of recovery as may be necessary.

SEC. 6. The fixing and payment under this act of travel allowances, of advances and recovery thereof, and reimbursement of travel expenses under the act of March 3, 1875 (5 U. S. C. 73), shall be in accordance with regulations which shall be promulgated by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

SEC. 7. This act shall not be construed to modify or repeal any act providing for the traveling expenses of the President of the United States, President of the Senate, of Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners.

SEC. 8. (a) The Subsistence Expense Act of 1926 and the Auto Mileage Act of February 14, 1931, are repealed. All acts (other than the act of March 3, 1875 (5 U. S. C. 73), and appropriation items for examination of estimates in the field) providing for reimbursement of actual travel or transportation expense; and all other acts, general or special, which are inconsistent with or in conflict with the provisions of this act (except such acts or parts of acts as fix or permit rates higher than the maximum rates established under this act) are hereby modified, but only to the extent of inconsistency or conflict with the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That acts making appropriations for the fiscal years 1949 and 1950 (whether approved before or after the approval of this act) which authorize or permit, in either general or specific terms, the payment of travel or transportation expenses without regard to the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended, or the Standardized Government Travel Regulations, shall be construed to authorize payment of such expenses from the appropriation concerned without regard to this act.

(b) Wherever provision is made in any law for the payment of per diem allowances to officers and employees in any branch or establishment of the Government not covered by this act, in accordance with the rates provided in the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, such law is hereby amended to provide for payment at the rates prescribed in or under this act.

SEC. 9. This act shall take effect on the thirtieth day after the date of its enactment.

Mr. KARSTEN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be considered as read and printed at this point in the RECORD, and be open to amendment at any point thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 18, strike out "$10" and insert "$9."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PRIEST) having assumed the chair, Mr. BATES of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3005) to regulate subsistence expenses and mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees of the Government, pursuant to House Resolution 205, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 208 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2682) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock-piling Act, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] and yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 208 makes in order the immediate consideration of a bill (H. R. 2682) to amend the CCC Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock-Piling Act, and for other purposes. The resolution provides for an open rule and 2 hours of general debate.

This bill will generate considerable controversy, much of which, in my judgment, arises from general misunderstanding as to the purpose, intent, and necessity for legislation of this character. I am hopeful that general debate will dispel the uncertainty and much of the apparent controversy.

The CCC was created in 1933 as a Delaware corporation, and under such charter it had wide powers. Subsequently it operated and became a most helpful and useful instrument of the Government in carrying forward its farm program, and, with few exceptions, the Corporation had the confidence of everyone. Under the President's reorganization plans, the Corporation was made a part of the United States Department of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture was given the responsibility for general direction, supervision, and administration of its operations. Pursuant to the Government Corporation Control Act, the Corporation was given a Federal charter in 1948. The Corporation operated from 1939 until 1948 with the Secretary of Agriculture exercising the rights of the United States as sole stockholder. The Federal Charter Act of 1948 placed the control of the Corporation in its board of directors. H. R. 2682, which is proposed for consideration under the rule, would amend that feature of the act and restore to the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to supervise and direct the activities of the Corporation. The committee, and many of us, are of the opinion that this is good administrative procedure. The Secretary of Agriculture is responsible for the price-support program. The agency by which he discharges this responsibility is the CCC. It follows, therefore, that he should have the direct control and supervision of the Corporation in order that he might properly and efficiently discharge his responsibility. There are no hidden purposes, no evil motives. Simply, it is proposed to place authority with responsibility.

A program which undertakes to stabilize farm commodity prices by assuring a minimum loan price or by removing and disposing of burdensome surpluses by other means, is essential to the general welfare of our economy. Experience—bitter experience—has taught us that we can have no national security and prosperity without a prosperous farm economy. The CCC has contributed materially to our agricultural program and is the most important means of supporting farm prices and of reducing surpluses of farm commodities.

The second feature of the proposed legislation concerns the proper function of the Corporation in providing adequate storage for agricultural commodities. H. R. 2682 would restore authority to the CCC to acquire items of personal property used in connection with the care and preservation of agricultural commodities controlled by it. Also, it would permit the Corporation to acquire real property and such plants and facilities which are part of the realty as are necessary to provide adequate storage. The present law prevents the Corporation from acquiring or leasing real property for handling, storing, processing, servicing and transporting agricultural commodities subject to its control.

If the proposed measure is adopted, the Corporation can develop a well-rounded program under which it can acquire grain bins and other storage facilities, and can make them available to producers through the purchase and resale of bins and materials. In addition, it could make loans to construct or otherwise acquire such facilities, and assist in the solution of storage problems through other means. There would remain, however, the general prohibition upon the acquisition of real property or other facilities unless the Corporation determined that existing privately owned facilities for such commodities in the area concerned were not adequate. The bill would require the fullest cooperation on the part of the Corporation with private industry. This is the most important provision of the bill. There are Members who do not agree with the wisdom of the price-support program; however, an overwhelming majority of this House is convinced that the program has contributed materially to the welfare and stability of our Nation. In my area the price-support program is badly crippled and in some instances, it is useless and helpless, as a result of the lack of storage facilities for agricultural commodities. The absence of such facilities works an irreparable hardship upon the producers.

Approximately 15,000,000 bushels of sorghum grain is grown annually within a radius of 50 miles of my home. This is, I believe, the greatest grain-producing area in the United States without a terminal grain elevator and storage facilities for the orderly marketing of the crops. During the 1948 shipping season grain growers in this area, due to the lack of storge facilities, had to ship their products several hundred miles. Much of this grain was later exported, which, of course, required additional rail hauling to ports of embarkation. I am advised that the total expense of movement over this route was in the neighborhood of 59 cents per hundred pounds. Hundreds of thousands of dollars would have been saved if adequate storage had been available.

More unfortunate, however, was the fact that much of the grain could not be placed in the farm support-price program because of the lack of storage. Consequently, the producers were forced to sell below the value established by the price-support program. This resulted in great losses again to the producers. In this connection, the average freight on the car of grain to Galveston or Houston amounts to $300 per car. Last year a minimum of 6,000 cars were produced in that area. It is quite easy to see that approximately $2,000,000, which could have gone to the producers, went to freight.

When the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture appeared before the Committee on Rules, we were assured that it was the intent of the Secretary of Agriculture and the President of the CCC to exercise the authority proposed in H. R. 2682 through private channels. Farmer cooperatives and private will unquestionably be pleased to cooperate with the CCC in providing adequate storage facilities for grain and other commodities if this bill is passed. I do not believe that it is necessary for the Government to construct storage facilities. I do not favor that practice. I favor private construction with Government aid, and this bill will lead to that. I am convinced, however, that unless the CCC and the Secretary of Agriculture have the power and authority as proposed in H. R. 2682, to extend help and credit to private industry, we will not secure adequate or proper storage facilities. Unquestionably, Congress intended that the farmer should have the benefit of the price-support program. That program cannot now be fully effective with the present storage facilities in many areas. This bill is timely, it is consistent with our concepts of private enterprise and the proper function of Government in the great agricultural program. I am hopeful that there will be no objection to the rule and that we may consider this important legislation without delay.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Texas has said, this is a controversial measure. I think it has in it certain provisions which should probably be enacted into law. For that reason, I will not fight the rule on the bill. On the other hand, unless this bill is amended, and quite drastically amended, I will not be able to vote for it. I should like to point out one or two things that this bill does which seem to me to go way beyond the intent of the original measure.

Last year, with our very large crops and our surpluses, the support program failed in certain respects because adequate storage in certain areas, particularly for grain, was not available. I think everyone is sympathetic, with the prospect of another great crop coming on in this country, to making such storage available, in the event that private industry cannot supply it. This bill, however, goes very much further than merely making storage available. In the first place, it is so broadly drafted that the Commodity Credit Corporation, by determining itself that adequate storage facilities are not available in any given area, may then construct, purchase, own, or take an interest in new storage facilities. There is no limitation whatever on the amount of money that they can spend for that purpose. In fact, all the resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation are available for storage if the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation so wish to apply them.

In the second place, Mr. Speaker, the Commodity Credit Corporation is no longer a corporate entity. It has become under this bill a dummy for the Secretary of Agriculture. It used to have a Board of Management. Under this bill the Secretary of Agriculture appoints every one of the Directors, and the Directors have to operate under him as chairman subject to his general supervision and direction. In other words, he not only appoints every member of the board, but they have to operate under his supervision and direction. You might just as well have a single-man show running the whole thing and controlling well over four billions of dollars without any check whatsoever as to how the money is spent, except the statutory check, which is an extremely broad one.

I am hopeful that when this bill comes up for amendment, that an amendment will be offered which will make it very clear that the Commodity Credit Corporation is not going to go into the business of building storage facilities in competition with private industry in a given area or in an area where they may claim they have to have new cold storage or other facilities to take care of perishable goods, when there is plenty of storage available at comparatively short-haul distances away from the area where they feel new storage facilities should be had.

Clearly, every safeguard ought to be put into this bill to keep the Government out of competition with private industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I have yielded myself this extra time because I want to get one question cleared up, if I might.

I am wondering if I could have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a question.

I notice that in this bill there is language on page 2 line 18 which allows the Commodity Credit Corporation to create storage facilities within an area concerned. I am particularly interested in connection with wool. For instance, the Boston area and the Atlantic seaboard has for a hundred years or more been the greatest storage for the wool industry. I have talked to my woolen friends who are producers from the West, and they tell me they have no desire or intention of having storage facilities anywhere but on the Atlantic coast and that they would attempt to maintain the historic markets for wool as they have in the past. However, this bill would allow the Commodity Credit Corporation to take all of that business away, because clearly no one would claim, through the language of this bill, that the Atlantic seaboard is in the area where the wool clip is secured.

I wonder if the gentleman can clear that matter up for me.

Mr. SPENCE. I have a letter from the acting head of the Commodity Credit Corporation which discusses that proposition, and I think his statement will be satisfactory to the gentleman.

Mr. HERTER. Will the gentleman incorporate that in the RECORD?

Mr. SPENCE. I intend to read it to the House and have it incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. HERTER. That makes it clear that there is no intent to store wool in the West where the clip is sheared?

Mr. SPENCE. There is no attempt at all, where the private facilities in the East are adequate. They say it is historically true that they have been adequate. I would judge from the language of the letter that they do not intend to go into any other section.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] has again expired.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two additional minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Are we to understand from this colloquy and this kind of legislating of a letter written to the chairman of the committee which he may put into the RECORD later, if he secures permission, that the policy of the Commodity Credit Corporation with respect to wool storage is to say that it will only encourage wool storage in the vicinity of Boston? It happens that there are some of these wool growers who have thought it might be desirable to have the wool more largely stored somewhere near where it is produced and have it transformed into wool products there rather than ship it to Boston. They may also prefer to be in a position where they can bargain better as they can if they have local storage.

Mr. HERTER. I just made the inquiry of the chairman as to what the intent of that wording "in an area" means. Obviously at present the wool is shipped to the East because the mills are in the East. To be serviceable the wool has to go through a number of processes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I take it that it is satisfactory to the gentleman from Massachusetts to have the assurance given by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] but I cannot say that that will be very enthusiastically received by all the people who grow the wool.

Mr. HERTER. I am awaiting that assurance until I see what that letter is from the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. SPENCE. The letter was written to me in response to an inquiry which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER], made when we appeared before the Rules Committee. While I think it amply protects the interests of your people in Massachusetts, I do not know that it went into any controversy between the wool interests. I assume if it protects your interest it will protect their interest, because the same principles are involved.

Mr. HERTER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. The mere statement of fact that they do not intend to build a wool-storage house or cold-storage warehouses ought not have any affect on this legislation.

Mr. HERTER. I am hoping that matter will be taken care of by an amendment when the bill is read for amendment.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Well, storage could be built in Idaho. What we do not want is to have the Government do it.

Mr. HERTER. It is competition with the private warehouses we are trying to avoid.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. This is a matter that concerns every Member of this House. It does not make any difference whether he comes from the country or the city or where he comes from. I suggest there is not a quorum present. I will withdraw that suggestion now, however, but when it comes to reading the bill for amendment I want more Members on the floor.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 92]

Allen, Ill.	Gavin	Murphy
Anderson, Calif.	Gilmer	Murray, Wis.
Aspinall	Granahan	Norton
Barrett, Pa.	Green	O'Toole
Bentsen	Gwinn	Pfeifer,

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PRIEST). On this roll call 355 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include a copy of the May issue of the Connecticut Farmer.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of granting the rule. I concur in the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] that this bill, while it should have amendments and while there should be full discussion of it, nevertheless should come to the floor for that discussion.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] to page 388 of the Congressional Directory, in reply to his own statement that that provision of the bill before us gives the Secretary of Agriculture the power to appoint the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation. I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that under the present regulations of the Commodity Credit Corporation that situation very largely exists at the present time. The directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation today are, first, the Secretary of Agriculture; second, the Under Secretary of Agriculture, selected by the Secretary; and third, Mr. Trigg, who is associated with PMA and therefore with the Department of Agriculture; and then two other appointees, one from Tennessee and one from California, who are selected by the Secretary of Agriculture.

I concur with the gentleman from Massachusetts in his feeling that we would do well to retain the present situation, and I would be glad to support an amendment which removed the proposal in H. R. 2682, which makes a dummy board of directors, and with which I do not agree.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. HERTER. Under the 1948 act, each one of the directors was appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. It is quite true that those gentlemen are all concerned with the Department of Agriculture, but they had an independent status as directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation, which they would no longer have.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman's statement is correct. For that reason I would like to see an amendment offered to the bill to return to the condition which exists today.

My desire is to discuss rather briefly two amendments which I intend to offer to the bill when it comes before us for amendment. Both will be offered to page 2 of the bill and both will follow the wording in the printed bill before us.

The first is a clarifying amendment and it is the less important of the two amendments. It is a clarification which comes from a discussion in the other body between several Members of that body when the bill was there.

I quote from page 4975 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 25, in which the distinguished Senator from Iowa was about to offer an amendment, and instead stated that he would not offer it because of the discussion and his conviction "that it is not contemplated that the Commodity Credit Corporation will go into the business of lending to private or semiprivate corporations and that it will confine its activities to the purposes of the Commodity Credit Corporation's terms, the support price of commodities and private storage space which will belong to the Government, when storage space in the regular commercial channels or otherwise appears to be inadequate for the purpose of storing commodities."

Further you will find, at page 4976, that the Senator from New Mexico, who was handling the bill, said:

> I thank the Senator. I merely wanted to observe that the statement he made was in full accord with what I myself understand the situation to be.

Consequently, I shall offer as a clarifying amendment, what I hope will prove a limitation, and as it was understood in the other body. The amendment which I will offer will read as follows:

> Provided further, That the Corporation shall not acquire storage facilities or make loans to other than grain growers for farm storage until the full extent of the additional farm storage is determined.

That, as I said, is the less important; it is a clarifying amendment. I shall then, immediately following that, offer an amendment to read as follows:

> And provided further, To encourage the storage of grain on farms where it can be stored at the lowest cost, the Corporation shall make loans not to exceed 15 cents per bushel of the estimated crop to grain growers needing storage facilities when such grower shall apply to the Corporation for financing, and these loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of the price support loans or purchase agreements made between the Corporation and the growers.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's presentation, and particularly in the amendment which he has just read, which he proposes to offer. It seems to me that this amendment is very much in order, and I hope it may prevail. I was wondering, however, if the gentleman would follow the text of the amendment with me just a moment for the purpose of considering the addition of two or three words to clarify it.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I shall be very glad to have the gentleman's assistance.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. After the word "financing," where it reads: "shall apply to the Corporation for financing", I suggest adding the words "the construction or purchase of suitable storage."

In other words, to make it appear that the application for financing should be expressly for the purpose of providing storage.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is correct. The amendment is acceptable to me, and I shall consult the gentleman from South Dakota to see that the wording is correct before I offer the amendment.

I wish now to take a couple of minutes to explain the amendment.

Back under the days of the ever-normal granary the Secretary of Agriculture, then Mr. Wallace, built a great many steel bins. About 1942, they were distributed over the United States, largely in the Iowa corn belt, the Pacific Northwest, from Texas up to the Canadian border. The Government had bought these bins at a low price and the grain growers who received the bins have been paid for the storage of grain. The growers in most instances would have paid for this storage themselves.

The intent of my amendment, very briefly, is to make it possible for the CCC to advance a specific sum of money, about 15 cents per bushel, to the growers who wish to build bins upon their own farms. It is my conviction and I believe it is the conviction of the majority of farm people present that that is where the bins should be built. The purpose further is to deduct that advance money from the amount eventually paid under the CCC contract. The saving to the Government of the United States would be something between 20 and 25 millions of dollars.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. In just a minute I shall be glad to.

Over the years the loan and price support program has been extended by the Congress to all grains, with the understanding that this grain must be placed in proper storage. All grain growers should be able to take advantage of the price support program on an equal basis, whether by the CCC purchasing low-cost storage or by the farmers purchasing it themselves, or having storage made available to them.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. Does the gentleman feel that 15 cents a bushel is adequate for the Government to lend for storage facilities?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I felt it was, because the CCC pays the regular elevators 17.57 cents a bushel for in-and-out expense, for insurance and conditioning, and a year's storage.

Mr. JENSEN. The thing I am thinking about, if the gentleman will yield further, is that by this bill I think we should encourage the farmers to build storage right out on the farms.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is the intent of my amendment.

Mr. JENSEN. And of course you cannot build storage for 15 cents a bushel. I would expect the Government for this purpose to lend up to the full amount.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. We may continue the discussion when the amendment is actually offered.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has suggested that 15 cents a bushel be deducted. Of course, we have two kinds of program. One is a support-loan program. The other is the purchase program. In the purchase program we can very well see how it would be worked out, but under the loan program is it the gentleman's intention that the grain upon which a loan has been made will be held as additional security for the payment of the cost of the storage facilities?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I shall consult the gentleman on that point. The amendment covers both contracts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I expect to discuss this bill fully after the rule is adopted, if it is adopted. At this time I want to discuss one phase of it.

The primary purpose of the bill is to give ample storage facilities to the growers of agricultural products. The Commodity Credit Corporation operated under a Delaware charter for a number of years, as a matter of fact, up to last year. Under the Delaware charter the Commodity Credit Corporation was permitted to do many things not permitted under the pending bill. Commodity Credit Corporation could buy or build a warehouse anywhere throughout the country. It could lease land or a warehouse anywhere. Commodity Credit Corporation could buy real estate, and could operate warehouse facilities in their entirety. Last year this was changed when we obtained a new charter.

Primarily the question here is the creation of storage facilities for agricultural products, whether they are in the North, the West, the East, or the South. The Senate bill exempted cotton and tobacco warehouses. I have been fighting for the activities of the Commodity Credit Corporation since 1933. I say that it is wrong to exempt cotton and tobacco warehouses when the grain warehouses of the West are not exempted. It is said there was no need for the grain warehouses of the West last year. A lot of people did not think we need more cotton warehouses today.

Now, the fellow who says we do not need them cannot complain because they will not be built by the Commodity Credit Corporation if they are not needed. I introduced an amendment as follows:

Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate.

Why should we have the Commodity Credit Corporation? It is for the purpose of lending money to the farmers of this country in order to stabilize prices. Then if the private enterprise fellows fail to furnish the facilities the Commodity Credit Corporation can come along and furnish the same. The Commodity Credit Corporation cannot step in if private industry can do it. If we do not need cotton warehouses in any sections of the country, that is good, we certainly will not get them; but if we need them in any isolated section and private enterprise will not build them, the Commodity Credit Corporation has a right to step in there and give the same treatment to all the farmers throughout the country.

You have received letters here recently from the cotton warehousemen, the tobacco warehousemen, and the operators of cold storage facilities.

The Commodity Credit Corporation will not need to invade the field of private enterprise as long as private enterprise will produce the facilities. The Corporation has no right to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless private industry fails to provide such facilities, and that is what the Brown amendment means.

Let me tell you a story. A cotton council representative came to me, and a warehouse man, representing the cotton interests. They had this kind of an amendment, the same thing we have here, except they did not say who would determine the need for the facilities. Well, I said, "Somebody has got to determine it. You cannot leave it to the church members of your town, or the town council, or the cotton warehousemen; you must leave it to somebody who is familiar with the problem." Who is the proper one? The fellow that furnishes the money, the Commodity Credit Corporation. They agreed that someone had to determine the need for facilities where there were none and that the Commodity Credit Corporation naturally would be the one to make the decision.

Now, the only change we have made here, and the only thing they objected to was where my amendment says, "in that area." They did not know exactly what that meant. Well, that means the trade area in that particular part of the community.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LYLE. Is it not also true in connection with the gentleman's discussion here that not only will they not compete with private industry, but that they will cooperate with private industry to extend their facilities? I made considerable investigation along that line. As I understand, it will be the purpose of the Secretary of Agriculture and the president of the Corporation to cooperate with private industry if they want to extend their facilities rather than to build competing facilities.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. That is true.

Mr. LYLE. And perhaps the question of the Government building additional facilities will never occur if private industry cooperates and the farmers and various other agencies in the local areas will cooperate with them, to build adequate storage. As a matter of fact in my area, and further down in Texas this year—this is a shocking thing—we will probably raise a million bales of cotton and we have storage facilities for perhaps half of that.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The only thing that I cannot understand is why these fellows are afraid of the Commodity Credit Corporation building more cotton warehouses or tobacco warehouses. They have had the right since 1934 until last year to build them. Under my amendment I spell out what they can do and what they cannot do. If we need facilities for cotton or tobacco and private enterprise does not furnish them, then the very agency that furnishes the money, the Commodity Credit Corporation, will go in there and supply the facilities. Is that wrong? We want to help the poor farmer in the vicinity which has no storage. The Commodity Credit Corporation does not want to do anything but furnish the money to stabilize the prices of all agricultural commodities. How can they stabilize the price for the farmer who does not have the facilities? All through the years our cotton warehousemen, grain warehousemen, the tobacco warehousemen and all the rest of them have been satisfied with the treatment of the CCC until last year when the policy was changed. Up until 1948 CCC had the right to furnish warehouse facilities where private capital and private enterprise failed to do it, and certainly they have not built any for cotton or tobacco and cannot do so under the pending bill where private enterprise will do the job.

I have written to several people in my district, in reply to letters asking what my amendment means—and similar inquiries have been received by many of the Congressmen—and explained the situation to every one of them. Their replies were, "You are exactly right and your amendment treats all commodities in the same way and protects private enterprise as long as it will do the job of furnishing warehouse facilities." How can we be justified in excluding cotton warehouses and tobacco warehouses and say we must have warehouses for grain only? We may need more cotton warehouses next year or the year afterward like the grain growers of the West needed them last year, and if private enterprise does not furnish the facilities, CCC should do it.

I am surprised that anybody would object to such a fair statement as this.

Everybody was satisfied with what the CCC did under the Delaware charter. The Corporation had more authority under this charter than it has under the pending bill. You gentlemen on the left side of the aisle did not think you would need more warehouses last year but you did. Next year we may need more for cotton, tobacco, and other commodities. The CCC will not furnish any facilities unless we need them. If we should need them why not give CCC this power?

I have been one of the leading advocates of the Commodity Credit Corporation since 1933. The prime purpose of the CCC is to stabilize the prices of all farm commodities, and it is not an agency to help the warehousemen but at the same time the warehousemen have been helped more than any other group. Suppose we did not have the CCC. The cotton warehouses, tobacco warehouses, and all other warehouses would be practically empty. I am for free enterprise and I am against warehouses being furnished by the Government as long as free enterprise will supply the need, but I resent the fact that a few warehousemen are trying to defeat this bill when its purpose is not only to help the commodity growers but at the same time protect the warehouses in the vicinities where they are in position to store the agricultural products.

This is a fair bill, and I hope not a single one within the sound of my voice will vote against this bill, the purpose of which is to prevent an evil such as we have today.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Why was it necessary in this bill, in the gentleman's opinion, to change the administrative set-up as this bill provides? What has been wrong with the present administration under the law as we now have it?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I have confined my agrument principally to the facilities for storing all farm products everywhere. I have devoted my entire study to the merits of the ample storage facilities provision of this bill. As to the administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Department of Agriculture are the people who should operate and run the Commodity Credit Corporation. They are the people who know best about agriculture, they are the people who know about the worth of each commodity. I think the responsibility ought to be on the Department of Agriculture and not on the President of the United States, because the Secretary of Agriculture is clothed with that responsibility and if he makes a mistake it is easy to get rid of him. I think that is where it ought to be.

I am in favor of giving the same treatment and the same law to all storable agricultural products. No other course is tenable or justified. One year there might be a shortage of warehouses for one commodity and the next year a shortage for others. If this bill is adopted as written, the CCC cannot erect or own any storage facilities for any commodity as long as free enterprise will supply the facilities. No honest man can object to such a policy.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent in connection with the remarks I shall make on the bill that the clerk be permitted to read two letters which I desire incorporated in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2682) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2682, with Mr. GORE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the Commodity Credit Corporation is certainly entitled to the gratitude of the agricultural interests of our Nation because of the splendid service it has rendered to them through the years.

We all know the farmer is in an occupation full of hazards. "As ye sow, so shall ye reap," does not apply to the agricultural industry. The farmer is dependent upon the vicissitudes of seasons and pests. He does not know what he will reap when he plants, and he has no means of knowing what he can obtain for his product. The Commodity Credit Corporation, in its price support operations, gives the farmer some assurance that he will receive a reasonable price for his product. That is not only important to him, it is important to the dwellers in the city. It is important to them that the earth yield the food upon which they are dependent. So there ought to be no controversy between the agricultural interests and the industrial interests as to the support that should be given to the Commodity Credit Corporation. Without this assurance to the farmer, he might not plant to the extent that is necessary to feed the people.

I have always believed that a high price for agricultural products and a high wage for industrial workers go together, and that prosperity, when it comes, is general to all our people. We have never seen the country prosperous when the cities are in depression and we have never seen the cities prosperous when the country was depressed. So there should be a common interest in the welfare of the Commodity Credit Corporation. It was organized in 1933 under the laws of the State of Delaware, which is notorious for the granting of broad powers to corporations. They granted to this corporation powers as broad as could be given to any corporation. It continued under that charter until 1948 when the Government Corporations Control Act required this corporation to be incorporated under Federal law. It was incorporated under Federal law and its powers were so diminished that the Secretary of Agriculture and his general counsel said that they could not perform the functions of support price which they were charged with by law. Under that Act they were given the power to continue leases on land that had already been leased. They were not given power to purchase other property. They were not given power to lease other property. Therefore, when the bumper crops of the West came in, they did not have authority to afford storage on the farms or elsewhere necessary to carry out their support-price program. They could continue the leases which were in existence and they could have maintained the storage bins on the farms where they had been constructed. But, in support-price operations it is necessary to create these storage facilities on the farms where the bumper crops are or in that vicinity, and the bins that you have one year may not be useful in the support-price operations of the next year. It is necessary not alone to continue the leases you have, but to make other leases, and to purchase property, to secure the necessary storage for this support-price program which is so necessary to the farmers. They did not have that power, and a great deal of talk has been heard about selling bins where the bins were no longer useful and where the leases had expired, and that the only thing they had to do was to sell these bins to the farmers, and these bins would ultimately be used for the purposes for which they had been created. They could not construct bins on the farmers' land, unless they had the power either to lease or purchase, because when anyone constructs a building of any kind on your land without lease or without a purchase agreement, it belongs to you. That is the position in which the Commodity Credit Corporation found itself. The President has been criticized for the statements he made during the campaign. The statements were made because there was not sufficient storage to support the price, and they had no power to create such storage. I think an investigation of their powers will thoroughly justify the statements made by the President. The Secretary of Agriculture said they did not have the power. His general counsel says he did not have the power. A careful scrutiny of the powers granted under the act of 1948 will show that he did not have that power. Now, let us not make that mistake again.

I am in favor of maintaining private enterprise in its full integrity. I do not believe the Government ought ever to invade private enterprise where private enterprise can do the job. But in your jealousy of the protection of private enterprise, let us not make that mistake again and take away from this Corporation the necessary powers for the protection of the farmers' interests.

There are a great many amendments that are proposed, all to protect private interests. We eliminated from the Senate bill the exclusion of cotton and tobacco. All of my farmers are dependent on tobacco. It is their cash crop. I was perfectly willing that that provision be eliminated from the House bill because I remember the fight that has gone on here between oleomargarine and butter, and I do not want to encourage controversies between different agricultural interests. I think we must meet in cooperation. To exclude certain crops from the operation of this act would be unwise. I hold no brief for the Commodity Credit Corporation except what they have demonstrated before our committee. There was no testimony that they had at any time invaded the field of private enterprise. The testimony was that they had been scrupulous in keeping out of competition with privately owned storage warehouses, and had never constructed any except where they were absolutely essential for the purposes of the Corporation.

I think we can reasonably judge the future by the past and I think all of this apprehension that they will invade private enterprise has no foundation whatever. I hope that because of that feeling, some of the Members who have special interests in their own communities, will not attempt to weaken this bill so that it may again fail to function as it should, to protect the essential interests of the farmers of our country, upon whom we are dependent for our food and for our prosperity, and for the future economy of the Nation.

Several questions were asked before the Rules Committee about whether or not this Corporation could aid cooperatives or aid private enterprise in the construction of the necessary storage facilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes.

My answer to the committee was that they can do so, but in order to corroborate that I wrote to the Secretary of Agriculture and asked him whether he felt he had that power. I have a letter which I expect the Clerk to read to you, in which he says, through the acting president of the Corporation, that the Commodity Credit Corporation has the power to join with cooperatives and to join with private enterprise, in order to acquire sufficient storage facilities to meet the needs of the Corporation.

I have no doubt that they will do that, and it would be a reasonable and sensible thing to do, because it would save the Government money and it would encourage private enterprise which we all desire to encourage.

I am not going to take any further time. I feel confident that there is going to be no substantial opposition to this bill. I feel confident that not only the Representatives from the country but the Representatives from the cities will vote for it because I think they have a substantial interest in it. Part of my district is highly industrialized, but also in my district I have seven counties just as agricultural as any in the United States. I have never seen any conflict of interest between the people who reside in the cities and those who reside in the country. They have a common interest in the prosperity of agriculture.

I hope you will vote for this bill and vote for it practically as it has been reported by the committee which gives us the assurance that it can perform the functions it was created to perform.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the two letters to which I referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1949.

Hon. BRENT SPENCE,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPENCE: My attention has been called to statements that warehousemen operating wool storage facilities in the Boston area are concerned over whether, if the proposed amendments to the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act are adopted by the Congress, the Commodity Credit Corporation will engage in the acquisition or construction of additional wool storage facilities in the West. So far as we are able to foresee, the operations of the Corporation, any fears that Commodity Credit Corporation would engage in the construction of wool storage warehousing in the producing areas, thus depriving the Boston area of its accustomed function of providing storage for a large portion of the annual wool clip, are entirely groundless.

The proposed amendments require that Commodity Credit Corporation determine that existing privately owned storage facilities in the area concerned are not adequate before it can engage in any operation designed to provide adequate storage facilities for any commodity subject to one of its price-support programs. Due to the large marketing of wool in Boston, a considerable quantity of the annual wool clip is normally stored in the Boston area rather than being stored in the producing areas in the West. It is understood that there are ample wool storage facilities now in the Boston area. The only reason Commodity Credit Corporation would have to engage in wool storage operations would, therefore, be because increased wool storage facilities in the producing areas should become necessary in order effectively to extend price support to the producers. In view of the historic marketing pattern of the wool industry, we do not believe that the Corporation will be faced with any such necessity.

As the Department testified before your committee, Commodity Credit Corporation has no desire to enter the warehousing and storage field to any greater extent than that required to make effective its programs for agricultural commodities and will in the future, as it has in the past, continue to look to the private trade to furnish storage and warehouse facilities to the full extent that it can fulfill these demands. In this connection, we desire to point out that Commodity Credit Corporation was recently offered the use of surplus Army facilities in the Boston area for the storage of wool. In view of the ample storage facilities for wool now existing in the Boston area, the Corporation did not take advantage of these facilities and desires to continue to use to the maximum extent practicable private trade facilities. However, should the necessity for providing facilities arise, the Corporation should not be powerless to act.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK K. WOOLLEY,
Acting President.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1949.

Hon. BRENT SPENCE,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPENCE: This is in reply to your inquiry as to whether the Commodity Credit Corporation would have the authority under its charter, as proposed to be amended by the bill H. R. 2682, reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, to assist through loans and other means, cooperatives and other private concerns in providing needed facilities for the storage of commodities owned or controlled by the Corporation.

In our view, Commodity Credit Corporation, under its charter as proposed to be amended, would have authority to provide such assistance to cooperatives and other private concerns. We wish to point out, however, that under the provisions contained in H. R. 2682 the Corporation could not make construction loans in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation first determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate. Moreover, the Corporation is under a duty, to the maximum extent practical, consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purpose and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and the arrangements of the trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities.

The authority to assist cooperatives and other private concerns by loans or other means would, so far as practicable, be used to supplement financing provided by existing agencies, Government or private. For example, financing would be provided by Commodity Credit Corporation to cooperatives when the total financing required exceeded that which could be provided by the banks for cooperatives under the authority available to such banks and would in no way duplicate the functions of such banks. The same principle would be followed in providing financing to private concerns in cooperation with other existing financing agencies, either Government or private. Commodity Credit Corporation could also enter into guaranty arrangements for the purpose of making loans available through existing financing agencies.

UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA LIBRARIES

The Corporation also intends utilizing existing lending agencies to the fullest practicable extent in making loans available to farmers to provide necessary storage facilities.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK K. WOOLLEY,
Acting President.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, those letters are signed by Mr. Frank K. Woolley, President of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Secretary of Agriculture was out of town, but he was consulted by long-distance telephone and has agreed to the statements made in both letters.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, some provision ought to be included in this bill, in line with the suggestion made by the gentleman from California, to provide storage on the farm. That is the best place to have it. Storage on the farm will pay for those buildings because when a farmer makes a loan on his grain up to the amount permitted by law, he is given an extra 7 cents a bushel for storage. These buildings can be bought and paid for with this storage money. If you put your grain in one of the terminals of the country, or any warehouse, during the 12 months, it will cost you 17 cents a bushel to own that grain. When you can do this for 7 cents a bushel it looks like a good business proposition. I would not want to see the amendment limited to building farm storage out of steel, because steel has not come down. Steel is three times as high as it was when we built these buildings in the first place.

On the other hand, lumber has gone down perceptibly in the last 4 or 5 months. I know in my town of Williston they had an area half a mile square where every available space was occupied by grain storage bins, and all of those bins were full for 2 or 3 years. When they got through and did not need the bins any more, they were not useless. If they had been steel bins you could not have used them for anything else. But there in that same area of half a mile square the veterans of World War II went to work and every one of those places has been made into a residence at a time when you could not get lumber anywhere. It was a great boon for the returning soldiers of the country.

Therefore I would like to see an amendment put in this bill providing that the Commodity Credit Corporation may extend credit to the farmers out in the country to build storage facilities on their own farms.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to address my remarks to the facts which have come to light in the hearing on this bill and in the hearings which were conducted by our committee a year ago and to the facts which were presented to the country last November by the President and Secretary of Agriculture in connection with the facilities for storage of grain throughout the country.

The facts are as follows: First, the carry-over and production at the beginning of the marketing year of 1942 for corn, oats, wheat, rye, and barley total 187,300,000 tons, whereas, the comparable figure for 1948 is 186,400,000 tons or approximately 1,000,000 tons less than in 1942; second, the Department does not have any adequate information by which present storage capacity can be compared with the 1940 capacity. Furthermore, the Kansas report is the only comprehensive study made since 1943 and it shows a substantial increase in storage facilities in that area. It is also interesting to note that on September 1, 1948, in an information memorandum issued by the Assistant Administrator for Production to State PM chairmen, the following statement is made:

In the winter-wheat States the small-grain storage situation has eased up enough that the grain storage and transportation reports from the counties have been discontinued.

It is also interesting to note that the grain storage and transportation reports last year were received weekly from all the winter-wheat States, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, and Colorado, whereas, this did not warrant the collection of this weekly information except from the State of Colorado; and, third, the CCC, in my opinion, is not prohibited from furnishing storage bins to farmers.

It would appear that the activities of the Department stressing the grain storage situation laid the ground work for the President's charge at Dexter. In that speech he said:

And they brought into power a Republican Congress—the notorious "do nothing" Republican Eightieth Congress.

Let us look at the results of that change. This Republican Congress has already stuck a pitchfork in the farmer's back.

They have already done their best to keep price supports from working. Many growers have sold wheat this summer at less than the support price, because they could not find proper storage.

When the Democratic administration had to face this problem in the past, the Government set up grain bins all over the Wheat and Corn Belts to provide storage.

BINS NEEDED AGAIN

Now the farmers need such bins again. But when the Republican Congress rewrote the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation this year, there were certain lobbyists in Washington representing the speculative grain trade.

These big-business lobbyists and speculators persuaded the Congress not to provide storage bins for the farmers. They tied the hands of the administration. They are preventing us from setting up the storage bins that you will need in order to get the support price for your grain.

Now, what are the facts?

First. During the wheat-marketing season of 1948 there was much unused commercial grain storage capacity but because of the manner in which the wheat price-support program was developed and administered by the Secretary of Agriculture, farmers were unable to utilize this unused storage capacity.

Second. The failure of the Secretary of Agriculture to use available authority and put into effect an adequate wheat price support purchase program caused farmers to suffer losses running into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Either of the propositions mentioned above would have prevented the losses which have been incurred by farmers in selling wheat below the support level and show that the losses were, in fact, caused by improper administration of the price-support authority.

I shall discuss each of the two points:

In 1948 storage capacity was available but because of the manner in which the support-price program has been administered farmers were not able to utilize it.

The following table shows the percentage of rated commercial grain storage capacity filled on October 2, 1948:

Region:	Percent of capacity filled
Atlantic coast ports	31.5
Gulf coast ports	46.3
Northwestern region	53.5
Lower Lake region	38.9
East Central region	54.7
West Central region	89.9
Pacific coast region	73.3

It is clear from the foregoing that there are large quantities of unused grain storage capacity available.

Why did farmers sell wheat below the support level with this storage capacity available? The reason why this grain storage capacity remained unused is because of the manner in which the Department set up and administered the wheat price-support program. The rate of price support at the farms for wheat has been set up in reverse. Instead of adopting a policy of arriving at a support level at the farm or on a county basis and then working from the farm to the terminals, the support level was set up on a terminal basis and then worked backward from the terminal to get a farm-support price, which is the support price at the nearest terminal point less the cost of transportation and handling. Thus, when local storage was not available farmers could not move wheat beyond the terminal for storage and still obtain the same rate of price support. This caused the facilities at Kansas City and adjacent southwestern points to become filled with stored wheat and because of the unrealistic relationship between terminal price-support levels the wheat could not move out of Kansas City to easterly storage points where storage was available. When it became apparent that there would be congestion in Kansas and the southwest area the Department should have made readjustments in the terminal loan rates to reflect transportation costs to other terminals, thereby enabling producers to take advantage of storage capacity east of Kansas City. No move was made by the Secretary of Agriculture to relieve this situation, consequently, farmers experienced the anomalous situation of being compelled to sell wheat below the support level when unused storage capacity was available at points east of Kansas City. This situation can easily be illustrated by comparison of the loan rate at Kansas City with the loan rate at Chicago. The loan rate at Kansas City was $2.24 as compared with $2.29 at Chicago which is insufficient to permit wheat to move on to Chicago for storage.

If the Secretary of Agriculure in administering the wheat price-support program had established loan rates at the terminals which would have permitted the grain to move into available storage there would have been no "distress" wheat to have been sold below support levels. Poor administration of the price-support program is the thing that actually caused farmers to have "distress" wheat which had to be sold below the support levels.

My second point is that the failure of the Secretary of Agriculture to use available authority and put into effect an adequate wheat price support purchase program caused farmers to suffer losses running into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The Secretary of Agriculture put into effect two programs for carrying out the 1948 wheat price-support obligation. The first was a loan program and the second was a purchase agreement program. Under the loan program a farmer, if he could find approved storage, might obtain a nonrecourse loan which matures on April 30, 1949. Under the purchase program the farmer is given the privilage of selling the wheat to the CCC within a period of 30 days after April 30, 1949.

Neither of these programs is adequate unless a farmer is able to find approved storage between his farm and the terminal market upon which the support rate is based. If a farmer is unable to obtain approved storage, he has no practical alternative except to sell his wheat at whatever price he can get—which during the marketing season of 1948 was generally something below the support level.

Farmers sold millions of bushels below the support level and consequently it is estimated that they have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars. The largest purchaser of wheat during this period was the Department of Agriculture. From July 1 to September 28 the Department purchased for the grain-export program 121,000,000 bushels of wheat and another 13,700,000 bushels of wheat in the form of flour or a total of 134,700,000 bushels.

Thus we have the illogical situation in which the Department of Agriculture, the very agency directed and empowered to put into effect price-support programs so that farmers will receive at least the support price for their products, is the largest purchaser at prices less than the support levels.

What is the explanation of this incongruous situation? Secretary Brannan has attempted to make farmers and others believe that the Department is required to purchase wheat below the support levels when procuring wheat for the grain-export program because of a provision in the ECA Act which requires commodities to be purchased at market levels. But why is the market level for wheat below the support level? The simple answer is that Secretary Brannan failed to exercise the powers provided and failed to put into effect an adequate wheat price-support program. Therefore, the Department was buying wheat at prices below the support levels solely because of the failure of the Secretary of Agriculture to administer properly the powers he has to carry out wheat price-support programs.

There can be no doubt that the Secretary has authority to support the price of wheat through purchases. The charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation specifically authorizes support through purchases and the Secretary of Agriculture has, in fact, exercised this power to set up an inadequate wheat-purchase program. It was inadequate because it did not provide for purchases until April 30, 1949—the maturity date of the loan programs—when the need for such purchases was at the beginning of the marketing season.

How does the Secretary of Agriculture justify his failure to provide an adequate purchase program and to prevent the price from breaking below support levels? In my opinion there is no adequate explanation. The fact that he has authority to conduct current purchase programs is also illustrated by the flax price-support program. Under that program the Department of Agriculture bought all flax offered by farmers at the support level. The Department also has other purchase programs in which it purchases commodities at the support level throughout the marketing season to assure farmers of receiving prices equivalent to the support level.

It would appear that the Secretary of Agriculture is guilty either of playing politics with the wheat price-support program or ineptness in administration. In either event, whether it is politics or ineptness, it has proved very costly to the wheat farmers of the Nation. The principle benefactors are the ECA countries who, in effect, have been subsidized at the expense of the farmers to the extent of the difference between the market price and the support level. The American consumer has not received any benefit because the price of bread is still as high as it was when the price of wheat was 50 percent above the support level.

Mr. Chairman, in this bill before us today, we have the question of determining whether or not the Commodity Credit Corporation may or may not erect, construct or otherwise acquire facilities for storage of grain. It has been said on the one side that if the Commodity Credit Corporation does have the power to construct or acquire facilities they will use it in such a way as to not compete with private enterprise. I am hopeful that is true. We believe, however, if the CCC is vested with such authority and such power there is a possibility that, in the heat of a political campaign—whether that political campaign be for votes or for the purpose of securing a particular method under which the administration shall operate—that for some reason or other the administration will determine that in certain communities, private facilities are not available and therefore Government facilities must be built.

So, Mr. Chairman, as we approach the final debate and vote on this bill, I hope the committee will take into consideration the past actions of the administration and the past actions of the Secretary of Agriculture and determine whether or not you believe this power should be granted them.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. Is it not true that during the summer of 1948 the Commodity Credit Corporation was actually selling storage bins?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Yes. That is true.

Mr. KUNKEL. At a time when they were complaining and advertising that there was a shortage, they were actually selling existing storage which was at their disposal?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. That is right, and the interesting thing about it is that as soon as it was called to the attention of the Department of Agriculture the sale of those facilities began to slough off and stop, and practically stopped entirely.

Mr. KUNKEL. This policy which you have outlined, of adjusting the prices at interior markets and markets near where the grains are being marketed, then had the result of causing an overflow in one section of the grain storage facilities, but left a lot of open space which could have been used if the management had been proper, to avoid all the trouble.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I do not think there is any question about it. The Governor of Kansas came here just the other day to plead with the Commodity Credit Corporation to remove from Kansas City the wheat storage that is there now—move it out into the unused storage sections of the country, so that when the wheat comes into Kansas City there would be room for it.

Mr. KUNKEL. No matter how much storage you buy, unless it were located right in this one particular area, a policy such as this would have caused the situation about which so much complaint has been made?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. It not only would have caused it, but it did cause it and it could cause it again in the future.

Mr. KUNKEL. There was adequate storage or more than adequate storage at the time if the administration had handled it properly, and the inefficienct way in which they did handle it was so absurd that it would indicate it was almost intentional rather than accidental.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I would say definitely so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. As I recall it, the charge which the President made in connection with the legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress was that it prevented the Federal Government from furnishing the farmers storage for their grain. I just want to ask the gentleman if at any time in the past, under any legislation, has the Federal Government ever furnished the farmers storage for their grain, while still owned by the farmers?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. No. It is my understanding that it did not.

Mr. HOPE. Is there anything in the act which was passed in the Eightieth Congress which would have prevented the Government from furnishing the farmers storage for their grain had the Government desired to do so?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I am positive that definitely there was not.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. This complaint was made in the campaign. Did the President issue any complaint that was heard by the people of the country when the bill came to him for his signature?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. No. Neither the President nor any Member on the Democratic side made any complaint about the bill at that time. The President signed it. Everybody was satisfied with it. It was finally determined that here was a political issue which they might develop, and so they did.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Yes, I yield.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. You said that nobody objected to the bill when it was being passed.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. No. The gentleman misquotes me. Well, go ahead.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. This was a statement during the Eightieth Congress:

> There are two very serious defects in the bill as it now stands. One of them is that the bill prohibits the Corporation from acquiring or leasing any plant or facility for warehousing, transporting, processing, or handling of agricultural commodities, or from acquiring or leasing real property or an interest therein, except rental-office space. These provisions are severely restricting the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation and would, in my opinion, make it very difficult for the agency to carry out the duties imposed on it by law.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. The gentleman is quoting the chairman of the Agricultural Committee the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], a Republican.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. That was the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Yes. I recall that was said on the floor.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. And that was surely an objection to the bill that was passed by the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Yes, I understand. I stand corrected if I said "no objection was made." I say to the gentleman, however, that the bill was passed in the House and was passed in the Senate without any serious objection, and perhaps I should underscore the word "serious." I do stand corrected on that one proposition.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I think that objection was a very serious one; it would be to me.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. The gentleman from Missouri was not here.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Inasmuch as reference has been made to a statement which I made on the floor of the House, I wish to say to the gentleman that I still stand by that statement. It had no connection whatever with anything that has been said by me or has no connection whatever with any statement made by the President. I said at that time that I thought there should not be a limitation upon the ability of the Commodity Credit Corporation to acquire storage; but the statement that was made by the President at Dexter, Iowa, was that the bill prevented the Government from furnishing farmers that storage which, of course, they never had had, which they had never had in the past and which was prohibited or prevented by this bill.

My position right now is the same as it was last year. As far as the limitation upon the acquisition of storage by the Commodity Credit Corporation is concerned I think the provisions in the bill as reported by the committee are all right; I believe the Commodity Credit Corporation should have the authority to acquire storage where needed, but I think there should be some determination that it is needed before the Corporation should be given that authority.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. In the present law, section 5 (b), the specific power section expressly authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to "make available materials and facilities required in connection with the production and marketing of agricultural commodities."

That broad and specific power clearly includes the furnishing of grain storage bins, since they are essential to the orderly marketing of agricultural products. I have never heard of any opinion of anybody in the legal department of the Department of Agriculture who contended that the Commodity Credit Corporation did not have that power; the statements and the arguments that they did not seem to be without any backing from the legal department involved and the one which should have advised them properly on this subject.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I am very certain this bill would never have been reported, never have been introduced or reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency or considered by this House if the President of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture had not gone before the country last November and made the statements which they did. This bill is presented here solely for the purpose, in my judgment, to pull them out of the hole in which they find themselves.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Is it not a fact that the reason the storage bins were sold was because the leases had expired? They were sold on the farm. They had to be disposed of because the Government could not move them anywhere else because they had no power to acquire real estate for the purpose of relocating the bins where they might be needed elsewhere. Is not that the real reason the bins were sold?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. The Department of Agriculture has made statements that was the reason, but——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe the chairman will remember that there was specific language in the bill which we passed last year, I believe, authorizing the releasing of property that was then under lease.

Mr. SPENCE. That was so the bins could remain on the land where the renewal of the lease might be made, but that was not where they were needed.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. They were given specific authority to re-lease.

Mr. SPENCE. They had no power to relocate the bins, because they had no right to lease or acquire real estate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Kansas in regard to just who is or who is not guilty on this storage-for-grain proposition, or the alleged neglect thereof, I wish to point out that all during the grain-harvesting period last year there was a tremendous shortage of cars to move grain. Grain was lying on the ground all over the country. Now, how could the Commodity Credit Corporation buy grain on the ground to support the price? That is why the price broke.

It is only natural that a concern handling as much grain as the Commodity Credit Corporation was forced to handle had to have some place to put it and some means to move it. Certainly, I do not see how any finger of condemnation could be pointed at the Commodity Credit Corporation or the Secretary of Agriculture for a shortage of cars, with wheat lying all over the ground.

So far as bins are concerned, it is perfectly reasonable to assume that there may have been an overage of bins in certain areas and a shortage in other areas. Since there was a shortage of transportation, it is a perfectly plausible thing to assume that the same condition arose which caused the wheat to be lying on the ground.

There are a number of reasons why the wheat market broke, but that lack of storage is the main one. The farmers could not get loans on their commodity because they had no place to store it. It is true they had storage facilities at the eastern ports and at other places, but there were no cars to move it. In addition to that, we have the statement by officials in the Department of Agriculture that they were asking Members of the Eightieth Congress to provide specific authority for these grain bins so that they could make these loans and alleviate the suffering among the farmers in the Wheat Belt, but no such relief was forthcoming. The Secretary of Agriculture sent several men up here to the Hill, as I got the story, to try to get this relief. I do not see how the Secretary of Agriculture or the Commodity Credit Corporation can be condemned for the low price of wheat when the Eightieth Congress would not provide storage on the farms. That is where the storage was needed.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of California. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Apparently last November there were an awful lot of farmers who felt that the Republicans and the Eightieth Congress were to blame, according to the election returns.

Mr. WHITE of California. I think the gentleman is quite right. It seems these gentlemen over on the left are a few months late in bringing this matter up.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of California. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Did any Congress prior to the Eightieth Congress provide storage on the farm?

Mr. WHITE of California. No; but that has nothing to do with the request of the Secretary for storage at that time.

Mr. CURTIS. At what time?

Mr. WHITE of California. When he requested it in the fall during the grain-harvesting period in question.

Mr. CURTIS. In the fall.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of California. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I recognize that the gentleman from California is an expert on agriculture and I bow to him. But the grain crop from which we received the big surplus last year that was stored on the ground materialized in the month of June in the State of Kansas and in the Southwest plains area where we had the big winter-wheat crop. The gentleman knows that. In the month of June and even in the month of July we were in session here. The gentleman further knows, with all of his knowledge about agriculture, that when big crops are produced in the Southwest there are no ordinary storage facilities to store that grain and it has been laying on the ground in that dry weather and it has not been damaged. That has happened every year they produce a big crop down there; is that correct?

Mr. WHITE of California. That may be true, but the Government authorities were not called upon to take it on the ground as they were in that instance. If the Government is going to take the grain at the point of origin, you have to have the bins, and the Government asked the Eightieth Congress for them and they were not forthcoming.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In the year before, 1947, we also had a bumper crop when the grain was stored on the ground when we had a greater shortage of cars than we had last year, so I think the gentleman may be a little far-fetched in his analysis of the responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there are 200,000 farms in Iowa. The 1940 census showed that there were only 60,000 farm hired hands. Iowa farmers cannot wait until the harvest comes on to provide adequate storage facilities for a bumper crop, and these situations do arise from time to time when our farmers seriously need help. Last fall was one of those times. I followed this situation with great interest because it is of great importance to the farmers of Iowa.

On March 21, 1949, Secretary Brannan, in his general statement to the Committee on Banking and Currency, said as follows:

> The size of the 1948 crops just recently harvested and the prospective plantings for 1949 make the problem of inadequate storage increasingly acute, and it is urgently necessary that the Corporation be placed in position to take action to meet the problem as soon as possible.

Then, in answer to Mr. WOLCOTT's question that same day, Mr. Brannan said:

> I want the Commodity Credit Corporation to act in the capacity of an instrument for assisting farmers of this country, as it did before the adoption of this amendment. As far as I am concerned, it is not a question of what I want. I am suggesting to you what I think is in the best interests of the American farmers and in the best interests of the trade with which they have to deal. I think if we have adequate storage in this country everybody will be benefited.

Then again he answered:

> The issue was whether or not there was adequate storage facilities available in public, private, or any kind of hands, and the transfer from public ownership to private ownership of some grain-storage facilities was of no moment whatsoever. The ultimate point was that here we have an increasing grain crop year after year after year and we have not provided adequately for its storage.

Again, in answer to Mr. TALLE's question, Mr. Brannan expressed the situation, as follows:

> We face a storage program today in the light of the immediate circumstances. We still are handling a large wheat production—1,300,000,000 bushels last year. We still have to deal with the corn-production program, which was the highest of all time, about 3,500,000,000 bushels.
>
> In addition to that, there are indications of spring wheat acreage equal to last year's and preliminary indications that we may have about as much of the other grains planted as in previous years.
>
> Therefore, the need is, first of all, for storage immediately. To answer that, we think small facilities which could be quickly fabricated, and which can be quickly moved into position, provide the best method of meeting that need. It also makes sense, in our opinion, in terms of a long pull. On-the-farm storage and trackside storage facilities in the vicinity where each of the grains will be used, or in such locations that they act as a conduit to carry the grain on to its ultimate point of use, are always advisable.
> Second, we think there should probably be a program of storage—trackside, subterminal, country, or by whatever term you would like to define it—where the grain can move in transit to its ultimate destination and probably be handled in one way or another, and selected for feeding, mixing, or many of the other uses. That is typical country elevator type of operation I am talking about.
> I do not know whether these will be necessary, myself, but finally we may have to talk in terms of terminal storage. In the latter case and in all cases, I would like to make it clear that I do not think the Federal Government should engage in the ownership and operation of large grain-elevator enterprises. We are a facility for helping farmers to solve their own storage problems.

After that expression of concern by Mr. Brannan on March 21, can you imagine my own surprise at receiving a letter submitted by Mr. Brannan on March 21, the same identical day, to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, objecting to a bill that I introduced, H. R. 1553, providing for a tax incentive for the creation of additional farm storage facilities?

Just to show a bit of Mr. Brannan inconsistency here in blowing both hot and cold, let me read you what Mr. Brannan wrote to Chairman DOUGHTON of the Committee on Ways and Means:

> We feel that the emergency which is likely to exist for additional storage facilities during the next 5 years should not be compared with the emergency which existed during the war, when the Government permitted certain types of war plants (including facilities built to process certain foods such as dried milk, dehydrated and compressed vegetables) to be depreciated for income-tax purposes within a 5-year period. Most of the war plants so treated were unadapted or poorly adapted for other profitable uses after the war, or were located out of position for economical peacetime uses, and they would not have been built by private capital to meet the war emergency unless such special inducements had been offered. We believe that commercial rates for storage of agricultural products such as grain will be high enough during the next few years, under pressure of the larger supplies anticipated, to encourage new construction of both farmer-owned and commercial storage facilities, and that when properly located they will be profitable ventures, without the 5-year amortization inducements.
> We do not believe that it will be necessary or desirable to extend the concessions offered by these bills as inducement to farmers to build farm storage facilities on or near their farms, and we do not believe that these measures would be very effective in increasing this type of construction. Farm storage facilities, in the commonly accepted meaning of the term (farm cribs, bins, barns), normally have relatively short life and rapid rate of depreciation. The average farmer is in a low income-tax bracket, and would not find much incentive to build new storage facilities because of the proposed 5-year depreciation feature.
>
> Even if we could support the main points of these bills, we would not like the retroactive features—extending the amortization benefits to facilities acquired or completed on or after January 1, 1948. Presumably any and all storage facilities built during 1948 were justified by existing requirements and anticipated profits.
>
> These bills would give undue benefits to big grain companies and elevator and warehouse interests which are in high income-tax brackets, permitting them to charge off new capital improvements as if they were legitimate business losses, during a time when earnings and profits are almost sure to be high. The average farmer and the small warehousemen in low income-tax brackets would receive little or no benefit from these bills.
>
> The real problem facing us is how to bring about a substantial increase in storage facilities on and near farms, with less emphasis on terminal storage. We do not believe that acceleration of depreciation for tax purposes is a proper step to take to bring about increased construction of storage facilities,

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA LIBRARIES

either by farmers or by commercial interests. There is no assurance that those who would take advantage of the amortization provision would operate the new facilities as public warehousemen. In the past few years farmers in some areas have encountered difficulties in that those who own storage facilities have been unwilling to store grain at times when there were temporary gluts on the market but instead were willing only to buy for their own account at very substantial discounts.

We believe that the Government should take some steps to stimulate immediate expansion of new storage facilities. The amendment proposed in S. 900 and H. R. 2682, bills to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, would enable the Corporation to develop well-rounded and integrated price support and storage programs.

In accordance with the above comments, it is the recommendation of the Department that these bills should not be passed.

Mr. Brannan's statements belittle the emergency insofar as it pertains to the encouragement of private construction by the farmer himself and say it is not necessary, and yet his statements made the same day before the Committee on Banking and Currency stress the need for Government construction and Government control of the very same storage facilities.

I am for adequate storage first, last, and always. I have seen enough wastage of good crops out on the farms of Iowa to make me sincerely support legislation providing any expansion of storage facilities, but I do not like to have the Department of Agriculture blow both hot and cold on this matter. They are knocking down my farmers' ears in the way of discouraging them from doing their own construction on their own farms and keeping the grain out there, where I know the farmers want it. If the emergency is what Mr. Brannan said it is in the hearings on this bill, why did he disapprove my proposal to give the farmers the tax encouragement for private construction, ownership, and control of the same storage facilities that my farmers want and need?

To me, adequate storage facilities are the important thing. It should not be reduced to the throwing the whole control over to the Government bureaucracy. I will take the storage facilities furnished by bureaucracy, but I want the farmers to have some encouragement in the construction of their own storage facilities to meet the emergency that I know exists in many places. All I ask of Mr. Brannan is to remember and read carefully his statement before the Committee on Banking and Currency on March 21 of this year, and then reread his letter dated the same day to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHITE of California. I should like to make an observation.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I will yield for a question, but if the gentleman has an observation to make, he can make it on his own time. If there are any questions that anyone wants to ask, I will be glad to entertain a question, but not an observation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. What is the date of that report when Secretary Brannan made his statement?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean the report to Mr. DOUGHTON?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No, the hearings.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. The hearings were on March 21, 1949.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is when he made his statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Yes and the letter to Mr. DOUGHTON is dated March 21, 1949, also.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will say to the gentleman that there was no way for the Secretary to determine what the size of the winter wheat crop would be prior to the middle of May. By the middle of June you could pretty well estimate it. You could not determine what the spring wheat crop was going to be until along toward the latter part of July; when it came to corn there was no possible way that anybody could figure out the size of the corn crop until sometime in September. Is that not right?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Yes. I agree with the gentleman. The Secretary is guilty of blowing hot when it concerns the expansion of bureaucratic control, and he blows cold and plays down the same emergency when he is talking about the construction of storage facilities by individual farmers. To me the road we are traveling today is a most dangerous one for our American Government to travel.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. In other words, what the gentleman was trying to do by his bill was to provide more storage and less regimentation, is that correct?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Exactly. I am trying to provide for more storage and less regimentation. I am especially desirous of supplementing the expansion of CCC with the greater building and control of storage facilities by the farmers on the farm and by warehousemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GORE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2682) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock-Piling Act, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

SPECIAL ORDER TRANSFERRED

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] had a special order for 20 minutes today. In his behalf I ask unanimous consent that the special order for this afternoon may be vacated, and that it may be transferred to Thursday, May 12, following the legislative business of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday, tomorrow, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MITCHELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances.

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MARSHALL and Mr. BROOKS asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. HORAN. (at the request of Mr. PHILLIPS of California) was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. COLE of Kansas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by the Honorable Alf Landon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GILLETTE (at the request of Mr. GRAHAM), for the balance of the week, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. NOLAND, for Wednesday and Thursday, May 11 and 12, on account of official business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 3932. An act to exempt artificial limbs from duty if imported for personal use and not for sale.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on May 9, 1949, present to the President, for his approval, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 663. An act for relief of Alex Ball;

H. R. 711. An act for relief of Mrs. Margaret Gregg Dilnot;

H. R. 2605. An act for relief of John C. Nunes;

H. R. 2710. An act for relief of Emma Armstrong;

H. R. 2935. An act for relief of Mrs. Benjamin Betts; and

H. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution to authorize the cancellation and release of an agreement dated December 31, 1923, entered into between the port of Seattle and the United States of America, represented by the United States Shipping Board acting through the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly at (4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 11, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

605. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Defense, transmitting a proposed bill entitled "A bill to authorize the appointment in the Navy of additional officers for special duty in the field of law, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

606. A letter from the assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a proposed bill entitled "A bill to amend subsection (c) of section 19 of the Immigration Act of 1917 and subsection (a) of section 338 of the Nationality Act of 1940"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

607. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report of all tort claims paid by the General Accounting Office during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

608. A letter from the acting assistant to the Attorney General, transmitting a proposed bill entitled "A bill to transfer from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to the Attorney General of the United States, for the use of the Bureau of Prisons, a certain tract of land located at Chillicothe, Ohio"; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

609. A letter from the Director, Division of Territories and Island Possessions, Department of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a joint resolution enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii requesting the Congress of the United States to ratify and confirm Act 4 of the Session Laws of Hawaii 1949, amending chapter 118, Revised Laws of Hawaii 1945, relating to revenue bonds; to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, April 11, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, grant that in this moment of prayer our minds and hearts may be touched and strengthened with a reassuring sense of Thy greatness and Thy nearness.

Establish within us those loyalties to the true, the beautiful, and the good which cannot be shaken. May we never yield to that faithless and cynical temper of mind which is treason against God and man.

Make us sensitive and responsive to those finer impulses which are continually calling us to seek the more abundant life and to share its blessings with all mankind.

Hear us in the name of our blessed Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. McMAHON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, May 10, 1949, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on May 10, 1949, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 635. An act to increase the fees of witnesses in the United States courts and before United States commissioners, and for other purposes; and

S. 850. An act conferring United States citizenship posthumously upon Vaso B. Benderach.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 3005. An act to regulate subsistence expenses and mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees of the Government; and

H. R. 4392. An act to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor.

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 2440) to authorize the Public Housing Commissioner to sell the suburban resettlement projects known as Greenbelt, Md.; Greendale, Wis.; and Greenhills, Ohio, without regard to provisions of law requiring competitive bidding or public advertising, and it was signed by the Vice President.

A letter from the Under Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

COMPULSORY HEALTH INSURANCE PROGRAM—RESOLUTION OF HOUSE OF DELEGATES OF WISCONSIN STATE DENTAL SOCIETY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning a splendid resolution from Dr. C. J. Baumann, chairman of the legislative committee of the Wisconsin State Dental Society. This resolution was adopted by the house of delegates of the society at its annual session in April. The resolution forthrightly opposes the administration's program for compulsory health insurance. I have previously indicated I fully endorse the fight against socialized medicine and I for one will oppose it with all the power at my command, but will favor a voluntary approach to the improvement of America's already high health standards. I ask unanimous consent that the text of this resolution be appropriately referred and printed in the body of the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there are now pending before the Congress of the United States, three bills—S. 5, H. R. 345, and H. R. 783, commonly known as the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill—the object of which is to establish a system of compulsory health insurance in the United States; and

Whereas the experience of other nations of the world which have adopted such a system has demonstrated that compulsory health insurance does not materially improve the general health of the people of such countries; and

Whereas the people of the United States today have the best and most efficient dental, medical, nursing, and hospital service care that the world has ever known; and

Whereas the great advances in the health professions heretofore have been made as a result of individual initiative: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the house of delegates of the Wisconsin State Dental Society in annual session April 18-21, 1949, does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States not to enact any legislation containing the principle of compulsory health insurance; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States.

BLANKETING OF CERTAIN POSTAL EMPLOYEES INTO CIVIL SERVICE—RESOLUTION OF MILWAUKEE POST OFFICE CLERKS' UNION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received today from Howard F. Cogan, secretary of local No. 3 of the Milwaukee Post Office Clerk's Union, a letter embodying a resolution in opposition to any step which would circumvent the civil-service system of the United States post office. Naturally I, like my colleagues, am opposed to a spoils set-up which would sabotage our hard-won achievement in the civil-service field. I feel, therefore that this expression from the Milwaukee union which, in turn, is affiliated with the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, of the A. F. of L., and which reports sentiments in turn of a San Francisco union, will be of interest to my colleagues. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the letter be appropriately referred and printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILWAUKEE POST OFFICE CLERKS' UNION,
May 9, 1949.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: A resolution received from the San Francisco post-office clerks very aptly describes our thoughts on the subject.

The resolution:

"Whereas an effort to blanket indefinite war-service and temporary employees into the United States Post Office Service without an appropriate civil-service and physical examination is now gaining support; and

"Whereas such policy is contrary to law and detrimental to the economic interests of the citizen seeking job security through competitive examinations; and

"Whereas the spoils system is not conducive to the high morale necessary for the efficient and economical operation of the postal service: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That local No. 2, National Federation of Post Office Clerks, go on record as being opposed to any individual, group, or organization who are engaged in an effort to circumvent and bypass the merit system through the establishment of the spoils system in the United States Post Office Service."

We earnestly solicit your support in the prevention of the destruction of civil service in the post office in any manner whatsoever.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD F. COGAN,
Secretary, Local No. 3.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mrs. SMITH of Maine, from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 3967. A bill to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia through June 30, 1950; with an amendment (Rept. No. 364).

S. 1838. A bill to amend title 28 of the United States Code relating to fees of United States marshals; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McMAHON (for himself, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. McGRATH, Mr. DOUGLAS, and Mr. HUMPHREY):

S. 1839. A bill to incorporate the American Veterans Committee; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED OR PLACED ON CALENDAR

The following bills were each read twice by their titles, and referred, or placed on the calendar, as indicated:

H. R. 3005. An act to regulate subsistence expenses and mileage allowances of civilian officers and employees of the Government; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

H. R. 4392. An act to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor; ordered to be placed on the calendar.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT

Mr. McKELLAR. On behalf of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit the following notice in writing:

In accordance with Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is his intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 3734) making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely: On page 10, line 7, insert the following after the word "dam": ": Provided further, That the project for Oklahoma City authorized in the Flood Control Act of 1946 is hereby modified to provide for construction of the canal plan as presently proposed by the Chief of Engineers at an estimated Federal cost of $10,460,000."

Mr. McKELLAR (for Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma) also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma to House bill 3734, making appropriations for civil functions administered by the Department of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am not in favor of the amendment, but simply offer it for Senator THOMAS in compliance with the rule of the Senate.

ELEVENTH HOUR IN CHINA—ARTICLE FROM LONDON ECONOMIST

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an article entitled "Eleventh Hour in China," published in the London Economist of April 23, 1949. The Economist is one of the best informed British publications. I invite the attention of Members of the Senate to this article because I think it clearly outlines some of the problems which are facing both the Government of the United States and the Government of Britain in the present situation in China.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ELEVENTH HOUR IN CHINA

The recently established tradition of bipartisan foreign policy in the United States is certainly not operative with regard to the affairs of China, and the last few days have seen the outbreak of a political storm over American aid to non-Communist China which may prove more than a passing phase in American party politics. Following Mr. Churchill's speech at Boston on March 3 in which he described "the collapse of China under Communist attack and intrigue" as the worst disaster since the Allied victory over Germany and Japan, Mr. Harold Stassen—since Mr. Dewey's failure the most fancied candidate for the next Republican presidential nomination—called for American support for a non-Communist regime in south China. Since then it has been stated that the Republican policy committee is endorsing the demand for a special congressional investigation of the Government's China policy, and there have been threats of obstruction of appropriations for arms for Europe unless the demand is granted. On April 14 Congress decided to release $54,000,000 of unexpended China-aid funds for use at President Truman's discretion in non-Communist China. On the other hand, Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, strongly opposed a bill introduced by Senator McCARRAN for granting China a further $1,500,000,000 of military and economic aid declaring that such aid was "almost certain to be a catastrophe."

There are in fact two distinct issues in current American controversy about aid to China. One is the question of the rightness and expediency of intervention against communism in China, assuming that funds for aid are freely available. The other is the question of priorities as between Europe and China for the expenditure of the not unlimited resources which the United States can spare for its foreign commitments. It might be very desirable to assist anti-Communist forces in China, and yet be inexpedient to do so at the expense of aid sufficient to sustain the economic and military reinforcement of Europe. The prevailing policy of the Truman administration is apparently to give priority to Europe, just as during the war President Roosevelt refused to allow the clamor of the "Pacific Firsters" to divert him from the strategy of concentration against Germany rather than Japan.

But there are strong roots in American tradition for the sentiment which puts the Far East before Europe as an American concern; and it is natural, even apart from political conviction, for the Republicans to exploit so promising a field for discontent with President Truman's policy. For, whatever is now said, the policy has been a failure, and the administration cannot escape criticism. If it is true that the Chinese Government is not worth helping, then why have so many million dollars of American money been spent on what was at best a foolish backing of the wrong horse? If, on the other hand, support for the Chinese Government was the right policy for the United States to pursue, is it wise or dignified to abandon it when only one half of China has fallen to the Communists and resistance to them is by no means at an end? If the administration now abandons China, it condemns its own previous policy; if it claims to have been right previously, it will find difficulty in justifying a panic-stricken retreat from positions not yet proved untenable.

Mr. Acheson has stated that he does not believe that further supplies to the Chinese government would "alter the pattern of current developments in China." What then is the pattern? Since the heavy defeats of the government forces last year in Manchuria and North China, there has been a general belief in the west that nothing can stop the Communist conquest of the whole of China—though conditions in South China are in certain respects quite different from those prevailing in the north. It is also held, and on good evidence, that the vast majority of the Chinese people are sick of war and would welcome peace at any price; but it is not clear why this feeling should now weigh more strongly against the government, if it refuses to submit to terms equivalent to unconditional surrender, than against the Communists, if they insist on continuing the war for the subjugation of the south. So far, in fact, there has been no definite military decision of the civil war that can be regarded as valid for the whole country; there is no merely strategic reason for the government armies in the south to surrender without further military operations. The Communists have so far won on points, but there has been no knock-out blow.

The Communists, however, in the "peace talks" at Peiping have taken the line that nothing remains but to arrange the details of the present Government's surrender, the "reorganization" of its armies under Communist command, and its replacement by a "coalition" government, in which the Communists would have the right to select Ministers to "represent" the Kuomintang, and the only minor parties to be represented would be those already in league with the Communists. The question of the composition of the Government is really subordinate to that of control of the armies, for a genuine coalition between the Communists and their opponents can only be maintained as long as there is a balance of mutually independent armed forces backing each side; in other words, only if the central government is not a unitary government, but a confederation of two autonomous regional blocs. Otherwise, the Communists will, after using the show of coalition to obtain international—and especially American—diplomatic recognition, purge the non-Communist elements by stages until the coalition is transformed into pure communistic rule.

If President Li Tsung-jen and his generals choose to capitulate and accept terms which mean their elimination by the standard Communist technique, that is their affair, and nobody can help people who do not fight for their own survival. But if the Chinese Government decides that the terms are unacceptable and moves to Canton to continue resistance, with that city as its new capital, what is to be done? Is it to be denounced for destroying the hope of peace in China, or is it to receive at any rate a moderate amount of American aid to give it a chance of holding its own as a regional unit? The Kwangsi troops under President Li Tsung-jen himself and General Pai Chung-hsi, and the Kwangtung forces under Generals Chang Fa-kwei and Yu Han-mou, should be capable of formidable resistance in defense of their own provinces, even if the Nanking-Shanghai area falls to the Communists. If their resistance should nevertheless in the end collapse, the situation could not be worse from an American point of view than that which would be created by capitulation in advance and formation of a pseudo-coalition government doomed to perpetual glissade from purge to purge.

The American—and British—concern with China's civil war does not relate to Chinese internal affairs, but to the effort of the Communists to realign China internationally in open hostility to the western democracies. Mao Tse-tung went out of his way in his statement on the Atlantic Pact to express his uncompromising antagonism to everything for which the western democracies stand. In view of this attitude—which is, after all, the only one which a convinced Marxist-Leninst can honestly adopt—it is plainly in the interest of Britain and the United States to give at least moral support to the existing Chinese Government as long as it remains on Chinese soil and resists Communist conquest. Even if only a small part of Chinese territory could be held, it would keep the political situation fluid and prevent the consolidation of a hostile regime as a national entity, while the condition of China would be no worse than it was between 1917 and 1928, when there were rival governments in north and south, but the Chinese state was never formally divided.

British and American diplomacy, however, appears to be deeply infected with the idea that the Chinese Communists are irresistible, and that there is nothing to be done about it except to submit to the pattern of current developments. It is indeed at first sight logical to infer that, if the government could not win against the Communists when it possessed nearly all the strategic key points of the country, it cannot hope to hold its own if it is driven into a corner of its national territory. But the Communists have so far had their successes in regions where the Kuomintang (which has never grown out of being a party of southerners) never took firm root; where the Japanese occupations (lasting 14 years in Manchuria and 8 in north China) had wiped out all political life except for Communist guerrillas and pro-Japanese collaborators; and where the Communist forces were strategically placed at the outset astride the principal lines of communication. It does not follow at all that the same story will be repeated in the south.

Moreover, it is relevant, in considering the prospects of resistance to communism, to point out that the most reactionary element of the Kuomintang, the notorious CC clique, has now been removed from power, and that the political appeal of communism is liable to be greatly reduced by any signs of alternative progressive leadership. If American diplomacy were to be devoted to the encouragement of social reforms instead of to pressure on the Chinese Government to accept Communist terms, and if military assistance were to take the form of supervision of commissariat, designed to make sure that soldiers get their rations, instead of tardy supplies of largely unsuitable armaments, the chances of successfully opposing communism in at any rate a part of China would not be so poor as is generally believed.

One thing is clear in the current crisis of the Chinese conflict: The political fortunes of President Truman and Mr. Acheson are now very much at stake in the conduct of American policy toward China. Their political opponents in the United States see an opportunity of doing them great damage. Mr. Acheson will certainly be on strong ground in refusing to jeopardize aid to Europe by large expenditures with higher risks on less essential objectives in Asia. America's strongest allies are in Europe, and it is there that money and organization have produced, and will go on producing, the firmest check to Soviet ambitions. But a little aid to China could be made to go a long way; it only needs to be intelligently applied and inspired by a consistent policy, and even if it fails to achieve its purpose it cannot make the Communists more hostile to America than they already are.

J. EDGAR HOOVER

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, yesterday I had to attend a meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee, and later attend a meeting of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and did not have an opportunity to join with some other Members of the Senate who spoke at some length, to say a few words regarding J. Edgar Hoover, on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the beginning of his service with the Government of the United States.

I do not intend to speak at great length, because I think the tributes which have already been paid to Mr. Hoover, especially by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY], are, indeed, illustrative of the high esteem in which not only Members of the Senate, but the people of the United States generally, hold Mr. Hoover. However, I could not let the occasion pass, inasmuch as for 6 years I was associated with Mr. Hoover in the Department of Justice. So I am in a rather peculiar position, perhaps, to testify as to his work.

I was associated with him in the early 1930's, when we were cleaning up the bad situation which was caused primarily, in my opinion, by the aftermath of the unfortunate "noble experiment." It is a tribute to his efficiency, his industry, his honesty, and his integrity that that work was carried forward with vigor and dispatch. I wish for him many future years of service, which I know will be of value to the people of the United States. I congratulate him on having achieved his silver anniversary with a reputation that is unsullied and unblemished. It is a source of great satisfaction to me that I am able to pay him this tribute.

EMPLOYEES IN THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—TESTIMONY OF POSTMASTER GENERAL DONALDSON

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, yesterday the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] said something about there being too many employees in certain departments of the Government. I have in my hand the testimony given by the Postmaster General, dealing with that subject, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, as related in my previous statement to this committee, the Post Office Department is today faced with the largest deficit in its history. This large deficit is brought about by things over which the Post Office Department has little or no control. Long-deserved wage increases have been granted to postal personnel beginning with July 1, 1945. Transportation and other costs of providing a postal service are constantly rising. The estimated deficit for the current fiscal year is about $550,000,000.

It is my firm belief that the question of what shall be done about reducing this deficit must be faced now.

No fair-minded individual should ask the Post Office Department to continue to operate under such unsound financial conditions. I have previously pointed out that our costs this year are more than $800,000,000 in excess of what they were 3 years ago. This increase in costs has not been due to any mismanagement. Had we not absorbed a large amount of these increased costs the deficit may well have been more than $750,000,000.

I have recommended increased rates on mail matter of the second, third, and fourth classes and increased fees covering most of the special services. There has been considerable opposition to the increased rates and increased fees. This opposition comes from the users of these three classes of mail and special services involved. The opposition is natural as no one likes to pay increased prices for the things they have to buy. I have no criticism to offer because the users of the mails are opposed to these increased rates and fees. I do desire, however, to criticize some of the methods of opposition and the reasons given for the opposition.

I am disappointed in some of the opposition where there has been a desire to criticize the Post Office Department, charging inefficiency, waste, and poor management, and a failure on the part of the Department to modernize and streamline the service. Such opposition can be construed as a direct reflection not only upon the officials of the Post Office Department but also upon the half a million loyal postal employees who handle the billions of pieces of mail for those who oppose increases in rates, most of which are handled at night while those who oppose these increases sleep.

No one could be more desirous than I am to see that all waste and inefficiency is eliminated wherever it may be found, and we in the Department are constantly striving in that direction. As previously related to this committee, there is some waste and inefficiency in any large business organization. There is no more in the postal service than can be found in nongovernmental business institutions of much less size in volume and scope than the postal service.

I am inclined to ask: Where is the waste? What suggestions have been made for streamlining the postal service? What do they suggest we do to decrease the cost? What is the modernization they imply we should adopt? What substitutions do they offer for the human eyes, hands, legs, and brain so necessary to perform the particular functions peculiar to the postal service?

I have repeatedly stated that 95 percent of the cost of the postal service is for salaries and transportation of the mails. I have no control over either. I have also stated that 85 percent of the manpower in the postal service is devoted to the collection, the distribution, the transportation, and the delivery of the mails.

Do those who oppose increased rates and fees desire that I reduce the cost of the service through reductions in the kind of service rendered? I can reduce costs by placing all rural service on a tri-weekly basis instead of a daily basis. I can reduce the costs by placing all city delivery service on a one-trip basis in residential sections and two trips in business districts. I can reduce cost by shortening the hours of all window service to the public. We can do many things to decrease costs by reducing or curtailing service to the public.

I do not believe that we are rendering a super service which could be subjected to any such curtailment. I am interested in improving the service to the public and not in the curtailment of the service.

Our accounting methods are as accurate as those of any business institution. They are more voluminous and detailed than we would like but practically all such methods are required by law.

I feel that it is not only my responsibility but my duty to report to the Congress on the fiscal condition of the Post Office Department, and in doing so make such recommendations as I feel the existing conditions justify in the light of this large deficit. In presenting these recommendations I do so without any criticism of the Congress or of the users of these classes of mail which are largely responsible for the deficit. The greater the mail volume of low-revenue producing mail, the larger the deficit.

A deficit of over half a billion dollars necessitates additional revenue as there is no opportunity to reduce the cost of the service through reductions in salaries of the postal people or lessening the cost for transporting the mails. As a matter of fact many bills are now pending before the Congress having to do with increased salaries for the postal personnel and cases are pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Civil Aeronautics Board for increased costs in the transportation field, by both surface and air.

It has not been possible for me to read all of the briefs that have been filed before this committee by those opposing increased rates and fees. Time has not permitted me to prepare detailed rebuttal to all of the statements made in opposition to increased rates, even if I did desire to go into all of the details. I think much of the testimony of the opposition has been irrelevant so far as the issue is concerned, but of course I recognize the reasons given as perhaps being paramount to those who oppose increased rates.

Second-class mail is responsible for over $200,000,000 of the deficit and any fair person should realize that this class of mail should pay more postage in order that the burden of the Post Office Department may be distributed where it belongs. Subscription rates will advance accordingly, it is true, but in the end this will result in equalization and not placing the burden on users of the other classes of mail. All of the other classes, except first-class mail, have already had rate increases. Publishers have strongly opposed any increases since 1934 and were successful in preventing inclusion of postage raises on newspapers and other periodicals when the revenue act of 1943 raised rates all along the line. Early in the last session of the Eightieth Congress many hearings on the revision of postage rates and fees to reduce the mounting postal deficit were held and the publishers as a group were successful in opposing any increased rates on second-class matter. At that time it was proposed to raise only about $10,000,000 a year from this class of mail, and notwithstanding the fact that rates on third- and fourth-class matter, air mail, and all the special services were increased effective January 1, 1949, no action was taken with reference to increasing the rates on second-class matter. Had the publishers shown a more cooperative and reasonable attitude and agreed to the moderate rate proposed they would not now be confronted with the need of a much greater increase at one step-up as a result of the great advance in the cost of operating the postal service due to causes beyond the control of the Department.

What the publishers know—but what most folks don't know—is that the present second-class rates are a survival of one of the early congressional acts made under conditions that have long since ceased to exist. Very few people outside of the publishing business know of free mailing privileges within the county of publication. Very few people realize that most publications can be mailed for a year to any address from coast to coast for less than the subscribers pay at home where the publishers make their own delivery. Those who do know this frequently ask: "Is it so essential to the dissemination of news that publications be carried far and wide at taxpayers' expense? Should the taxpayers who make up this large deficit be required to do so whether or not they are readers of these publications?" Suppose the readers do have to pay more for the publications—suppose advertisers do have to pay higher space rates—suppose the advertisers do pass the higher advertising costs on the consumer—would that be bad?

Each and every time there is any recommendation submitted for increasing rates on second-class mail matter the publishers repeatedly charge that the Post Office Department is old-fashioned in its methods and that its cost ascertainment is inadequate. It is alleged that the cost-ascertainment figures are unreliable and that we allocate charges to second-class mail improperly, especially as it applies to rural and star-route delivery and delivery at third- and fourth-class post offices. They charge also that we fail to credit for services performed by publishers in routing, sacking, and transporting to trains, etc.

The portion of the total cost of the rural delivery service for 1948 ($132,150,000) allocated to second-class mail is $44,426,000. The expenditures for rural delivery service allocated to second-class matter are based on the volume of such mail handled and the cost of the service actually performed. The publishers emphasize the needs of the farmer and other rural people for daily newspapers and are not content with the delivery available by mail, but in many cases set up their own carrier service. I am sure that publications made their profit largely from advertising and to get it must cover the area to which their advertisers look for trade. Around 30,000,000 people, or more than one-fifth of the entire population of the country, are served by rural routes, and they are large purchasers of all kinds of merchandise, equipment, and other articles. The argument that the rural-delivery service should be regarded as a subsidy to the farmer is unsound and inconsistent. It disregards the fact that the business of supplying the needs of the rural population constitutes a very large portion of the total for the whole Nation, amounting to billions of dollars.

Obviously without the service rendered by the thousands of small post offices and rural and star routes, the vast market made available to the manufacturers, dealers, and others through the media of these postal facilities would not exist, and what has become a billion-dollar trade would slow down to a mere trickle. It would be just as logical to say that the cost of carrying the mails from the point of origin to the small offices and routes should not be charged against such mail as to contend that the cost of delivery thereof at such offices and on these routes is not a proper charge but constitutes a service accorded on a subsidized basis as a matter of policy in the interest of the general public. In other words, why subsidize only part of the way?

The foregoing comment also answers the claims of publishers and users of third- and fourth-class mail, as well as the special services, that the salaries and other costs of maintaining the small third- and fourth-class post offices should not be charged against second-, third-, and fourth-class mail and the special services, but should be treated as a subsidized service to the rural population.

The fact is that the postal service is set up and operates to handle all classes of mail and services rendered. Since postal services, other than first class and domestic air mail, produce about 48 percent of the revenue and constitute 94 percent of the weight and 44 percent of the pieces of all mail, the fallacy of considering these services as "fill in" or "byproduct" services is apparent.

With respect to the argument that the cost ascertainment fails to credit publishers for services they perform in routing, sacking, and transporting their publications to other points, etc., this is plausible on its face but is without merit. The handling and delivery of second-class matter on rural routes is burdensome and time consuming.

The volume is great, in many cases the only matter deposited in a rural box by the carrier, and the allocated expense is that actually entailed in performing the job of delivering pieces of each particular class of mail. The law granting the second-class mailing privilege specifically requires publishers to prepare their mailings in such manner as may be directed by the Postmaster General in order to offset the cost of handling the matter. This is not a new requirement but has been in effect for more than 50 years. The weighing of copies of publications at publishers' plant and the transportation of the copies by the publishers to other post offices, etc., is a procedure followed at the request of the publishers to assure early delivery and often for competitive reasons. The only saving to the post office is that of transportation, which is only a fraction of the over-all cost of effecting delivery of the individual pieces. The requirement that publishers sort and sack their publications by post offices and routes is one of the conditions incident to the publications enjoying second-class mailing privileges. If the publishers did not perform this service, they would be required to pay higher rates.

In criticizing the cost ascertainment allocation of expense to the several classes of mail and special services, reference is made to the statement in the Hoover Commission task force report on the post office: "At the present time the Department is not in a position to recommend to the Congress a full and proper charge for any of its services because it is not equipped to prove what reasonable costs of these services should be." However, the critics ignore the further statement of the task force that "in the meantime, however, necessary revision of rates should not be postponed." Furthermore, they give no consideration to the statement of the task force: "The cost ascertainment has been in operation over 20 years and has been refined and improved many times, and has received the approval of several well-qualified independent examiners."

The objections of individual publishers, as well as the representatives of the various publishing groups, to increasing the postage rates on newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals follow the same pattern which indicates a joining of forces and collaboration to conduct an all-out, determined campaign to prevent any increase.

It is claimed the proposed rates are too high; that the additional postage required will exceed the profits of the publishers; that the increase cannot be passed on to subscribers or advertisers and would drive publications out of the mails and in many cases ruin the publishers and put them out of business entirely. This argument is specious and ignores the fact that publishers have increased subscriptions and advertising rates to meet higher costs for all other items incident to the publishing business. It would appear some way can be worked out to meet the additional postage expense by spreading the increase among subscribers and advertisers; also by curtailing expenditures and adopting more efficient and economical methods in carrying on their business, as the publishers so insistently demand of the Post Office Department. It is known, and generally admitted by publishers, that they do not net a substantial return from subscriptions but pay the major portion of the subscription price to agencies or otherwise use it to cover the cost of obtaining subscriptions. Here is something that calls for remedial action on the part of publishers generally in order to effect better and more economical methods of obtaining subscriptions.

Notwithstanding these facts, many publishers are currently soliciting long-term subscriptions at special prices in order, as is understood, to maintain the circulation which they guarantee to advertisers under an agreement to refund a portion of the payment for advertising space in the event the guaranteed circulation is not maintained.

Practically every witness opposing increases in the second-class postage rates has alleged that this is no time to raise such rates; that business generally is experiencing a decline and that advertising is falling off. As to the latter, it can be pointed out that the percentage of advertising appearing in most publications as reported in recent issues of various business periodicals devoted to the publishing industry has not decreased to any considerable extent as compared with the peak of a year or two ago. As a matter of fact, recent issues of some periodicals have carried a greater percentage of advertising than they did a year ago.

The fact that the recommended increases for this class of matter when expressed percentagewise range from 200 to 600 percent or more is mentioned by most publishers. This sounds big but when figured on the basis of postage per copy or increase per subscriber per year, the increase is not so great as to be impracticable to meet. It would amount from only a fraction of a cent to 2 cents per copy or from less than 25 cents to not more than $1 on an annual subscription basis, the average being around 50 cents for dailies for which the additional postage would be greater because of their many issues, up to 365 a year.

In view of all the facts and circumstances the proposed rates are neither fantastic nor unreasonable when considered from the angle that even after the second raise, the revenue from second-class mail would still fall short by over $100,000,000 annually of covering the cost of handling this mail.

Publishers say that the elimination of all second-class mail would not reduce the overall expense of operating postal service in like proportion—some claiming the saving would not even equal the loss of revenue. On this point the question has been asked by many, at the hearings, in letters from Members of Congress, and in the press: "How much would the postal deficit be if there was no second-class mail?"

This question has been carefully studied by the Director of Cost Ascertainment and it is his opinion that the withdrawal of second-class matter from the mails would effect annual savings of more than $95,000,000, not including the substantial savings in the rural, star route, and other services. The amount is considerably in excess of the postage (approximately $41,000,000) derived from such mail.

Great emphasis has been placed by publishers (as well as by other mail users) on the consequential results from the proposed rate increases—such as unemployment in the publishing industry and many others dependent on it; decreased need for paper with like results in that field; reduced demand for commodities, services, etc., following withdrawal of advertising, etc. This view is believed to be much exaggerated. As some witnesses have admitted, ways would be found to meet the higher postal charges without the dire results predicted. Emphasis has also been laid on the educational value of newspapers and other publications and their importance as a means of disseminating public information, promoting trade and industry, or increasing knowledge of literature, the sciences and arts. It is claimed higher postage rates on second-class matter would hamper the production and cut down circulation of publications and so defeat the intent of the original law granting low rates and special privileges to this class of mail. These fears, too, may be discounted for it is not felt that the action likely to be taken by Congress on rate revision will discard the favorable consideration which this class of mail has so long enjoyed.

Publishers stress value of newspapers as disseminators of public information, unifying people of the Nation, educational character, promoters of trade and industry. All this is granted but does not warrant continuance of nominal rate of postage in light of great increase in cost of operating postal service at such a tremendous deficit for which second-class matter is so largely responsible.

Many objections have been made to the definition of the term "advertising" as used in the pending bill, particularly the proposed classification of so-called "readers" or "write-ups" as advertising. Publishers allege all kinds of dire results, censorship, interference with the freedom of the press, confusion, and a tremendous increase in personnel to determine what is advertising, etc. As a matter of fact the provision in question is now embodied in paragraph 8 (a), section 541, Postal Laws and Regulations, except the last portion which relates to "merchandise write-ups" giving name of manufacturer, dealer or the source of supply together with prices, in connection with which the publisher furnishes information obviously designed to enable the reader to obtain the items featured. The examples of the possible application of the provision given by publishers are absurd.

A number of witnesses have stated that they have no objection to it but only to the addition of the provision regarding "merchandise write-ups." Because of the constantly spreading practice of carrying such matter, which actually constitutes a most effective method of promoting the sale of merchandise, and the fact that some publications feature such matter to such extent in such manner as to simulate a catalog, it is felt that legislation on the subject is necessary. In its report on the survey of the Los Angeles post office, the representatives of the General Accounting Office criticized the Department's liberal rulings on this type of matter.

While the witnesses representing publishers' groups or associations have refused to agree to any second-class postage rate increases, individual publishers have said they would not object to "reasonable" or moderate increases. Questioning developed that most of them thought a 5-percent increase per year over a period of several years, up to five, would be acceptable. Others suggested one 10-percent increase. Obviously, such small increases would make no noticeable dent in a deficit of over $200,000,000 for this class of mail. It is refreshing to note that the National Editorial Association, representing 1,893 weeklies and 223 small dailies—"grassroot papers"—went on record at their recent meeting in New York City to agreeing to some increase in second-class mail rates, "perhaps as much as 50 percent over present rates, plus withdrawal of the free-in-county privilege."

Those who have opposed increased rates for third- and fourth-class matter have indicated that unless second-class mail matter is made to bear more of the burden there is no justification for increasing the rates on other classes of mail. There is some merit to this argument, but, nevertheless, the Department feels that there should be increases in the present rates on second-, third-, and fourth-class mail, and that these rates should be such as would distribute the cost of the postal service in the places where it belongs. In other words, there should be some equalization, and higher rates on certain classes of mail should not be made in order to eliminate the large deficit in the handling of second-class mail.

The rates recommended on third-class mail (circulars) and on fourth-class mail (parcel post) are fair. The loss in the handling of third-class mail this year will be approximately $129,000,000, and there is no justifiable reason why such class of mail should be handled at 1 cent per piece where the cost of handling is equal to that of handling first-class letter mail.

There is urgent need also for raising the rate on Government postal cards and private mailing cards from 1 to 2 cents. The cost to the Department is approximately 2.6 cents to handle this class of mail, and there is no reason why the rate should not be raised to 2 cents apiece and the bulk-mail privilege eliminated.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS, 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3083) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments and funds available for the Export-Import Bank and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] for himself and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] to suspend the rule in order that a certain amendment may be offered.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the motion before the Senate is similar in words and figures to that made with respect to the social-security appropriation bill. That bill is now, in effect, on the table because of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted.

I realize that one who in the past decade or so has advocated economy in government has been on the unpopular side. Nevertheless, it is a problem which faces us. Even though economy in government is unpopular, it is vital to the interests of the American people.

This being a representative Government, those who come here to represent the people of the States must decide the issue as to what shall be expended for the purpose of operating the Government of the United States. The Government itself has no money. Its only source of revenue is the citizens of the various States who, of course, under the Constitution are citizens of the United States. As we face this problem we are always reminded that if we cut the expenses of government we shall of necessity reduce the salaries of Government employees and/or reduce the number of employees. I think it is clear that we must determine the amount of money we can raise, and then determine what services we can get for the money we are able to raise to operate the Government.

Two days ago it was reliably reported that the economic advisers to the President asked him to hold down spending. That report has not yet been officially released from the White House, but it has been stated in the press that it has been unofficially rendered to the President. I anticipate that in due time the President will release the report which was made to him, whether it was made in conformity with his previous political promises or not, because after all, the money which we raise must come from the citizens of the country, and it is to be used to render services to them.

We realize that there is no department which comes before the Committee on Appropriations which does not insist that even the amount allowed by the President in the budget is inadequate to operate the department. Half an hour ago, in an open committee meeting, the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission was asked whether the Appropriations Committee should attempt to distribute a 5-percent cut in the appropriation, or whether he would prefer to apply the cut in the manner that he saw fit, knowing how much he could have. Naturally he favored the course which is outlined in this motion.

But, Mr. President, he did raise his voice and say that his Commission could not take any cut, that the amount in the budget was too small. As I say, everyone who operates a department or bureau with thousands of employees insists that he cannot take a cut. But the time has come when cuts must be made, for we are informed that the President's Council of Economic Advisers has told him that the cost of government must be reduced sufficiently to bring the expenditures of the Government within its income.

Mr. President, as I have said, there are those who insist that if reductions are made in the appropriations, it will be necessary either to reduce the pay received by Government employees or reduce the number of Government employees. Therefore, as we contemplate making reductions in the appropriations for the Post Office Department, it is stated by some persons that reductions in the postal appropriations, if made, must result in either a reduction in the pay of the postal employees or a reduction in the number of postal employees. The statement is made on the floor of the Senate, "We cannot cut the appropriations for the Post Office Department, for already it is operating at a deficit." It happens that the Post Office Department is one agency of the Government which has an income; it has a revenue from the services it renders to the public. Yet today it is operating at a deficit. There are many other departments of the Government which have no particular income from the services they render; they operate at what might be called a total deficit, insofar as any income is concerned. However, it is specifically stated on the floor of the Senate that we cannot make reductions in the appropriations for the Post Office Department because it is already operating at a deficit.

In that connection I wish to refer to the report of the Hoover Commission's task force on the Post Office Department, known as Appendix 1, filed with the Senate in January 1949. I should like to read a few of the statements contained in that report. On page 66, part V, under the heading "Costs and savings," I read the following:

> Based on broad experience in business and industry, and predicated on knowledge of what has been done in commercial operations, the study of the Post Office Department indicates that total annual expenditures in post offices having receipts of over $1,000,000 per year can be reduced by $90,000,000 if operations are placed under better management control.

The report singles out the large post offices having receipts of over $1,000,000 a year, and after making a study of the matter, the task force says that in those post offices alone, if operations are placed under better management control, a saving of at least $90,000,000 can be made.

Now I wish to refer to the report of the House committee, which had something to say about the deliveries of mail. On page 16 of the report we find the following:

> There is a wide discrepancy at the present time in city delivery service, particularly in residential areas, with the deliveries ranging from one to three per day. It is the belief of the committee that the Department should maintain a continuous check of this situation with the idea of effecting every possible economy. The committee is not taking the position that all residential areas should have only one delivery a day; neither is it convinced that three deliveries a day are required in all residential areas now enjoying that service. Mail volume should be the controlling factor in determining that more than one delivery per day is necessary.

Mr. President, that statement indicates the sort of things the Hoover Commission's task force was talking about.

I read further from its report, on page 66:

> If postal volume and the general level of all costs continue to rise, these excessive expenditures will become even greater in future years. In order to achieve the indicated savings, however, it will be necessary to expend annually an amount which should not exceed a peak of $8,000,000, plus minor capital expenditures, for the modernization program recommended in part V. This will leave net savings of over $80,000,000 per year at present volume and at current wage and salary levels.

So, there could be savings of over $80,000,000 a year at the present volume and at current wage and salary levels.

Then the report states:

> In addition to the foregoing net savings of $80,000,000 annually, it is conservatively estimated that further annual savings of at least $60,000,000 are possible from improvements in methods and equipment requiring extensive development or major capital expenditures.

I wish to call attention to the last statement appearing on that page:

> No one item of savings will be spectacular in itself. The measure of operating improvement in the postal establishment will be the cumulative effect of many individual savings leading to a very substantial total. Because of the continuing growth in the postal business (it doubled on the average every 11 years for 80 years prior to 1929 and doubled again in 14 years from 1934 to 1948) it is unlikely that any reduction in total expenditures will take place. Instead, the estimated savings will show up in improved productivity of the present organization and a reduction in the rate at which the organization must grow to meet the increasing volume of business.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all of part V of the Hoover Commission's task force report on the Post Office Department be printed at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I am sure it is understood that the matter to be printed in the RECORD will appear in fine type; is it not?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes. The RECORD will indicate that the statements come from the official report of the Hoover Commission's task force studying the Post Office Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, part V of the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

V. COSTS AND SAVINGS

Based on broad experience in business and industry, and predicated on knowledge of what has been done in commercial operations, the study of the Post Office Department indicates that total annual expenditures in post offices having receipts of over $1,000,000 per year can be reduced by at least $90,000,000 if operations are placed under better management control. If postal volume and the general level of all costs continue to rise, these excessive expenditures will become even greater in future years. In order to achieve the indicated savings, however, it will be necessary to expend annually an amount which should not exceed a peak of $8,000,000, plus minor capital expenditures, for the modernization program recommended in part V. This will leave net savings of over $80,000,000 per year at present volume and at current wage and salary levels.

In addition to the foregoing net savings of $80,000,000 annually, it is conservatively estimated that further annual savings of at least $60,000,000 are possible from improvements in methods and equipment requiring extensive development or major capital expenditures. Development and perfection of the necessary methods and equipment would be carried on within the organization recommended in part V, the cost of which is included in the $8,000,000 mentioned above. Authorization of the capital investment required for widespread application of perfected improvements should, of course, be dependent on prior demonstration of their practicability and money-saving value.

The increased expense required to make possible the estimated savings will be occasioned primarily by adoption of the recommendations dealing with organization, financial and accounting control, control of costs and methods, and personnel administration. The maximum annual expenditure of $8,000,000 will not be reached for several years because a number of the recommendations, particularly those concerned with cost controls and methods improvements, will require time for planning, development, and gradual installation.

The length of time which will elapse before the peak of expense is reached will depend on the energy with which the program is pursued, but it will probably not be less than 3 years. Conversely, the estimated savings to be achieved will not reach peak level until the program is in full operation.

No one item of savings will be spectacular in itself. The measure of operating improvement in the postal establishment will be the cumulative effect of many individual savings leading to a very substantial total. Because of the continuing growth in the postal business (it doubled on the average every 11 years for 80 years prior to 1929 and doubled again in 14 years from 1934 to 1948) it is unlikely that any reduction in total expenditures will take place. Instead, the estimated savings will show up in improved productivity of the present organization and a reduction in the rate at which the organization must grow to meet the increasing volume of business.

It should be noted that the estimated additional expense for the Post Office Department will not represent $8,000,000 added expense for the Federal Government as a whole because of estimated savings on the order of $2,000,000 annually which will be reflected in the expense of the General Accounting Office and the Civil Service Commission by adoption of recommendations in this report bearing on their operations.

All the advantages to be realized by the Post Office Department by adoption of the proposed modernization program cannot be measured in dollars alone, nor can all of the financial gains be estimated at this time. Gains will also accrue from such factors as:

1. Better financial control.
2. Better management through on-the-scene direction of field operations.
3. Better recruitment of personnel.
4. Better training of postal workers and supervisors.
5. Better utilization of transportation facilities.
6. Better commercial practices.

After all possible savings in postal operations are effected, however, there will still remain a large deficit. Of major importance, therefore, will be the fact that adoption of the recommendations herein will provide more facts upon which to base consideration of adjustments needed in rates and classifications in order to bring revenues and expenses more nearly into balance.

In the last analysis, implementation of the proposed program will require additional annual expenditures of about $6,000,000 by the Federal Government. This amount will represent less than one-half cent of every dollar of postal revenue, and should be repaid many times over.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I call attention to the findings of the task force of the Hoover Commission in order to demonstrate that the proposed reduction of 5 percent in the appropriations for the Post Office Department would not require the Postmaster General to attempt to do the impossible. It is apparent that reductions in the expenditures of the Post Office Department can be made, and if we are to make such reductions in its appropriations, Senators should not insist upon the point of order, but should allow the Senate by majority vote to determine the amount of the appropriations for the Department.

In this connection, Mr. President, I may point out that four other Senators and myself have proposed to the rules of the Senate an amendment which would permit the Senate by majority vote to determine a question of this kind. That proposal is now before the Committee on Rules and Administration. It is obvious that it is difficult to find a scientific method, shall we say, of requiring the man who is in charge of the particular service to make the necessary cuts or reductions. Of course, to some branches of the Department he might choose to allow the full amount appropriated for their purposes, but he might determine that he could make cuts of up to 20 percent in the funds allowed to other branches of the Department.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is not that particularly true of the Post Office Department, which is dependent upon the volume of business, so that if one section of the country has perhaps a recession in business and the volume of post-office business in that section falls off, the Postmaster General and his aides have a peculiar opportunity for taking advantage of cuts through administrative ability?

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. I think that is true in the case of an income-producing department such as the Post Office Department. The Postmaster General would be allowed to determine from time to time whether he could cut more in one branch of the service than in another, rather than the committee at this date determining where reductions should be made. I think that is the scientific way to do it.

There is another way of doing it, of course, that would not be subject to the point of order. That is for the Congress to make a flat cut of 5 percent, or to say to the department, in substance, "You may use 95 percent of a particular fund." That would leave no discretion to the particular department. It would have to use 95 percent of a given fund appropriated for it. Such a method would not permit the use of discretion, which is a scientific way of handling the matter, because we realize that some departments may have increases in income, and others decreases, and they would be in better position to make the determination.

Having spoken before upon this subject, I wanted to call attention to the particular statements in the task-force report which I have quoted and to ask the Senate to consider them. A two-thirds vote is required to adopt the motion to suspend the rule, but I hope the Senate will give the two-thirds vote, so that in passing this bill we may follow the suggestions of those who are advising the President that there should be a cut in the expenditures of government, that taxes should not be increased, and that deficit spending should be avoided.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, yesterday three different Senators stated upon this floor that they were examining the Post Office Department; one of them, in the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The committee was having a long and extended hearing, in order to see how much could be saved.

I hold in my hand the La Follette-Monroney Act, and I call particular attention to paragraph 3, page 15, relative to the duties and powers of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, which reads as follows:

3. The postal service generally, including the railway mail service, and measures relating to ocean mail and pneumatic-tube service; but excluding post roads.

I understand perfectly well of course what the attitude was last year, when the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service spent many weeks considering questions affecting the Post Office Department and salaries. The committee meetings were well attended. As I recollect now, we always had a quorum. The proceedings were published, and it took nearly 800 pages of what we call the green book to cover the testimony. When we finished, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee walked in one morning, without having consulted, so far as I know, a single member of the committee, and said, "The Republican policy committee has met. You are going to have so much money and no more." The Senator did not inquire as to what the evidence showed. I believe he cared less. Of course I protested to the Republican policy committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I did not know the chairman of the Appropriations Committee during the 2 years of the Eightieth Congress had that much influence. I am glad I was effective, if I was in undertaking to keep down the cost of government.

Mr. LANGER. I may say to my distinguished friend that when the distinguished Senator appeared we took a record and a transcript. If the Senator is interested in having the transcript read upon the floor of the Senate, of course I shall be glad to get it. But I think the Senator will admit that he did not approach a single member of the committee, certainly not the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. He walked in one morning about 10:30 and said, "There is so much money available, and that is all you are going to get. That is exactly an amount not to exceed one-half billion dollars."

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not recall. I remember being there, and I remember questioning the committee on going overboard in the expenditure of money. If it had some effect, I am very greatly pleased, but I did not realize that it had had that effect. If the distinguished Senator says it did, I accept his statement.

Mr. LANGER. I want to say to my friend that it did not have any effect on the Senate Committee on the Post Office and Civil Service, but unfortunately it had some effect on the House of Representatives. The result was, when we met in conference, the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] chairman of our subcommittee, was met, as was the Senator from Ohio in connection with two or three of his bills, including housing and Federal aid to education with a determined position by the House managers. They simply sat down and said, "When you are ready to vote for what we have agreed on, we will vote with you. If you do not vote for this, you will get nothing." The distinguished Senator from Vermont and the other Senate conferees took what the House managers were willing to give us; which of course, as the Senator knows, was in many instances entirely inadequate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I may say I have observed him in action and have noted his ability. I saw the Senator one day on the floor of the Senate get $12,500,000 for a certain project. I have not observed that the Senator is at all bashful in endeavoring to get what he wants.

Mr. LANGER. I may say to the Senator, that is the best $12,500,000 that has been spent in behalf of the farmers in submarginal areas for a very long time. For example, it is going to wipe out typhoid fever.

Mr. BRIDGES. How is it going to wipe out typhoid fever?

Mr. LANGER. It is going to do that by reason of the fact that on some of the submarginal farms the water supply is too near to the toilet facilities, as the Public Health Department has reported at various times.

Mr. BRIDGES. On the great farms in North Dakota, is there not space enough so that the water can be drawn in one place, and the toilet facilities be located in another place?

Mr. LANGER. I am not discussing alone the farms of North Dakota. I am also discussing the farms of New Hampshire, which I understand are very small, and where land is at a great premium.

But I want to return to the La Follette-Monroney Act, with reference to the powers and duties of committees, in which, in the case of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, it is provided:

3. The postal service generally, including the railway mail service, and measures relating to ocean mail and pneumatic-tube service; but excluding post roads.

I am sorry the junior Senator from Michigan is no longer present. I have here the testimony of Mr. Jesse Donaldson, Postmaster General, given yesterday before the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. It will be remembered the Post Office Department is being criticized, yet, yesterday, Mr. Donaldson had this to say:

I am inclined to ask, where is the waste? What suggestions have been made for streamlining the postal service? What do they suggest we do to decrease the cost? What is the modernization they imply we should adopt? What substitutions do they offer for the human eyes, hands, legs, and brains so necessary to perform the particular functions peculiar to the postal service?

I am delighted to see the Senator from Michigan is now present. I am reading from the testimony of Postmaster General Donaldson, given yesterday. I shall start again. I am reading a portion of his testimony which I think is material. He says:

Where is the waste?

Did anybody appear before the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service to point out a single bit of waste? Mr. Donaldson continued:

What suggestions have been made for streamlining the postal services?

Was anybody there, offering any suggestions?

Mr. Donaldson asked:

Where is the waste? What suggestions have been made for streamlining the postal service?

Did anyone offer any suggestions?

He asked, further:

What do they suggest we do to decrease the cost?

Did anyone offer any suggestions?

He asked, further:

What is the modernization they imply we should adopt? What substitutions do they offer for the human eyes, hands, legs, and brains so necessary to perform the particular functions peculiar to the postal service.

Mr. President, who is to blame if there is a deficit? It goes right back to the Eightieth Congress. There was a bill introduced last year to compel such magazines as Life, Time, Fortune, and Newsweek, to pay what they should pay. It was shown that the taxpayers paid a subsidy of $9,000,000 a year for the benefit of the magazines I have mentioned. Our committee reported the bill. In the discussion of the Marshall plan there was an item of $10,000,000 inserted so that Life, Newsweek, Fortune, and Time magazines could send their literature into foreign countries.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator agree with me that one of the most wasteful things in the entire Post Office Department is the ridiculous amount paid as a subsidy to air lines?

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. The only thing Congress can do in connection with the situation is to pass a law to put an end to it.

Mr. LANGER. I agree totally and entirely with the Senator in connection with that matter.

Mr. LONG. The Postmaster General has no control over it whatsoever, and he could not reduce the expense if he wanted to.

Mr. LANGER. I again agree with the Senator.

The Postmaster General said:

I have repeatedly stated that 95 percent of the cost of the postal service is salaries and transportation of the mails. I have no control over either. I have also stated that 85 percent of the manpower in the postal service is devoted to the collection, the distribution, the transportation, and the delivery of the mails.

Do those who oppose increased rates and fees desire that I reduce the cost of the service through reductions in the kind of service rendered? I can reduce costs by placing all rural service on a triweekly basis instead of a daily basis. I can reduce the costs by placing all city delivery service on a one-trip basis in residential sections and two trips in business districts. I can reduce costs by shortening the hours of all window service to the public. We can do many things to decrease costs by reducing or curtailing service to the public.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator raised the point, as did also the Senator from Louisiana, of the air-line subsidy, stating that the Postmaster General has no control over it. There is no doubt about that. A subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which I was chairman last year, started an investigation. We talked to the Postmaster General with reference to it. There is no doubt that he is not able to control the expenditure. But the record shows that another Department has something to do with it, and cooperation between the two Departments could accomplish a great deal. We are granting routes to certain air lines which are in competition with other air lines, which reduces the amount of income. We discovered that we must keep the companies in the black and out of the red by virtue of a subsidy in connection with the carriage of mail. In other words, the mail-carrying companies, operating outside the United States, are not permitted to go into the red because the United States Government subsidizes them to keep them in the black. It was demonstrated that meals cost almost as much as does the transportation of passengers, but the Government, through a subsidy, which is unknown to the public, and is not in the open——

Mr. LANGER. It is in the open.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; but it is unknown to the public. The public does not realize that a part of the cost of a high-priced meal on an air liner is being paid for by the United States Government through a subsidy.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Is it not true that the proper thing to do would be for us to change the law which requires such foolishness as the payment of subsidies because air lines may make a loss?

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree with the Senator that we should stop it. But until we pass such a law, the various departments should coordinate and cut down expenses so that the Government would not have to pay this large sum. I agree that we should pass such a law. It should have been passed long ago, and I so advocated.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. How can we cut the appropriation 5 percent when these subsidies must be paid? The attention of the distinguished Senator from Michigan was invited to page 6 of the report. The situation cannot be corrected without a law.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question, if I may. In my State a great many persons complain that there is not enough help in the Internal Revenue Bureau to go over the records in connection with income taxes and corporate taxes so that taxpayers may be charged for taxes which they failed, through inadvertence, to pay, or because of some correction 2 or 3 years back. That indicates that perhaps there is not enough help in the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Under the provisions of the Senator's amendment, is it possible for the Treasury Department to make reductions in particular places where such action would not do any particular harm? I think the Internal Revenue Bureau is one place where it would be extremely difficult to make any reduction at all.

Mr. FERGUSON. If I may answer the Senator, the amendment is so framed that the Treasury Department, which operates the Internal Revenue Bureau, would not have to take anyone off the pay roll who was actually doing that kind of work, because that can be treated as income-producing work, where a service is being rendered to the public. That is the purpose of the amendment.

I agree that we should not interfere with law-enforcing officers whose activities result in bringing revenue into the Treasury of the United States. They should render honest, efficient service. Their work is essential, and we would not accomplish anything by cutting that kind of service, indeed the pending bill increases the number of employees engaged in that line of work. But I still think that the Department as a whole could stand a cut of 5 percent; efficiency could be increased 5 percent.

Mr. BALDWIN. In other words, under the particular bill we are considering, there is a substantial increase for the internal-revenue service.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct.

Mr. BALDWIN. And the Treasury Department is not necessarily required to make the cut in the Internal Revenue Bureau?

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Michigan to what I think is the basic fallacy of the 5-, 10-, or 20-percent reduction he proposes. Take, for example, the Federal Trade Commission. That is a good example. Or take the appropriation given the Attorney General for the enforcement of the antitrust laws. The Federal Trade Commission had a miserable little appropriation, as I recollect, of in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 a year. They were supposed to protect small business all over the country. What happened? When the war came along Congress passed a statute and said, "You must not, during this war, prosecute railroads or oil companies or anyone connected with the defense." One year went by, 2 years went by, and the cases piled up. Three years went by and 4 years went by, and more cases piled up until, when our Committee on Post Office and Civil Service investigated the Federal Trade Commission, we found cases 7, 8, 9, 10 years old. The representatives of the Commission came before us and said, "We have to have more help. We have to have more lawyers. This work has piled up. During the war we could not prosecute."

The same thing was true of the Antitrust Division of the Attorney General's Office. So I maintain that instead of cutting them down when the war was over we should have increased materially the number of employees of the Federal Trade Commission, so that they could have protected small business.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. I think the Senator from North Dakota and I agree on the enforcement of the antitrust laws. I think we both agree that they have not been enforced.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. Therefore, we do not want to cut any appropriation designed to facilitate the enforcement of the antitrust laws. But I think we will also be able to agree that the lawyers in the Department who are doing the work can surely increase their efficiency 5 percent. Does not the Senator agree with that?

Mr. LANGER. No; I do not agree with that at all, if we are to cut what they receive 5 percent. We do not increase a man's efficiency by reducing his salary.

Mr. FERGUSON. We do not reduce his salary. We merely ask him to do more work in the Department. Therefore we will get better law enforcement.

Mr. LANGER. Does not the Senator know that some of these men are already working their heads off?

Mr. FERGUSON. There are others who are not.

Mr. LANGER. Let me call the attention of the distinguished Senator to the Bureau of Mines. A man by the name of Sayres was the head of that Bureau. I never saw him until he came before our Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. I liked him. I liked his appearance. I liked his looks. So I made a very careful investigation of Mr. Sayres, and found that big companies had offered him as much as $40,000 a year to leave Government employment, where he was getting $10,000.

To show what we are up against on this committee in connection with unemployment, about which we hear so much now, there were 800 men who Mr. Sayres said, were doing absolutely nothing. We asked him about it. We said, "How can you justify 800 men on the pay roll doing nothing?" He said, "It is very simple. If John L. Lewis calls another strike, we have to be ready overnight to take over all the mines." He said, "The President issued an Executive order. We can let these 800 men go, but if we let them go and Mr. Lewis overnight declares a strike, who is going to take charge? Where would we get men who could handle the situation?"

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. If I remember correctly the Senator's statement of yesterday—and I paid very close attention to him, and I know that undoubtedly he thought over what he said—he stated that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service had made an examination of all the departments of the Government, and that outside of one, they did not find a single person doing nothing. Now he says there are 800 people doing nothing. How does the Senator jibe those figures?

Mr. LANGER. It is very simple. Our committee said to Mr. Sayres, "We want them removed," and they were removed.

Mr. BRIDGES. Was that the only department where employees were doing nothing?

Mr. LANGER. That is not the department I referred to yesterday, because that department is well conducted.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator's statement was not quite accurate, was it? He says today that he found 800 doing nothing in one bureau, and yesterday he said there was only one department where employees were doing nothing.

Mr. LANGER. I told the Senate yesterday that when we hired these experts, they were hired after we had the testimony from Mr. Sayres. I say to my distinguished colleague that he does not have the faintest conception of conditions, and he would not have unless he sat on the committee, where we had Federal employees come before us. I presume some of those men and women had served during the war. I know man after man like Sayres, who turned down offers of big jobs to stay in Government employment drawing $10,000.

Mr. BRIDGES. The point where I differ with the Senator is that he stood here and told the Senate—and I listened very carefully—that his investigators went to every Government department, and that they found only one department where employees were idle, not doing their work.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. BRIDGES. I merely wish to ask the Senator now one question. The Senator knows that he and I speak plainly. We have respect for each other, but we speak plainly. I cannot imagine the committee investigators going out and not seeing what he reports, unless they wore blindfolds, or something of the kind.

Mr. LANGER. I will ask the Senator to name the department where the employees are loafing. Give us the name, and give us the days, and how many were loafing.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have not had time individually to look into the matter, but I have been in many departments during the 13 years I have been a Member of the Senate, and I have seen many employees idle. I have not kept a record of the days, and the details, but I have had reports from very loyal employees of the various departments about people being idle.

Mr. LANGER. I had the same reports when the war first started. At that time I believed those reports were true, in many cases. It was not possible to hire half a million people overnight and have them all placed and all working in a very high state of efficiency. As the war went on, those people got into their groove, and did their work. Since the war ended I made investigation, and I assure my distinguished friend from New Hampshire that, aside from one department, all the investigators found the highest efficiency and no loafing.

Mr. BRIDGES. If we ever reach the time when we have a few minutes to spare, I should like to go with the distinguished Senator to some of the departments, if he will wear a mask and I likewise, so that we will not be known, and let us see what we find.

Mr. LANGER. Times without number, when I was chairman of the committee, I got up in the morning and went to various departments, and I am satisfied the employees did not know who I was. I investigated the reports I had received, that women were doing knitting, and that men had their feet on the desks reading newspapers. I say to my friend from New Hampshire that those reports were not true, and similar reports are not true today.

Mr. BRIDGES. I realize that the Senator has a right to his own judgment and his own conclusions, but I cannot concur in the conclusion he has reached, because the information I get is to the contrary.

Mr. LANGER. Let me say again to the distinguished Senator, whom I admire so much, if he would tell us the names of the departments, we could look into it. It is easy to rise here and say that so and so is not doing a good job; but we would like to have the Senator name the department, and the days when the loafing was done. We kept track of the days our investigators went into various departments, how long they stayed, with whom they talked, and whom they saw.

Mr. BRIDGES. If an employee were to tell a Senator that other employees in the same section were loafing on the job, and those in charge of the section were to find out that he had made such a statement, he would certainly be fired.

Mr. LANGER. Any employee who made such a statement to me confidentially would not be fired. As a matter of fact, he would be entitled to a medal if he told the truth.

Mr. BRIDGES. It might be well if we could have medals struck for such a purpose.

Mr. LANGER. I may call to the Senator's attention the record which labor made on the railroads during the war. That is typical of the work that was done then.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I am not disputing the record that was made in wartime. I am talking about what is happening today, after the war has ended, in agency after agency of the Federal Government.

Mr. LANGER. I am not getting away from the fine record that was made by them during the war.

Mr. BRIDGES. I agree that a fine record was made during the war. But I am now talking of what is happening in postwar years in Government departments.

Mr. LANGER. I say that the record made by the postal employees during the war and after the war are on a par with the record made by the railroad workers during and after the war. I say again that I do not believe the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire realizes the innate patriotism of the average Government worker all through the war, and the desire to work that exists today on the part of the average Government employee. It is easy to get up and say they are loafing on the job or are not doing a good job, but let me tell the Senator the average Government employee wants to do an honest day's work for an honest day's pay.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the average Government employee does, but I say that in every department there are drones. The Government is an accentuated cross-section of public life, and we know there are some very enterprising people, such as the Senator from North Dakota, while there are other people who ride on the coat-tails of others and expect to be bottle-fed for the rest of their lives. We find that to be true in Government departments. We find it accentuated in Government departments.

Mr. LANGER. I may say to my distinguished friend from New Hampshire that, of course, human nature is human nature. I am not denying that, but I ask the Senator to name a department in which the employees are loafing.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am not going to name any. I will be frank and say that I cannot remember the dates when I have been in some departments. I cannot remember the details, but I know that over the years I have seen, and been told much about loafing. Very recently I have seen and been told such things. I know that if the names of some employees who came to me and gave me such information, were known, instead of receiving a medal, they would be fired on one excuse or another.

Mr. LANGER. Let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire that witness after witness appeared before our committee last year and made statements with reference to ratings in certain departments, whether they were good or bad, and made suggestions. There was one case of a young man from a naval base who testified before the committee, and who lost his job. I shall never forgive myself because I permitted that young man to testify in open session, and not in executive session. His superiors were in the room when he testified. But aside from the case of that one young man I do not know of a single employee who testified before the committee who lost his job as a result of his testimony. I may say that the Civil Service Committee had a very good staff. Mr. Riley headed it. He has made a life-long study of the Government civil service, and has written some books on the subject.

Mr. BRIDGES. Has the Senator or his committee investigated the departments and found everyone working at high speed?

Mr. LANGER. I am not saying they were working at high speed. I say they were doing a good day's work. We found they were doing an honest day's work for an honest day's pay. If anyone charges the employees are not doing a good day's work I should be delighted to have the one who makes the charge name the department and the time and the place. It is very easy to generalize and say that employees do not do a good job.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. What would be the Senator's solution of the problem when, under all the facts we have before us today, we find we are not going to have sufficient money to operate the Government on the basis of present expenditures? What would be the Senator's remedy?

Mr. LANGER. The answer to that question is most simple.

Mr. FERGUSON. Very well. Let us have it.

Mr. LANGER. To me it is most simple. On a number of occasions I asked that an inventory be taken of what was needed in the United States, so as to find out how much money would have to be expended for domestic needs in America, before we appropriated one single dollar for foreign aid. I have three or four times asked that we make such an inventory before we send billions upon billions of dollars to foreign countries. It would have required only a few months to find out how much money we needed to expend in the United States, before we undertook to send billions of dollars abroad. Those who sponsored such a resolution could not induce the Senate to adopt it. We were told that the administration was in a great hurry to send those billions of dollars to foreign countries.

What must be done now I do not know. I think a tragic mistake has been made. Mr. Altmeyer, head of the Social Security Administration, says that agency will need $7,000,000,000. Already a report has been made by the House of Representatives that $15,000,000,000 will be needed for a health program, over a period of 5 years. Undoubtedly it will be necessary to raise the salaries of Federal employees to some extent, by reason of the high cost of living. I could continue and enumerate one thing after another that must be done in this country, to which we could apply money that has gone to foreign countries—the forty or fifty billion dollars which we have sent across the seas. Of course, eventually the day will come, as was predicted by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] when the issue must be faced. In fact the day is here, and we are face to face with the issue.

The President says we must have more taxes. I do not believe the President can get any bill through Congress to raise taxes. That is my judgment. But I say that by reason of the fact that Congress did not take an inventory of our situation and find how much money was needed to operate the Federal Government while we sent billions of dollars abroad, we are now face to face with the proposition of whether we are going to cut down on foreign commitments.

I notice that Mr. Roberts, former Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, testified the other day that if we do not vote for the Atlantic Pact it means immediate war. I do not know how much he knows about that. My own judgment is that, in view of his testimony given at the time he investigated Pearl Harbor, his judgment is not any too reliable. At any rate that is the way he testified. Sometime ago he, or some of his associates, said that if we did not vote for the United Nations, when that subject was up for consideration in the Senate, it meant we would have war instead of peace. Yet today practically every country has discredited the United Nations, and we gave that organization $2,000,000,000.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

The distinguished Senator from Michigan asks me what we are going to do in the way of securing the needed money. I say that until we stop sending money to Ethiopia and to all other countries on the face of the globe, in amounts of hundreds of millions of dollars, we are, of course, going to be short of money.

Mr. FERGUSON. The only difference between the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from North Dakota is the method of obtaining the money needed to operate the Government. We both believe something drastic has to be done, but the Senator from North Dakota would obtain such money entirely by reducing amounts expended for foreign aid.

Mr. LANGER. No; I did not say that at all. I say that before we gave these great amounts to foreign countries we should have taken an inventory and found out how much we needed to operate our own Government, and if we found that we needed all the money we could obtain to be used here to operate our Government, we should not have sent a single dollar across the sea. Under our oaths as Senators we are obligated to take care of the United States first. I understand the arguments that are made that in sending billions upon billions of dollars across the seas we are defending the United States. If the Senator believes that, I call his attention to the correspondence between Gen. Pat Hurley and President Roosevelt, which I read upon the Senate floor at the time we began to send money to foreign countries, at the time we sent money to Iran.

Mr. FERGUSON. I believe we should have made such an inventory as the Senator suggests. The purpose of the legislative budget was to do that very thing. However, Congress let February 1 go by without taking action. Then the date to establish what our Federal needs would be was fixed as May 1. May 1 has now gone by 11 days, and the majority in control of Congress has not performed its duty in that respect. Now some Members of Congress say they want to repeal that provision, they want to wipe it out entirely. They do not want to find out how much taxes we are going to receive, on which to base the amount we can appropriate. In effect, those who want to repeal that provision say, "We want to appropriate in the dark." Of course, if Congress appropriates in the dark, each bill, as it comes before Congress, can be passed with the amount of money it contains. But when we come to the end of the year that will result in deficit spending, or the money must be provided by increased taxes.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Bricker	Cain
Anderson	Bridges	Capehart
Baldwin	Butler	Downey
Brewster	Byrd	Ecton
Ellender	Kilgore	O'Mahoney
Ferguson	Knowland	Pepper
Flanders	Langer	Robertson
Fulbright	Lucas	Saltonstall
George	McCarthy	Sparkman
Hayden	McClellan	Stennis
Hendrickson	McFarland	Taft
Hill	McGrath	Taylor
Hoey	McKellar	Tobey
Holland	Magnuson	Tydings
Humphrey	Martin	Vandenberg
Hunt	Maybank	Wherry
Ives	Millikin	Wiley
Jenner	Mundt	Williams
Johnson, Tex.	Murray	Withers
Johnston, S. C.	Neely	Young
Kem	O'Conor

By order of the Senate, the following announcement is made after each quorum call:

The members of the Committee on Foreign Relations have been granted permission to be absent from the sessions of the Senate while the Committee on Foreign Relations was conducting hearings on the North Atlantic Pact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I intend to say only a few words in behalf of this amendment.

It seems to me that the Congress finds itself in a very embarrassing and illogical position. So far as we can judge, there will be expenditures very much in excess of the taxes which can be hoped for during the fiscal year 1950. Either, therefore, we must increase taxes or we must reduce expenses, or we must consciously adopt a policy of deficit spending at a time when the country is probably above the average, and certainly has a normal activity. I do not see how we can justify deficit spending when the country has the production it has today, when it has the kind of employment it has today, and when it has the taxpaying ability it has today.

There are arguments in favor of permitting deficit spending when we have hard times, when we have a depression; but I know of no arguments in favor of deficit spending when we have substantially full employment, such as we have today.

I notice that in the Democratic platform—and I think the Republican platform contained much the same statement—it is said:

> We pledge the continued maintenance of those sound fiscal policies which under Democratic leadership have brought about a balanced budget and reduction of the public debt by $28,000,000,000 since the close of the war.
>
> * * * * *
> We shall endeavor to remove tax inequities and to continue to reduce the public debt.

That is the pledge of the Democratic Party, and certainly I think the Republican Party is bound in the same way.

So it seems to me that a policy of deficit spending is inconceivable and unjustifiable at this time.

The next proposal is that we go on spending, but increase taxes. Certainly nothing has been done up to this time by the responsible leadership in either the House of Representatives or the Senate even to suggest an increase in taxes. The President himself has recommended an increase in taxes; but yesterday we learned that his economic advisers, according to articles which I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD yesterday at page 5962, apparently are advising against any increase in taxes.

I read from one of the articles to which I refer:

> President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers favors a checkrein on Federal spending to bring the budget closer to a balance, responsible officials said yesterday.
>
> As for tax increases, the Council is reported to have suggested it might be well to accept a "lesser goal" than the $4,000,000,000 for which the President has been asking.
>
> The April report of the Council, drafted in the light of current business trends, was delivered to the White House last week. It suggested the removal or lowering of some Federal excise taxes, it was learned.
>
> But the present trend of the economy—which Council Chairman Edwin G. Nourse calls a healthy disinflation—does not warrant large-scale works spending now, the Council feels. Such outlays would make it harder to reach the goal of lower Government costs.
>
> It would be unwise to plunge into red-ink financing. But an effort to avoid it by sharply raising taxes might hinder the attempts of business firms to adjust their prices to the weaker market and keep their plants running at high capacity. The safer course would be to trim Federal spending.

Those are the recommendations of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, who were set up to guide him and to guide us on sound economic principles.

So, Mr. President, so far as I can see, the only alternative we have is to reduce expenses.

Reduction of expenses is not easy. I quite understand the reasons which have made it so difficult for the Appropriations Committee to make any cuts in expenses. But I think it is absolute nonsense to say that Government expenses cannot be cut. I think it is nonsense to say that if there are 21 lawyers in a law office, it is not possible to get rid of one of them and still have about as good a job done by the 20 lawyers remaining as had been done with the 21. Obviously in such a case it will usually be possible to find one who is not doing very much work.

So I have no question that we can cut 5 percent in every department of the Government, in personnel as well as in expenses, perhaps as an incident to improving the methods and making changes in operation which should be made.

Mr. President, we have before us a proposed method for reducing appropriations. That method has been questioned, but it seems to me to be the only resort we have at the present moment, and I cannot see how anyone can oppose the general theory that the only statesmanlike and sensible thing to do today is to cut Federal spending.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator from Ohio mean to imply by his reference to reducing the number of lawyers in a law office from 21 to 20, and his statement that it would often happen that at least one out of that number would be unnecessary, that 1 out of 21 Government employees is not earning his salary or is doing so little that he should be discharged?

Mr. TAFT. I say that any office can be cut 5 percent in personnel or expenses, and still can run just as efficiently as it did before.

If we were here concerned with a private business—and such changes have been made in private business; I have seen them made—orders simply would be issued, "You will cut the cost of your department 10 percent." In a private business, such orders have to be complied with; and, in general, when they are issued I think they result in a more efficient job being done in such private offices than is done in most Government offices. I think that in the long run it is inevitable that private offices are more efficient than Government offices, although there may be some exceptions.

In any event, I wish to place myself on record as saying that I see no alternative course which can be reasonably justified today; I see nothing for us to do but to cut the total Government budget.

As a means of cutting it, I believe the pending amendment is a practical method, and one which should be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as one who has worked for many years on the Appropriations Committee, I wish to say that I feel that this amendment should be supported. However, I favor the making of this cut under the theory that not only domestic but foreign appropriations should be cut to fit the cloth of what we can spend in the United States and still remain fiscally sound.

I agree with the Senator from Ohio when he says it is very difficult to arrive at the proper approach to doing that or the proper system which should be used. There are those who will vote for economy in the operations of the Government, but do not believe in a so-called meat-ax method. I believe there is much to be said in favor of the arguments they make. There are others who say that a search should be made—similar to investigations which are made in private business—to find where cuts can be made without injuring the operations.

One difficulty in making cuts in the operations of the Government is that the legislative branch does not have the information which the Congress said in 1947 it should have. In 1947 the Congress provided that the legislative branch thereafter should have before it a legislative budget, giving the maximum ceiling to be permitted for expenditures. But, Mr. President, May 1 has come and gone, and the majority has failed to report a legislative budget, as required by the Legislative Reorganization Act, for which practically all Members of the Congress in 1947 voted, and I myself supported it. For one reason or another, the leaders on the other side of the aisle are apparently ignoring the plain mandate of that law. The result is that, as of today, we have no legislative budget or ceiling.

Such inactivity on the part of the leaders on the other side of the aisle is strange, and is all the more deplorable in view of Democratic declarations and accusations on the floor of the Senate when Republicans were striving so valiantly to report a legislative budget in 1947 and 1948.

Before I remind the Democratic leadership of their remarks in the previous Congress, I should like to point out that sections 138 and 1939 of the Legislative Reorganization Act, pertaining to the legislative budget, were parts of the original act which was passed in the Seventy-ninth Congress, when the Democrats were in control. I wish to give the Democrats credit for that act. I think it is a constructive piece of legislation and should be carried out today.

One important factor of the legislative budget concept was its timing. The budget report was required early in the session so that it would be a guide to appropriations and revenue committees as they considered the President's requests. That was the timing of it.

The Democrats in this session of Congress first indicated they would sidetrack the primary idea behind section 138 when they postponed the report date to May 1. And now that day has passed without any report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator recalls, does he not, that it was postponed last year?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; I am coming to that.

Mr. McKELLAR.. Not only that, but does not the Senator recall that it was declared to be unworkable by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], and very properly so, when we came to look into it closely? I, as Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, followed the leadership of the Senator from New Hampshire in the matter, because it is an unworkable act. It is completely impossible under it for Senators to do anything but guess at a budget. It is as bad as a reduction of appropriations by an arbitrary percentage—5 percent, 6, 2, 8, or 5.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. I want to thank the distinguished Senator for his observation. As I proceed with my argument it will be seen that I completely agree with him. There must be some change. But I am saying now there has been a failure. The reason I am asking for a revision of the statute at this time is because there has been a failure. If it was impractical in 1947 and 1948, it is impractical now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am willing not only to revise it but to abolish it entirely. I asked unanimous consent the other day to take up a bill having that objective in view.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, instead of abolishing it, I think what should be done is to make it workable. I think we have the solution for that. When the time comes, I shall ask the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee to join in an effort to see whether we can yet preserve the spirit of the act, and at the same time make it practicable.

But at this moment, Mr. President, I again want to state that it seems to me the Republicans have been exceedingly patient. If the shoe were on the other foot, as it was in 1947 and 1948, the Democrats would be denouncing us for evading the law and making futile and meaningless gestures. I shall quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 21, 1947, pages 1276 to 1279. These again are the words of the majority leader:

> Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in my humble judgment the Legislative Budget Joint Committee which has been created by the Reorganization Act has not done its duty as required by the act, because it has failed to give Members of Congress the facts it could have given them.

Here is another quotation by the same Senator, the majority leader of the Senate today:

> That committee had an obligation under the act, and they failed * * * in the performance of that duty and obligation, in not giving to the Senate sufficient information of some kind and character upon which it might intelligently act.

Here is another quotation from the same Senator:

> I think the manner in which this matter has been handled by the majority is a snare and a delusion and a farce. * * * There was ample time for those on the Budget Committee to * * * obtain information upon which all Senators could form some kind of an intelligent conclusion.

Mr. President, in 1949, the Democrats are in far better position to present the facts, because they control both the Congress and the executive agencies. Why do they seek to evade this provision of law?

Again, I quote from the RECORD for May 8, 1947, page 4780, a statement by the majority leader:

> Mr. LUCAS. Three months have passed and no report on the legislative budget has been made. Not a single sound, constructive statement has been made by the party in power as to why no report has been made. The leaders of the majority party, sit by silently, day after day, taking no steps to move this committee to action.

Mr. President, these remarks apply perfectly to the present situation, and I think the author of these remarks ought to explain to the Senate the reason for bypassing sections 138 and 139 of the Legislative Reorganization Act.

I should like to make an additional quotation from the RECORD of February 26, 1947, pages 1419 to 1420. This was a statement by the then acting majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky, now the Vice President of the United States. It reads as follows:

> Mr. BARKLEY. There is one thing that I am certain of, and that is that the 15th day of February gave the joint committee ample time and opportunity to present an infinitely more intelligent report than that which it has submitted to the Senate.

I submit, Mr. President, that if the February 15, 1947, deadline was ample for Republicans who were struggling with a legislative budget for the first time in any Congress and had only a handful of staff members, then May 1, 1949, should be more than ample for Democrats who can call upon thousands of Federal employees for advice and counsel on the budget.

In view of these facts, it would be interesting to know why the majority leadership is evading the law.

I know that one reason given on the floor of the Senate is that the Rules Committee is presently considering a joint resolution to repeal the legislative budget provisions of the act. That is the legislation proposed by my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, which calls for outright repeal of the provision.

Mr. President, I think this is not the right move. Democrats gave no quarter when the Republicans were responsible for complying with the new, untried provisions of the law. Now that the Democrats are charged with this responsibility, the provisions are called unworkable by the present chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. The majority leadership apparently is going to repeal the law without giving it a trial even though the most favorable circumstances for formulating a legislative budget prevail.

There are Senators in this Chamber, members of both parties, who are gravely concerned about the budget. They are determined, insofar as it is within their power, to do something about it. They think this is no time to scuttle the legislative-budget idea, but to improve it and to make it work.

On February 8, 1949, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and I submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 16) providing for a consolidated appropriation bill. It is a constructive attempt to coordinate the appropriation process and to avoid the uncontrolled piecemeal process which threatens confusion in our fiscal operations.

Since the introduction of Senate Concurrent Resolution 16, many of us have given further thought to the legislative budget and to the appropriation process. Rather than see the legislative budget scuttled, we should like to improve it and to coordinate it with a more efficient appropriation procedure.

To accomplish this excellent and constructive purpose, we now offer a comprehensive concurrent resolution, which I shall later send to the desk and ask to have appropriately referred. It is also my intention to move adoption of the resolution as a substitute for the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 33), now on the calendar, which provides for the repeal of section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does the Senator not agree with me that simply to repeal the present provision without taking constructive steps would create a very bad impression in the minds of the people of the country at this time, when the question of heavy expenditures and the problem of getting revenues to meet them are before us?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I answer the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts in the affirmative. If section 138 of the Reorganization Act is scuttled now, we pay no attention to an over-all ceiling. If no provision is made whereby we can integrate not only the domestic but foreign-relations appropriations, bringing them all out on the table, seeing what the appropriations are to be, we shall merely continue to appropriate blindly, and the only method we shall have of attempting to cut the appropriations will be the procedure we are now following.

Under the concurrent resolution, which I shall explain in a few moments, there would be formed a legislative staff that would, every day in the year, check upon the various Government departments and agencies, and make recommendations—to whom?—to the appropriate committees of the House and Senate, to guide them not only in establishing a ceiling, according to section 138, which is now the law, but in determining whether we should increase taxes, and so forth. It would be voluntary. The staff would merely make recommendations. Unless that is done, we shall continue blindly to appropriate piecemeal. We shall not know what our revenues are; we shall not know what appropriations should be made. It will be impossible to keep the country on a balanced budget. Such a plan would be the beginning of the end of making appropriations which would lead us into deficit financing.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does not the Senator from Nebraska agree with me that the financing and budgetary methods of the Federal Government are far behind any procedure employed in connection with municipal and State appropriations?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Massachusetts has mentioned that. We could probably go into any State in the Union and find fiscal policies and practices far ahead of those employed by the Federal Government. I know that in my own State we are on a pay-as-you-go basis. It is absolutely necessary that we know what our revenues are. We have no bonded indebtedness. There is no way in which we can bond the State to a greater extent than $100,000, except by vote of the people. We must know what the revenues are, and we must know what the spending budget is. I think other States have made as great an advance, or even a greater advance. That is what we must do with respect to the Federal Government. We must place it on a pay-as-you-go basis and keep expenditures within the revenues.

I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his very timely observation. I think his question can be answered in the affirmative by the records of most of the States of the Union.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not agree that now, when the majority of Members of the Senate and the House say the law we have on the books is unworkable, is the time to amend the law and make it workable, and that the staff should be employed immediately, so that by next January it could present to the two branches of the Congress the facts from which we could make up a legislative budget and proceed as we should have been proceeding in the past?

Mr. WHERRY. In answer to the question of the distinguished Senator from Michigan, I say, "Certainly"; that is one of the provisions of the resolution of which the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Massachusetts are cosponsors. The resolution provides that a staff be immediately appointed so that it can start to work and assemble the data from each Government agency so that when Congress convenes in January 1950 we can have, not Executive recommendations, not recommendations from the departments, although we should be glad to have them, but recommendations from our own appointed officers of the Senate, bringing us the facts which are so vitally necessary in order to prepare a maximum ceiling.

Mr. FERGUSON. Along the same line, does the Senator agree that the Congress is responsible for the amount of money which should be expended? In other words, we hold the purse strings, and we have a duty to supervise the expenditure of the money. Even though we might require a staff as large as that of the Budget Director, who is the fiscal officer of the executive department, should we not obtain facts in order that we may determine how much money of the taxpayers should be spent on Government?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in answer to the distinguished Senator, I say, "Absolutely, yes." The final responsibility is left with the Congress, regardless of the recommendations of any agency. For that reason, if we authorize the appropriation of money, we must pay the bill, and we must know the facts.

The President sends his recommendations to the Congress, and rightly so, but, after all, the one branch of the Government which is responsible for the appropriation of money is the Congress, and for that reason I totally agree with the Senator that such a staff should investigate the subject in order that we may know what the revenues are and what must be spent. We should have these relationships all along the line, so that Congress may intelligently, through its staff, appropriate and keep the United States of America on a strong fiscal basis.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wonder if the Senator from Nebraska can inform me whether he has knowledge that there has been presented, either to the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Appropriations, an estimate based on the March 15 tax collections, indicating what the revenues are on our present level of tax receipts.

Mr. WHERRY. In answer to the distinguished Senator from California, I will say I am not a member of the Finance Committee; I am a member of the Appropriations Committee. To my knowledge no such estimate has been presented.

There are other members of the Appropriations Committee present, but, so far as I am concerned, I should say "No."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Would it not be well for either the Finance Committee or the Appropriations Committee of the Senate to secure from the Treasury Department an up-to-the-minute estimate based on the March 15 tax receipts?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think that is a very constructive suggestion, because the tax receipts today are different from what they might have been estimated 3 months ago.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I just inquired of the able chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with respect to the question asked by the Senator from California. He stated that he had no personal knowledge of such an estimate, but would be glad to check up with regard to it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think the suggestion is very timely and most constructive. In any private business the management must know what the income is in order properly to take care of the outgo. If the national revenues are falling, there is even more justification to start in to fit the expenditures to the revenues.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. In line with what the Senator has just stated, the resolution which I introduced provided for the very thing which the Senator has been discussing. The Committee on Rules and Administration struck it out and inserted a provision for repeal of the law. When that matter comes up I hope very sincerely that the Senate will, for once, follow not the rule, but the resolution, to have a study made of the subject so that we may have a workable law. The work should not take the time of Senators, but should be handled by the staff. I agree that it should be done. I think we should have a staff that will perform the task. It would seem impossible for the chairmen of the committees of the two Houses to do their work and also that work.

Mr. WHERRY. Madam President [Mrs. SMITH of Maine in the chair], I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Tennessee for stating that he feels that something should be done to make the law workable. I believe that the resolution we have offered will accomplish that, and I only hope that after the distinguished Senator has read it, he will join with us in helping to secure the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. FERGUSON. Madam President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is it not true that what is now being proposed by the able Senator from Nebraska has heretofore been studied by the Committee on Rules and Administration, even last year, so that it is nothing new? In his resolution, the Senator from Tennessee provides the law shall be suspended only pending further study, and until otherwise provided by concurrent resolution, which our proposal would accomplish.

Mr. WHERRY. It would go further than that. However, an amendment was made to the Senator's resolution which struck out the purpose of the resolution, and proposed to repeal the law. Some feel that the law is unworkable and impracticable. As it operates, I agree with the Senator from Tennessee that it is impracticable. But I think it can be made workable, and that is why I am offering today the resolution to which I have referred.

I intended to take only a few minutes of the time of the Senate, because I realized we were on a schedule, trying to get a vote on the pending bill. But I rose because I am going to support the cut proposed, and I wanted the distinguished Senator from Tennessee to know that my action in that regard constituted no reflection on his good judgment, or his position in opposition to the cut. In the absence of any other procedure, it seems to me that such a cut is justified.

In order to alleviate the situation which might recur, if it were possible to have the resolution adopted, set up the fact-finding staff, start them to work at the beginning of the fiscal year, as the distinguished Senator from Tennessee has suggested, then, when Congress convenes next January, the two committees in each House would have the information upon which they could proceed intelligently, not only as to revenues, but also as to the spending budget.

Mr. McKELLAR. Madam President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will recall that a few days ago I asked unanimous consent that the resolution suspending the law be adopted, and objection was made.

Mr. WHERRY. Madam President, when the resolution came to me it was amended and called for outright repeal. I do not know whether it was ever presented to anyone else prior to that time without the repeal provision in it. I said then that I would not support the repeal provision because I felt that the law should stay on the statute books, and should be made workable.

Mr. LUCAS. Madam President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Even though it might be repealed, that would in nowise affect the basic philosophy of the proposal made by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska with respect to the employment of a staff to get the facts.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, there would have to be legislation.

Mr. LUCAS. I know that.

Mr. WHERRY. What I intended was to ask that the concurrent resolution be sent to the Committee on Rules and Administration and have the committee study it, which is almost in line with what has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. I also expect to offer it as a substitute for Senate Resolution 33, in the event that is brought up for consideration.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to associate myself with the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Tennessee with respect to the points which are being made by the Senator from Nebraska regarding the necessity of ultimately obtaining the best expert advice possible with respect to appropriations. So long as we continue in a haphazard manner, as we are proceeding today, just that long will it be necessary for the Senate to do a great deal of speculating and guessing as to whether or not we are rendering efficient service to the taxpayers of America with respect to our expenditures.

So far as I am concerned, I can think of nothing better than a study of the resolution, with the hope that an effective staff will be employed, regardless of the expense, because whatever is expended in this adventure will in my opinion bring back tenfold the money that is spent, if we get the right kind of people to handle the work.

Mr. WHERRY. I deeply appreciate the observations made by the majority leader. I welcome his advice and judgment in this matter. I know he is interested, but knowing that possibly he is not up to 100 percent physical strength, and that he made his observations under somewhat of a physical handicap, I appreciate his statement all the more.

Mr. LUCAS. I hope the Senator will agree that the observations were 100-percent strong.

Mr. WHERRY. They were 100 percent, and I deeply appreciate them.

Madam President, the resolution I am sending to the desk avoids the difficulties which proved insurmountable when the Eightieth Congress sought to deal with the legislative budget. Instead of a joint committee of 105 members, it provides for a more cohesive body of 20 members, five each from the Senate Appropriations and Finance Committees and the House Appropriations and Ways and Means Committees.

We make sure this time that the joint committee shall have an adequate staff, which was the chief weakness of the committees' previous attempts to deal with the legislative budget, as the Senator from Illinois has pointed out, and as has been stated by others who have made observations on the resolution this morning.

We eliminate the provision that both Houses must pass a concurrent resolution approving the legislative budget. This is unnecessary. It was responsible for deadlock on one occasion, in 1947. Instead, we provide that the recommendations of the joint committee be reported only to both Houses, and be referred to the committees of both Houses which are concerned with revenues and expenditures. These committees will then have a guide for their work.

Then we tie the legislative budget idea into the appropriation process, by providing for a consolidated appropriation bill. That is the proposal the Senator from Michigan mentioned a few moments ago, which the Committee on Rules and Administration has studied for the past 2 years. It is in the form of a bill which was introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER]. I was chairman of the subcommittee which made recommendations amending the bill to make it workable in accordance with the recommendations made by all the Government agencies which came forward to testify.

Presently, each appropriation committee and subcommittee goes its own way, with no machinery to coordinate all the appropriation bills.

With a consolidated appropriation bill this anarchy can be ended. A single focal point is provided. An over-all view can be obtained. The legislative budget ceiling and the total of appropriations can be brought into practical relation.

We further provide for continuous year-round observance and study by the joint committee of the budget as a whole as one means of preventing the fiscal process from getting out of hand.

Unless we can improve our methods of handling the people's money, the congressional power of the purse, to which the Senator from Michigan referred a moment ago, will become meaningless and the safeguards of a free Republic will be sacrificed. To be sure this does not happen, we are providing by this resolution for a constructive and effective instrument to deal with the Nation's finances.

In the interests of intelligent, economical, and prudent control of the Nation's purse strings, Congress should be fully informed on the detailed functioning of administrative agencies of the Government. To obtain this information as a basis for appropriations, Congress requires a full-time staff of specialists to keep constant tab on expenditures and proposed appropriations, in order to provide factual information to the Congress and its appropriate committees for assistance in making legislative decisions.

The historic procedure of dribbling appropriations through each session of Congress without an over-all guiding plan is inefficient, wasteful, and costly to the taxpayers. Consolidation of the major appropriations would afford an over-all view of the spending budget, with opportunity to balance requirements on their relative merits. That is the efficient, businesslike way to do this job.

The President annually submits a budget to the Congress, and properly so, in compliance with his responsibilities. But as I said a moment ago in answer to the Senator from Michigan, the final responsibility over the Nation's purse strings is lodged by the Constitution in Congress, and Congress should be organized and staffed to fulfill its responsibility to the people.

Madam President, for myself and on behalf of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], and any other Senator who would like to join in sponsoring it, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution. Permit me to state once again that it is also my intention to move adoption of this concurrent resolution as a substitute for Senate Concurrent Resolution 33, now on the calendar, which provides for repeal of section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 38), submitted by Mr. WHERRY (for himself, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BYRD, Mr. FERGUSON, Mr. REED, Mr. SALTONSTALL, and Mr. YOUNG), was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 138. (a) There is hereby established a committee to prepare the legislative budget (hereinafter referred to as the 'committee'), to be composed of five members of the Senate Committee on Finance and five members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, to be appointed by the President of the Senate; and five members of the House Committee on Ways and Means and five members of the House Committee on Appropriations, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and not more than three members of each of said committees shall be members of the majority party. A vacancy in the committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the committee and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. At the beginning of each Congress the committee shall meet at the call of the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations and shall select its own chairman and vice chairman, except that the first meeting shall be called in July 1949. A majority of the committee shall constitute a quorum and the powers conferred upon them by this section may be exercised by a majority vote.

"(b) It shall be the duty of the committee to prepare and report to the Senate and to the House of Representatives at the beginning of each regular session of Congress a legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year, including the estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such year. Such report shall be based upon the studies and investigations of the committee, giving due consideration to the budget recommendations of the President. Such report shall contain a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditures in such year which shall include such an amount to be reserved for deficiencies as may be deemed necessary by the committee. In addition to setting the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year, including a reserve for deficiencies, the committee may also recommend that public revenues or the public debt be increased or decreased as the case may be; and such recommendations shall be reported to Congress and referred to its appropriate committees by February 15. After the legislative budget shall have been reported, all bills authorizing appropriations reported by legislative committees shall be referred to the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget which shall render a report within 15 days to Congress showing the estimated cost of such legislation and the effect of that cost on the legislative budget.

"(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to employ such experts and such clerical and other assistants and to fix their compensation without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. At least one-third of any staff so employed shall be nominated and appointed by, and assigned to assist the minority party.

"(d) The committee is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies of the Government.

"(e) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay the expenses of the committee, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate upon vouchers signed by the chairman."

SEC. 2. Commencing with the second session of the Eighty-first Congress, all appropriations for each fiscal year shall be consolidated in one general appropriation bill to be known as the "Consolidated General Appropriation Act of " (the blank to be filled in with the appropriate fiscal year). The consolidated general appropriation bill may be divided into separate titles, each title corresponding so far as practicable to the respective regular general appropriation bills heretofore enacted, but the aggregate total to be appropriated for expenditure in such year, including any amount reserved for deficiencies, shall approximate the maximum total recommended by the legislative budget committee. As used in this paragraph the term "appropriations" shall not include deficiency or supplemental appropriations, appropriations under Private Acts of Congress, or rescissions of appropriations.

(a) The consolidated general appropriation bill for each fiscal year, and each deficiency and supplemental general appropriation bill containing appropriations available for obligation during such fiscal year, shall contain provisions limiting the net amount to be obligated during such fiscal year in the case of each appropriation made therein which is available for obligation beyond the close of such fiscal year. Such consolidated general appropriation bill shall also contain provisions limiting the net amounts to be obligated during such fiscal year from all other prior appropriations which are available for obligation beyond the close of such fiscal year. Each such general appropriation bill shall also contain a provision that the limitations required by this paragraph shall not be construed to prohibit the incurring of an obligation in the form of a contract within the respective amounts appropriated or otherwise authorized by law, if such contract does not provide for the delivery of property or the rendition of services during such fiscal year in excess of the applicable limitations on obligations. The foregoing provisions of this paragraph shall not be applicable to appropriations made specifically for the payment of claims certified by the Comptroller General of the United States and of judgments, to amounts appropriated under Private Acts of Congress, to appropriations for the payment of interest on the public debt, or to revolving funds or appropriations thereto.

(b) The committee reports accompanying each consolidated general appropriation bill, and any conference report thereon, shall show in tabular form, for information purposes, by items and totals—

(1) the amount of each appropriation, including estimates of amounts becoming available in the fiscal year under permanent appropriations;

(2) estimates of the amounts to be transferred between such appropriations;

(3) estimates of the net amount to be expended in such fiscal year from each appropriation referred to in clause (1);

(4) estimates of the net amount to be expended in such fiscal year from the balances of prior appropriations;

(5) the totals of the amounts referred to in clauses (3) and (4); and

(6) estimates of the total amount which will be available for expenditure subsequent to the close of such fiscal year from the appropriations referred to in clause (1).

The committee reports accompanying each deficiency and supplemental appropriation bill containing appropriations available for obligation or expenditure during such fiscal year, and each appropriation rescission bill, and any conference report on any such bill, shall include appropriate cumulative revisions of such tabulations.

(c) The committee reports accompanying each consolidated general appropriation bill, and any conference report thereon, shall show in tabular form, for information purposes, for each wholly owned Government corporation or other agency of the Government which is authorized to receive and expend receipts without covering such receipts into the Treasury of the United States and which uses a checking account maintained with the Treasurer of the United States for that purpose (A) the estimated expenditures (other than retirement of borrowing) to be made out of such checking account for the fiscal year, (B) the estimated receipts (other than borrowing) to be deposited in such checking account for such fiscal year, and (C) the difference between (A) and (B).

(d) The provisions of paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) shall not be applicable to appropriations of trust funds or to transactions involving public-debt retirement.

(e) No general appropriation bill shall be received or considered in either House unless the bill and the report accompanying it conforms with this rule.

(f) The Appropriations Committee of the two Houses may hold hearings simultaneously on each general appropriation bill or may hold joint hearings thereon.

Mr. WHERRY. Madam President, without going into any further explanations or going into any more detail respecting the matter, because I want to cooperate with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina and take as little time as possible, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, Report No. 391 of the Eightieth Congress, first session, to accompany Senate Concurrent Resolution 6. The report is very short.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Rules and Administration, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 6) to include all general appropriation bills in one consolidated general appropriation bill, having had the same under consideration, report said concurrent resolution back to the Senate with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and recommend that the concurrent resolution, as amended, do pass.

I. INTRODUCTION

The policy underlying this concurrent resolution is based on a proposal to amend the joint rule of the Senate and House of Representatives contained in section 138 of the Public Law 601 (Reorganization Act of 1946) in order to accomplish the following broad objectives:

1. The simplification and clarification of Federal appropriation bills.

2. To enable the Congress to comply more favorably with the clear requirement of section 138 of Public Law 601.

3. To enable the legislative branch of the Government to extend the legislative control on expenditures to the executive branch by means of more appropriate statutory limitations.

As originally introduced, Senate Concurrent Resolution 6 would have—

1. Combined all regular appropriations—which now have to be sought in 12 separate and unrelated bills—into 1 consolidated general appropriation bill, so that the whole appropriation and expenditure picture of the Federal Government could be considered by Congress, and seen at one time by the public.

2. Fixed direct control over annual expenditures against the appropriations which are made, more nearly to comply with the intent of section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (Public Law 601).

During the hearings on the concurrent resolution it was developed that the desirable results of the first purpose of the resolution are numerous and obvious. The undesirable possibilities connected with the first objective were found to be as follows:

1. Length of time required by the Appropriations Committees and the respective Houses in consideration of a consolidated bill.

2. Necessity for the President to veto a bill containing all appropriations in the event he disapproved of one or more items.

With respect to the first point, the committee believes that with the customary cooperation between the two Houses and their respective committees, the time requirement can be met.

With respect to the second point, the difference in desirability of the item veto for use in connection with a consolidated bill and for its use in connection with 12 bills is a matter of degree. In view of the controversial viewpoints with respect to the constitutionality of the item veto, the committee believes that the subject of the item veto should not be introduced at this time in the consideration of this concurrent resolution, as amended, particularly in view of the fact that fewer vetoes of appropriation bills may be expected since Congress has tightened up the rules prohibiting substantive legislation in appropriation bills.

With respect to the second objective of the resolution, the fiscal agencies of the Government—the Treasury, Bureau of the Budget, and General Accounting Office—testified that—

"The existing Federal bookkeeping and accounting procedures are not adaptable to control of expenditures on the basis of cash withdrawals from the Treasury without difficulty and additional expense to the Government."

On the basis of this contention, the committee requested the sponsors of the resolution, with the assistance of representatives of the fiscal agencies, to work out changes in the resolution which would bring its requirements within the scope of existing Government fiscal procedures for execution in the executive branch.

This was done in the form of the amendment in the nature of a substitute which was drafted with the assistance of representatives of the Treasury, the Bureau of the Budget, the General Accounting Office, and the Senate Legislative Counsel.

II. PRINCIPAL PURPOSES

In general the concurrent resolution, as amended, provides for three principal broad purposes:

1. Consolidation of all general appropriation measures into one general consolidated appropriation bill.

2. Statutory limitations on obligations against appropriations, which would have the effect of controlling expenditures and keeping them within the revenue.

3. Show by means of an informative table in the reports of the respective Appropriations Committees and Conference Committees on Appropriations an itemized estimate of annual expenditures.

III. ANALYSIS

1. The amended concurrent resolution is in the nature of an amendment to the joint rule of the Senate and House of Representatives—relating to the legislative budget—as contained in section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

2. The concurrent resolution, as amended, will be effective with the beginning of the second session of the Eightieth Congress, next January.

3. The first principal purpose of the concurrent resolution, as amended, is to provide for the consolidation of all appropriations in one general appropriation bill to be known as the Consolidated General Appropriation Act.

Under the terms of the concurrent resolution, as amended, the consolidated general appropriation bill may be divided into separate titles, each corresponding to one of the 12 regular general appropriation bills as heretofore enacted, and would permit consideration of the consolidated bill by titles, at the subcommittee stage, without interruption of the present subcommittee organization of the respective Appropriations Committees.

4. Nothing in the concurrent resolution, as amended, would preclude necessary deficiency and supplemental appropriation bills in addition to the consolidated bill, but a reduction in the number of such bills probably will result.

5. The concurrent resolution, as amended, in addition to the consolidated appropriation bill, supplemental and deficiency bills, provides specifically for private act appropriations bills and for appropriation rescission bills.

6. The second principal purpose of the concurrent resolution, as amended, is to fix within the general consolidated appropriation bill, supplemental and deficiency bills, limitation on funds available for obligation during the ensuing fiscal year with respect to all appropriations which are available for more than 1 year. The language in the concurrent resolution, as amended, to accomplish this purpose has been worked out with the assistance of representatives of the Treasury, the Bureau of the Budget, and the General Accounting Office who have testified affirmatively as to the feasibility of the proposal.

7. In connection with these limitations on obligations, the committee invites attention to the fact that the limiations are not to be—

(a) Construed to prohibit entering into over-all contracts which would extend beyond the year, providing the contracts do not allow for delivery of property or services during the ensuing fiscal year in excess of the limitation on obligations for the year.

(b) Applicable to appropriations made specifically for payment of claims certified by the Comptroller General.

(c) Applicable to appropriations for payment of judgments.

(d) Applicable to amounts appropriated under private acts of Congress.

(e) Applicable to appropriations for payment of interest on the public debt.

(f) Applicable to revolving funds or appropriations thereto.

All of the foregoing exemptions are included in the concurrent resolution, as amended, at the suggestion of the representatives from the fiscal agencies, on the grounds that they are required in the interest of administrative efficiency, or for the elimination of unnecessary bookkeeping.

8. The third principal purpose of the concurrent resolution, as amended, is to provide the Congress and the public with accessible information on annual expenditures by the Federal Government. This is accomplished by the provisions in the concurrent resolution, as amended, requiring reports from the respective Appropriations Committees and conference committees on appropriations bills to include an informative table itemizing available appropriations and estimating annual expenditures from the appropriation items with totals in each case.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

A similar table will be required showing Government corporations' checking account transactions.

9. Both the provisions for limitations on obligations referred to in paragraph 6 above and for informative tables on expenditures referred to in paragraph 8 above exclude public-debt retirement transactions and trust funds because trust funds do not represent Federal funds, and debt retirement is paid largely out of surplus revenue.

Mr. HAYDEN. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. This is the difficulty I encounter respecting the proposal made by the Senator from Nebraska. Basically, what the legislative budget was supposed to do was to attempt to fix a limit on all appropriations at the beginning of a session of Congress. The Senator from Nebraska now proposes to get at it in another way, but when it is approached in that way, the finding of the proposed committee would not be binding on the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate. They can report out whatever appropriations they please.

Let me present to the Senate an idea suggested to the Committee on Appropriations the other day by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON]. I am sure that his idea is worthy of study. Within 60 days after all March tax returns the Congress will have a better understanding of how much money we can expect to come in to the Treasury from income and excess profits taxes. An intelligent estimate can be made at that time as to what the prospective revenues of the Government will finally be. Congress will know when it has completed action on all the appropriation bills—and it cannot know until the bills have been passed by both the House and the Senate and have been signed by the President—how much money has been appropriated. Only then will Congress know the actual amount appropriated.

If the amount of money appropriated by Congress is greater than the receipts, there is one remedy, and that is to make rescissions of appropriations to the extent that the budget is unbalanced. That can be done intelligently, because Congress will know with much greater accuracy as to what is required to balance the budget.

To set up a duplicate budget agency—its work in a sense will be a duplication of the work done by the President's budget—is a desirable thing if there is not a large but an able staff, which can make accurate use of the information it receives.

But again, after the information is assembled in December or January so that Congress may adopt a budget early in the session, that legislative budget will still not be binding upon either the House Committee on Appropriations or the Senate Committee on Appropriations. It will represent simply some nice fatherly advice as to what the Appropriations Committees should do, but they do not have to do it.

The Senator from Oregon has suggested that Congress as a whole can take the sum of all of the appropriation bills that have been passed and become law, and compare that sum with the amount of money previously taken into the Treasury that spring by way of revenue, and then pass a rescission bill. Congress can pass an intelligent rescission bill much better than it can attempt to handle the matter in the way the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] suggests.

I think the idea, originally expressed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is worthy of serious consideration.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his observation. He has been a member of and worked on the Committee on Rules and Administration much longer than I have.

I know there are objections to our proposal. Every State in the Union, however, does what we propose to have done by the concurrent resolution. We can do it here. It is simply a question of providing the machinery.

Madam President, I again thank the distinguished majority leader for saying upon the floor that the one thing we need more than anything else is this guide which we now do not have. If the machinery proposed by the concurrent resolution is set up, we can iron out many of the difficulties the Senator from Arizona has mentioned.

Mr. GEORGE. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wanted to say, particularly in answer to the question raised by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] that the President in his budget does estimate the income for the following fiscal year, and that estimate is based upon December figures, as, of course, corrected until the budget is actually submitted.

Under the January 17 budget it was estimated that the income of the Government for the next fiscal year, fiscal 1950, would amount to $40,985,000,000. At the same time estimated expenditures were fixed at $41,858,000,000, or a deficit on the face of those two figures of $873,000,000. But I wish to make this statement: The Treasury does not, as a general rule, make an estimate after the December estimate, until late July or possibly August of each year. In August I am sure the Treasury will make another estimate of income. Then we can tell pretty well what the income is.

Under our budget system, and under our taxing system, we cannot have an exact forecast in January for the following fiscal year, for the reason that the corporate taxes are based upon the previous calendar year's business or previous fiscal year's business. In other words, the March 15 returns do not show what the corporate taxes are, and do not give an opportunity to forecast those taxes within themselves, because there could be included in that return nothing but the previous calendar year or the fiscal year of the corporation.

We are on a pay-as-you-go basis so far as individual incomes are concerned. That is, generally speaking, we pay as we go. Under the deduction system in force now a fair estimate can be made of income for the next fiscal year, with this important qualification, that if the income is declining because of a decline in national income, we simply have to guess at it.

I said that the Treasury makes an estimate ordinarily in August. The Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has a very capable staff. Generally that committee makes an estimate both of expenditures and of receipts, but after all it is not an official estimate. It is simply a congressional estimate made through this agency of the Congress; that is, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

I thought I should make this statement because under our budgeting system it practically is impossible to forecast what our receipts will be for the fiscal year next after the making of that forecast. After the beginning of the fiscal year and when two full quarters have passed, or a half a year, with payment of corporate taxes permitting some actual basis for estimate, a more accurate estimate and forecast can be made.

That is the situation in which we find ourselves. With individual taxes based upon current income and corporate taxes based upon a calendar or fiscal-year basis, we simply cannot get an exact picture. In order that we may more clearly understand it, let me say that, broadly speaking, one-half the entire revenues of the Government comes from taxes paid by individual taxpayers. Approximately one-fourth comes from corporation taxes, and about one-fourth from excise taxes. I am using only round figures. They are not exact, but, broadly speaking, we have individuals paying one-half of the receipts, corporations paying about one-fourth, and excise taxes accounting for about one-fourth.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Madam President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me at this point so that I may ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to ask the able chairman of the Finance Committee whether he has the estimates made by the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. He mentioned the fact that some figures had been prepared, which he pointed out were not official; but unless I missed it he did not give those figures. I am interested in knowing whether any late figures are available.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not give those figures for a reason which seemed to me to be sufficient. I shall frankly state it to the Senate.

The Joint Committee staff has made an estimate. The Joint Committee itself met with the staff during the past week, but the full committee was not present, and it was deemed inadvisable to release the staff estimate until we could have the Joint Committee present. As the Senator will recall, the Joint Committee consists of six Members of the House and six Members of the Senate, divided equally as between the parties. When the committee again meets it probably will release the estimate. However, I cannot be too strong in my statement that it will be simply an estimate made by our own committee staff. That estimate is subject to change. It may change rapidly or it may not change. Generally speaking, the Treasury estimate of receipts has always been a bit low, because the Treasury must necessarily be on the conservative side. In this particular year I do not think anyone can say that the Treasury estimate is low.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Madam President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me so that I may ask the Senator from Georgia a further question?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Because of the information which the Senator has furnished, I can fully understand why he did not want to release the figures of the Joint Committee until the committee itself had an opportunity to meet.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the information which came over the United Press printer, which gives the Government expenses and receipts for the current fiscal year, through May 9, compared with a year ago. I shall place the exact figures in the RECORD. I read only the round figures.

Government expenses for the current fiscal year through May 9, this year are $30,456,000,000, compared with $28,369,000,000 last year; receipts, $31,981,000,000 this year, compared with $35,799,000,000 last year; surplus, $1,523,000,000 this year, compared with $7,430,000,000 last year; Treasury cash balance, $3,436,000,000 this year compared with $4,521,000,000 last year; public debt, $251,591,000,000 this year compared with $252,113,000,000 last year; gold reserve $24,334,000,000 this year compared with $23,224,000,000 last year.

I ask unanimous consent that the press report be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. The figures may be very helpful.

Mr. WHERRY. They are very helpful, and I thank the Senator.

There being no objection, the press report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Government expenses and receipts for the current fiscal year through May 9, compared with a year ago

	This year	Last year
Expenses	$30,456,429,953.27	$28,369,681,625.87
Receipts	31,980,111,930.54	35,799,817,028.76
Surplus	1,523,671,977.27	7,430,135,402.89
Cash balance	3,436,783,642.46	4,521,175,151.58
Public debt	251,591,133,570.83	252,113,356,103.61
Gold reserve	24,334,633,152.14	23,224,519,498.19

Mr. FERGUSON. Madam President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me so that I may ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Michigan for the purpose of asking the Senator from Georgia a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to answer if I can.

Mr. FERGUSON. On Friday of last week the Senator from Michigan inserted in the RECORD similar figures as of March 4. As I understand, yesterday the Commerce Department issued a release with respect to income as of March 15. Has the Senator any information on that subject? The report indicated that the income for March was much lower.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no official information on the subject, unless it has been received in the committee since Saturday. I have been kept away from the Senate for a couple of days.

Mr. FERGUSON. So the Senator is not using any figures that came from the Commerce Department?

Mr. GEORGE. Not at all. However, I saw those figures. As I understand, the Commerce Department figures are based upon an estimate of the first quarter individual receipts as compared with the last quarter of 1948. The figures show a decline of between $2,000,000,000 and $3,000,000,000.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. No further estimate has been submitted by the Treasury to the Committee on Finance, and I wished to explain that that was not at all unusual, but was rather following the usual course, because the Treasury does not make up its estimate until after the lapse of two quarters in the year.

Mr. LUCAS. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Apropos of what the distinguished Senator from Georgia has said, I wholeheartedly agree with him with respect to the necessity of the Treasury Department waiting perhaps until August—at least, the second quarter—before attempting to speculate with anything approaching accuracy as to the total amount of revenue that will come into the Treasury of the United States.

However, that in no wise takes away from the point made by the Senator from Nebraska a moment ago with respect to an able, competent, and adequate staff to begin as soon as possible to study the question of expenditures, so that when the Treasury makes the final estimate the staff will have at their finger tips, for the benefit of the Appropriations Committees or other committees of Congress, the total amount of expenditures which it is believed are necessary and the total amount which might be saved, in contrast to the budget laid down by the President of the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the majority leader for his observation. That is one of the reasons why we offered the concurrent resolution.

Anticipating the very observations made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, those of us who have studied this question felt that receipts from individual income taxes quarterly would be more or less constant, fluctuating with earnings, and that the corporate taxes would be coming in about the first of August. The resolution provides that the committee shall be established at the beginning of the fiscal year, some time in the month of July, so that not only will they be able to do as the majority leader has suggested relative to formulating policies with respect to expenditures, but in order that they may be on hand to study what information they can get relative to receipts, as was so ably outlined by the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

Mr. AIKEN. Madam President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask the distinguished Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance whether, in estimating the costs of Government, the President includes the anticipated losses of the Commodity Credit Corporation, which this year will undoubtedly amount to several hundred million dollars.

Mr. GEORGE. Usually an item for that purpose is carried in the budget, but I do not believe that in this budget there is a large item for anticipated losses of any of the Federal corporations such as the Commodity Credit Corporation. The President's budget is not what we might ordinarily understand as a cash-budget system. That makes it very confusing. There is an item in the budget, may I say to the Senator, that is carried for that purpose, as indicating losses by Federal corporations, including the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Georgia, who is chairman of the Finance Committee, believes, I am sure, that the losses of Government corporations should be carried as Government expenditures. When the time comes that their capital has to be renewed or their borrowing power has to be extended, should not a direct appropriation be made by the Congress for that purpose, rather than to resort to the practice, which has prevailed in some years, of authorizing the corporation to borrow from the Treasury, and then simply passing a joint resolution canceling the notes given to the Treasury, so that the expenditure never appears as an expenditure of Government in any appropriation bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Madam President, I think I am prepared to say to the Senator from Vermont that I agree in principle with him, and I am also prepared to say that under our budgeting system there is hardly any way to find out what the Federal corporations are actually doing.

Mr. AIKEN. Otherwise we might have a balanced budget and still have an increased national debt.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite true.

Mr. WHERRY. Madam President, unless some other Senator wishes to ask me a question, I shall yield the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Madam President, I should like to ask the distinguished minority leader whether there is to be further discussion of the pending measure.

Mr. WHERRY. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. I ask that question for the reason that several Senators who now are absent have asked me to suggest the absence of a quorum before a vote is taken on this measure.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the Senator from Vermont wishes to speak for about 2 minutes.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] wishes to ask a question. Therefore, I shall yield first to him, and thereafter to the Senator from Vermont.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to have several minutes in my own time.

Mr. MAYBANK. Very well. Of course I did not desire to suggest the absence of a quorum until we were about to vote.

Mr. CAIN. Madam President, I should like to ask several questions of the able Senator from South Carolina who is managing the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill here on the floor.

In the Coast Guard section of the committee report, on page 4, the statement is made:

> The committee also disapproved the sum of $3,500,000 to initiate a training program for Reserve personnel of the Coast Guard. This item was submitted in supplemental estimates, Senate Document 25.

I should like to say to the distinguished Senator that because of the importance of the intended Coast Guard activities and because of the expected large-scale interest in the subject, I think the record would benefit materially if the Senator from South Carolina would offer some explanations in regard to the deleting of the item from the bill, as the committee has reported it to the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall be glad to do so, and it will not take long.

Of course, the Senator from Washington has correctly stated the action in regard to the Coast Guard items. I may say that in the committee we disregarded the item of $3,500,000 for initiating a training program for the Coast Guard Reserve, for the reason that the estimate for that purpose was a supplemental estimate. The Bureau of the Budget did not approve and submit any estimate for the Coast Guard Reserve, when the Coast Guard items were being considered by the House committee. Representatives of the Coast Guard did not testify on that matter before the House committee, as will be noted by referring to page 11 of the House committee report, where the following language appears:

> Coast Guard Reserve: The budget estimate contained no provision for activities of the Coast Guard Reserve. The subject was discussed at length by the committee and it was ascertained that plans are now under way to encourage activities on the part of Reserve personnel of the Coast Guard. The committee is sympathetic with the establishment of a Coast Guard Reserve program to enable the service to hold the interest of those who served during the war and are now in civilian life.

I may say here that I am in thorough sympathy with the statement of the committee in the report. In my judgment, the Coast Guard Reserve is to be given the same consideration as the Army Reserve or the Air Force Reserve or the Navy Reserve. Nevertheless, the Coast Guard Reserve submitted no program. It had nothing to present to the House committee, so finally the House committee concluded its report as follows:

> It is understood that budget estimates are now being considered for instituting this program and the committee will give the subject most serious consideration when the matter is formally submitted.

That is the report of the House committee to the House of Representatives.

Of course there was then no time for representatives of the Coast Guard to appear before the committee, because the hearings had already been completed.

The Senate committee voted to increase the appropriations in the amount of $3,708,000, for two items, namely, pay and allowances and general expenses. The committee took that action in order to retain the military strength of the Coast Guard and also to authorize ocean weather stations.

However, inasmuch as there had been no hearings on the Coast Guard Reserve and inasmuch as no budget estimate had been provided, we were fearful that if we went ahead on that item simply on our own, such action on our part might endanger the taking of favorable action by the Congress on the items for pay and allowances and general expenses, including the item for the ocean weather stations.

Mr. CAIN. Madam President, I am grateful to the Senator from South Carolina for his explanation.

Inasmuch as the problem of what to do regarding the Coast Guard Reserve is certain to be before the Congress at a future date, I wonder whether the Senator will define the primary function and mission of the Coast Guard Reserve, as laid down in legislation which has been passed by the Congress and approved by the President.

Mr. MAYBANK. I shall be very glad to do so.

However, first I should like to have printed at this point in the RECORD a memorandum about this matter which I sent to several Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the memorandum will be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The memorandum is as follows:

MAY 5, 1949.

MEMORANDUM TO SENATOR JOHNSON OF TEXAS ON SUBJECT OF COAST GUARD RESERVE TRAINING PROGRAM

Supplemental estimate, Senate Document 25, requested an appropriation of $3,500,000 to initiate a training program for Reserve personnel of the Coast Guard. The statutory authority for the Coast Guard Reserve and the Reserve training program is contained in the act of February 19, 1941 (14 U. S. C. 301, et seq.).

The Senate Committee on Appropriations considered the above-mentioned request during its hearing on the 1950 Treasury-Post Office bill, H. R. 3083, and in its report No. 310 to the Senate on April 29, 1949, stated the following:

"The committee also disapproved the sum of $3,500,000 to initiate a training program for Reserve personnel of the Coast Guard. This item was submitted in supplemental estimate, Senate Document 25."

The House Committee on Appropriations did not consider the 1950 estimate for Reserve training as the item was not before their committee during its consideration of the regular bill. However, their report (No. 168), submitted with the 1950 bill, made the following comment:

"Coast Guard Reserve: The budget estimate contained no provision for activities of the Coast Guard Reserve. The subject was discussed at length by the committee and it was ascertained that plans are now under way to encourage activities on the part of Reserve personnel of the Coast Guard. The committee is sympathetic with the establishment of a Coast Guard Reserve program to enable the service to hold the interest of those who served during the war and are now in civilian life.

"It is understood that budget estimates are now considered for instituting this program and the committee will give the subject most serious consideration when the matter is formally submitted."

Mr. MAYBANK. Madam President, the question the Senator from Washington has asked me can be answered by referring to the side slips on the hearings of the Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on the Treasury-Post Office Appropriation bill, at page 77. At that point the following appears:

BASIC MISSION

The basic purpose of the Coast Guard Reserve training program is to have ready for immediate action a nucleus reserve of 2,469 officers and 26,645 enlisted men to perform the following functions:

BASIC RESERVE PERSONNEL REQUIREMENTS BY FUNCTIONS

Type of duty:

1. Port security: COTP, beach patrol, harbor master units.
2. Vessel augmentation: Cutters (ocean station), patrol craft (inshore and offshore), icebreakers.
3. HF/DF.
4. Merchant marine.
5. Aids to navigation: Visual aids, loran.
6. Search and rescue: Aviation, small surface craft.
7. Communications.
8. Administrative.

Port security comprises the enforcement of safety regulations for the protection of waterfront facilities and vessels in harbors; the prevention, detection and fighting of fires in harbor areas; supervising or handling and storage of explosives and other dangerous cargoes; implementing pertinent sections of the Espionage Act; controlling the movement and anchoring of vessels in harbors; boarding and examining vessels entering United States ports; controlling the entry of personnel to harbor areas through the issue and examination of identification cards. For these purposes, the Coast Guard proposes to organize reserve personnel into three types of units:

1. A captain of the port unit will be established in 1950 for each harbor in the United States, beginning with major harbors, such as Boston, New York, Norfolk, Seattle, and San Francisco.
2. Harbor master units will be established for operation at overseas areas.
3. Beach patrol units will be set up for the prevention of illegal landings, the enforcement of "black-out" and other similar wartime restrictions, and for the rescue of and aid to shipwrecked personnel along the United States coast.

Augmentation of vessel complements: A national emergency will immediately place an additional work load on the Coast Guard's ocean station vessels, patrol craft, and ice breakers. These vessels will be required to be under way most of the time; will have to maintain double the number of men on watch; and, will have to man electronic detection and ordnance equipment full time to carry out their missions.

High-frequency direction-finding stations: These stations which are now in an inactive status will have to be manned immediately in order to detect, identify, and evaluate high-frequency radio signals, so as to locate distressed vessels and aircraft promptly.

Marine inspection: This function includes the inspection of merchant vessels for materiel standards, such as boilers, hull, lifeboats, rafts, fire-fighting equipment, and similar safety devices, and the establishment of load line limits. An emergency will increase the Coast Guard's work load in respect to the larger number of merchant vessels. This function also includes the conduct of examinations for licensing merchant marine officers and for certification of merchant seamen.

In addition to the reserve personnel which must be trained to augment the merchant-marine inspection staffs in the United States, the Coast Guard must organize "hearing units" to conduct "on the spot" investigation of merchant marine disciplinary cases and license examinations at overseas ports where American shipping will be concentrated.

Search and rescue: Wartime requirements for search and rescue will impose a much heavier work load in locating vessels, aircraft, and personnel in need of assistance and in rendering the assistance. Reserve personnel must be provided for additional Coast Guard aircraft and small rescue craft.

Communication: Since a war or similar emergency will generate a large work-load increase for communication facilities, in respect to the volume of transmissions and the maintenance of security reserve personnel must be ready to meet this requirement immediately.

Administrative: The reserve organization must provide personnel for the establishment and maintenance of personnel records and pay accounts, and for the administration of personnel in respect to military morale, welfare, and medical assistance. In addition, personnel must be provided for transportation services, and supply, legal advice, and public information. Finally, to provide a nucleus for further expansion, reserve personnel must be trained and available to man additional training facilities.

Mr. CAIN. Madam President, I should like to ask the Senator if it is a fact that the Coast Guard Reserve is the only agency of our Government which is charged with responsibility for port security, encompassing all the ports under the jurisdiction of our Government.

Mr. MAYBANK. To the best of my knowledge, the Senator from Washington is entirely correct.

Again I wish to say that I am as distressed about the Coast Guard Reserve's having no program at all as is the Senator from Washington. I do not wish to place on any particular person the blame for that situation, because I do not know the facts. But I know that the representatives of the Coast Guard did not go to the Bureau of the Budget or to the House committee with a request for the inclusion of items for that purpose in the appropriation bills; and I know that in the closing hours of the handling of the bill by the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee—as a matter of fact, I think the Senator from Arizona will confirm my statement that it was on the last day when the subcommittee was handling the bill—representatives of the Coast Guard came to us——

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. But then it was too late.

Many Members of the Senate have spoken or written to me about this item. It is a subject of deep concern to many of us, I may say.

Mr. CAIN. I wish to say that the Senator from Washington is fully conscious of the consideration given to the item by the Appropriations Committee. But I do feel that it is most helpful to indicate to others who are interested how it came about that a most necessary activity is not being implemented, I do not say through dereliction, but because of a certain procedure that did not result in properly presenting the matter in its entirety before the committees of the House.

Mr. MAYBANK. And before the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. CAIN. Certainly. With the Senator's indulgence and permission, I have several other brief questions. Perhaps the Senator will agree with me that in a security sense, we as a Nation ought to be conscious of the fact that until we actually activate the Coast Guard Reserve, we shall be without an agency responsible for properly securing the ports of America.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is eminently correct. I can well remember the wonderful work the Coast Guard did at the beginning of World War II, not only in looking after the ports but all the bridges adjacent to the ports, and all travel in and out of the ports.

Mr. CAIN. If the Senator will yield further, I have two more questions. I think it was in the Eightieth Congress that a bill known as Public Law 810 was passed. If my understanding is correct, the bill provides retirement benefits and privileges from members of the Air, Navy, Army, and Coast Guard Reserves.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is eminently correct. I happen to have had the particular good fortune of being on the Armed Services Committee at that time with the chairman, the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and I was a member of the subcommittee that handled the bill and brought it to the floor.

I desire to place in the RECORD at this point a brief statement entitled "Retirement Rights for Reservists," appearing at page 81 of a memorandum on amendments submitted to House bill 3083.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be placed in the RECORD, as follows:

RETIREMENT RIGHTS FOR RESERVISTS

This is still another phase of the Reserve problem, which cannot be overlooked. Last year the Congress passed a bill known as Public Law 810, which establishes certain retirement rights for members of all Reserve components, provided such members meet annually certain training requirements.

The bill was designed, of course, for the other armed services as an incentive to Reserve members to train regularly. The members of the Coast Guard Reserve come under the provisions of this law and unless we are prepared to provide this training the Coast Guard is unable to meet the responsibilities charged to it by Public Law 810. This is not fair to the members of the Coast Guard Reserve who joined during the war and would now like to continue their affiliation on a basis that is comparable with that of personnel who joined other Reserve components.

The Reserve training program contemplated by the Coast Guard has been designed to utilize Naval Reserve training facilities wherever practicable. The estimates before this committee will, if approved, provide funds for the Coast Guard to establish an active Reserve organization trained for the functions that the Coast Guard will be called upon to discharge immediately should an emergency arise and which in no way duplicates those of any other armed service.

The importance of a Reserve component to the Coast Guard and to the national defense cannot be too strongly urged. It is, therefore, requested that the amount of $3,500,000 be appropriated to initiate the program.

Mr. CAIN. I would point out to the Senator from South Carolina that it seems seriously ironic that without any bad intention on the part of anybody we are providing privileges and benefits and opportunity to Reserve officers and enlisted personnel in the Army, Navy, and Air Force Reserve.

Mr. MAYBANK. And also the marines.

Mr. CAIN. And the marines, likewise; while at the same time, until the Naval Reserve Corps is activated, we are absolutely prohibiting its membership from taking advantage of the terms laid down by Public Law 810.

Mr. MAYBANK. I cannot differ with the Senator from Washington. I may only say the plans were not before the committee at the proper time. I may as well be frank with the Senator. From the testimony I heard, I did not think the plans which were presented at that time were sufficient, even when they came to us on the last day. I think we ought to obtain complete and thorough plans and have them approved by the budget, to be limited to what the budget may be forced to limit them, and to go before the House, either on a supplemental or deficiency bill, have a day in court, and then take the matter up before a Senate committee. If I can help in some small way as a member of the subcommittee, I shall be glad to do so, but at the time referred to there was nothing that either the chairman or any other member of the committee could do that we thought would be upheld by the House, and that would not cause conflict with respect to the legislation.

Mr. CAIN. I am thoroughly and completely in accord with the explanation given by the able Senator. The Senator from South Carolina has answered fully and clearly the last question I had in mind, which was simply going to be, would it not be proper, because of the importance of the program and the security of America, for the Coast Guard Reservists, under the jurisdiction of their naval and Treasury Department leadership, to again present their proposal at the next opportunity as a deficiency or supplemental appropriation, in full knowledge that there would be no lack of willingness on the part of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate thoroughly to examine the merits of the problem.

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, I cannot speak for the Senate committee as to what the appropriations may or may not be, but I do know that every member of our subcommittee and every member of the full Committee on Appropriations of the Senate certainly wanted to know the problems of the Coast Guard, and were very much disappointed that they did not have an over-all picture as to the cost and the value from a defense standpoint, and the other worthwhile things the Coast Guard has so ably carried on for many years.

Mr. CAIN. In expressing my appreciation to the Senator from South Carolina for the fullness of his answers, I may say that from my point of view the advice he has just given to the Navy Department——

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, the Coast Guard comes under the Treasury, as the Senator knows.

Mr. CAIN. Yes, and to the Coast Guard leadership, is both sensible and reasonable, and a guide to Senators, and they will not lose heart as a result of the unfortunate oversight, but will continue their efforts until activation has actually come about.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. AIKEN rose.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I understood, the Senator from Vermont desired me to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. AIKEN. No; I merely want to speak briefly.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understood that, but does the Senator desire me to suggest the absence of a quorum at this time?

Mr. AIKEN. I can complete what I have to say before we have a quorum call.

Although I agree that the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan on behalf of himself and the Senator from New Hampshire, has a very worthy objective, and although I agree that probably from 5 to 10 percent of the Government expenditures could be eliminated, with the full cooperation of the executive branch of the Government, yet I do not feel that the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from New Hampshire would accomplish its objective, if we delegate to the executive branch or to any department of that branch of the Government authority to cut the appropriations or to fix the appropriations in any way. We should profit from past experience and realize that the departments to whom we delegate such authority and give such instructions are likely to cut the appropriations in such a manner as most to embarrass the Congress. That has been done. There is no reason to believe it would not be done again.

I feel that one of our greatest troubles in the management of Government today is the fact that we have delegated too much authority and responsibility to the executive branch. The executive branch has been quick to accept any authority delegated to it, but it has not been so eager to assume responsibility for the things that go wrong. In fact, since I have been in the Senate, that branch of the Government has lost no opportunity to place the blame upon the Congress so far as possible for things that have gone wrong through the folly or negligence of the executive branch.

In approving the amendment, we are simply inviting a recurrence of that situation. If it is determined that we can no longer maintain appropriations at the level requested by the departments, and that a cut must be made somewhere, then that cut should be made by the Congress itself. Authority for making cuts should not be delegated to any branch of the executive departments.

If we determine that a reduction should be made, the bill should be recommitted to our own Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to make such reduction. I assume the committee would confer with the particular branch of the executive department concerned and arrive at its conclusions after such conference had been held. I think that is the proper way to handle the situation. I do not think we would achieve our objective or enhance the cause of good government by simply instructing the executive branch of the Government to make the reductions where it sees fit. I am quite sure the latter course would react against us in the long run.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] for himself and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] to suspend the rule to make a certain amendment in order.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hoey	Morse
Anderson	Holland	Mundt
Baldwin	Humphrey	Murray
Brewster	Hunt	Myers

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] to suspend the rules. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the question being voted on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote is on the motion to suspend the rules to make in order the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the calling of the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] is absent on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] are absent on official business.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is absent because of illness.

The Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] is paired on this vote with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay," and the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay," and the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Kansas would vote yea."

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this vote the yeas are 37, the nays are 45. Two-thirds of the Senate not having voted in favor of the motion, the motion is rejected.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 49, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That not to exceed ninety-five per centum of the fund provided by any appropriation made by this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, shall be expended or obligated by the department, agency, or corporation to which such appropriation is made."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I offer the amendment on behalf of myself, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California for himself and other Senators.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement after the Senator has spoken on his amendment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the amendment is offered as a limitation in the appropriation bill. The discussion early in the day I think has clearly indicated that with the estimated receipts which the Government of the United States will have available to it, and with the expenditures which are now in prospect, the chances are very strong that we will have a substantial deficit at the end of the next fiscal year, and a very strong possibility of at least $800,000,000 deficit at the end of this fiscal year.

I merely want to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the Federal tax receipts for the year 1943, which was after the United States had gone into World War II, and already had available to it some high revenue taxes growing out of the war, amounted in that year to only some $22,570,000,000. The Federal tax receipts went up considerably from that period of time, but I think that any prudent person must recognize the fact that if there is a falling off of the over-all business income and personal income in the Nation it is not at all impossible that the Federal revenues would not only decrease by perhaps $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000, but might plunge downward considerably below that figure.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to ask the Senator from California if his amendment would affect every item in the bill by 5 percent

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to ask the Senator from California if he believes we can cut every item in the Post Office Department 5 percent, when the record shows that the expenditures of the Post Office Department have been increased because of raises in salaries, and so forth, and so on, last year, and other legislation which was passed affecting the Post Office Department, in view of which the Department practically admits that it will operate at a deficit of $409,000,000 unless postal rates are raised.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I misunderstood the Senator's question. It will affect each department, agency, or corporation the over-all amount allotted to each department, agency, or corporation. They cannot expend or obligate more than 95 percent of the amount provided in the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is what I understood the Senator to say. I simply cannot understand why an attempt is made to cut the Post Office 5 percent on all its items, when, by Public Law 900 postal salaries were raised $220,000,000, and when the Post Office Department, frank and honest, as it always is with the American public, states in its report that as the situation now is the Department is going to operate under a deficiency of $409,000,000. If a cut of 5 percent is made by the Senator's amendment that will mean the Department will have that much more of a deficit. Am I wrong in that statement?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the able Senator who is in charge of the bill that it was my privilege to serve as a member of the Appropriations Committee for 2 years. I have yet to find a Government department or agency which comes forward and shows where it can make a reduction below the budget estimate. As a matter of fact, 2 years ago, and also a year ago, bureau representatives came before the subcommittee of which I was privileged to be the chairman. Later in my office several of them said, "Senator, we know that your committee is going to make a reduction. In our judgment a reduction can be made. But word has been passed down through the various agencies of the Government that they must stand on the budget estimates as submitted by the Director of the Budget and the President of the United States. Now," they said to me, "Senator, providing you will not disclose our identity we can show you where reductions can be made in the budget that will not be harmful to our particular agency."

Mr. President, I admit that the problem of cutting expenditures is a very difficult one. But it is no more difficult than the problem which is faced by the American people in having to dig up taxes to support their Federal Government, to support their State governments, and to support their local governments.

Mr. President, we are rapidly coming to the jumping-off place. The Senate, as a responsible body, which I believe the Senate of the United States to be, is faced with two alternatives. We can either find ourselves in a position where we will not have sufficient revenues to balance the budget, in which case we can levy new taxes, and that is a considerable responsibility when the levying of new taxes may tend to undermine business confidence in this country. Or we can go on another spree of deficit financing, and if we do that we may jeopardize the solvency of the Federal Government itself.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator has suggested that we might increase taxes. True, we might increase the rates, but I suggest that in a declining economy that may not mean an increase in revenue.

Mr. KNOWLAND. To the contrary, it may mean a decrease in revenue. I quite agree with the able Senator from Colorado, former chairman of the Finance Committee. There have been a number of instances in the country's history when an increase in tax rates has actually resulted in a decrease in revenue, and other instances when a decrease in the tax rate has actually resulted in an increase in the Federal revenue.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, that we are faced with a problem, and under our responsibilities as Senators of the United States we had better begin now with the first of the major appropriation bills that will come to a vote on the floor of the Senate, to make what is a modest reduction in the over-all cost.

I want to repeat to the Senate that in the appropriation bills which have passed the House of Representatives up to this time—and if my information is correct, all the major supply bills have now passed the House of Representatives are some $4,200,000,000 more than the same bills carried last year. There has to be an end to such procedure. In the interest of a solvent Federal Government and a sound national economy we have to bring and keep our budget in balance, and it is certainly not too much to ask that these Government departments cooperate to the extent of making a 5-percent reduction.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask the Senator for an interpretation of the fashion in which his amendment will operate. Does it mean to apply a 95 percent overall limitation to the total appropriation, or is it an automatic 95 percent limitation on each individual item?

Mr. KNOWLAND. No, it is meant to apply a 95 percent limitation to the overall funds allotted to the Departments, agencies and corporations concerned.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So that the same option remains in the management of say that from my point of view the advice he has just given to the Navy Department——

Mr. MAYBANK. Of course, the Coast Guard comes under the Treasury, as the Senator knows.

Mr. CAIN. Yes, and to the Coast Guard leadership, is both sensible and reasonable, and a guide to Senators, and they will not lose heart as a result of the unfortunate oversight, but will continue their efforts until activation has actually come about.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. AIKEN rose.

Mr. MAYBANK. As I understood, the Senator from Vermont desired me to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. AIKEN. No; I merely want to speak briefly.

Mr. MAYBANK. I understood that, but does the Senator desire me to suggest the absence of a quorum at this time?

Mr. AIKEN. I can complete what I have to say before we have a quorum call.

Although I agree that the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan on behalf of himself and the Senator from New Hampshire, has a very worthy objective, and although I agree that probably from 5 to 10 percent of the Government expenditures could be eliminated, with the full cooperation of the executive branch of the Government, yet I do not feel that the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from New Hampshire would accomplish its objective, if we delegate to the executive branch or to any department of that branch of the Government authority to cut the appropriations or to fix the appropriations in any way. We should profit from past experience and realize that the departments to whom we delegate such authority and give such instructions are likely to cut the appropriations in such a manner as most to embarrass the Congress. That has been done. There is no reason to believe it would not be done again.

I feel that one of our greatest troubles in the management of Government today is the fact that we have delegated too much authority and responsibility to the executive branch. The executive branch has been quick to accept any authority delegated to it, but it has not been so eager to assume responsibility for the things that go wrong. In fact, since I have been in the Senate, that branch of the Government has lost no opportunity to place the blame upon the Congress so far as possible for things that have gone wrong through the folly or negligence of the executive branch.

In approving the amendment, we are simply inviting a recurrence of that situation. If it is determined that we can no longer maintain appropriations at the level requested by the departments, and that a cut must be made somewhere, then that cut should be made by the Congress itself. Authority for making cuts should not be delegated to any branch of the executive departments.

If we determine that a reduction should be made, the bill should be recommitted to our own Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to make such reduction. I assume the committee would confer with the particular branch of the executive department concerned and arrive at its conclusions after such conference had been held. I think that is the proper way to handle the situation. I do not think we would achieve our objective or enhance the cause of good government by simply instructing the executive branch of the Government to make the reductions where it sees fit. I am quite sure the latter course would react against us in the long run.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] for himself and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] to suspend the rule to make a certain amendment in order.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hoey	Morse
Anderson	Holland	Mundt
Baldwin	Humphrey	Murray
Brewster	Hunt	Myers
Bricker	Ives	Neely
Bridges	Jenner	O'Conor
Butler	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] to suspend the rules. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the question being voted on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote is on the motion to suspend the rules to make in order the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the calling of the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] is absent on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] are absent on official business.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is absent because of illness.

The Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] is paired on this vote with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay," and the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay," and the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Kansas would vote yea."

If present and voting, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who is absent because of illness, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], who is absent by leave of the Senate, are paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is necessarily absent, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], who is absent by leave of the Senate, are paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] is detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] would vote "yea."

The result was—yeas 37, nays 45, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this vote the yeas are 37, the nays are 45. Two-thirds of the Senate not having voted in favor of the motion, the motion is rejected.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 49, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That not to exceed ninety-five per centum of the fund provided by any appropriation made by this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, shall be expended or obligated by the department, agency, or corporation to which such appropriation is made."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I offer the amendment on behalf of myself, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California for himself and other Senators.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement after the Senator has spoken on his amendment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the amendment is offered as a limitation in the appropriation bill. The discussion early in the day I think has clearly indicated that with the estimated receipts which the Government of the United States will have available to it, and with the expenditures which are now in prospect, the chances are very strong that we will have a substantial deficit at the end of the next fiscal year, and a very strong possibility of at least $800,000,000 deficit at the end of this fiscal year.

I merely want to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the Federal tax receipts for the year 1943, which was after the United States had gone into World War II, and already had available to it some high revenue taxes growing out of the war, amounted in that year to only some $22,570,000,000. The Federal tax receipts went up considerably from that period of time, but I think that any prudent person must recognize the fact that if there is a falling off of the over-all business income and personal income in the Nation it is not at all impossible that the Federal revenues would not only decrease by perhaps $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000, but might plunge downward considerably below that figure.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to ask the Senator from California if his amendment would affect every item in the bill by 5 percent

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to ask the Senator from California if he believes we can cut every item in the Post Office Department 5 percent, when the record shows that the expenditures of the Post Office Department have been increased because of raises in salaries, and so forth, and so on, last year, and other legislation which was passed affecting the Post Office Department, in view of which the Department practically admits that it will operate at a deficit of $409,000,000 unless postal rates are raised.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I misunderstood the Senator's question. It will affect each department, agency, or corporation the over-all amount allotted to each department, agency, or corporation. They cannot expend or obligate more than 95 percent of the amount provided in the bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is what I understood the Senator to say. I simply cannot understand why an attempt is made to cut the Post Office 5 percent on all its items, when, by Public Law 900 postal salaries were raised $220,000,000, and when the Post Office Department, frank and honest, as it always is with the American public, states in its report that as the situation now is the Department is going to operate under a deficiency of $409,000,000. If a cut of 5 percent is made by the Senator's amendment that will mean the Department will have that much more of a deficit. Am I wrong in that statement?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the able Senator who is in charge of the bill that it was my privilege to serve as a member of the Appropriations Committee for 2 years. I have yet to find a Government department or agency which comes forward and shows where it can make a reduction below the budget estimate. As a matter of fact, 2 years ago, and also a year ago, bureau representatives came before the subcommittee of which I was privileged to be the chairman. Later in my office several of them said, "Senator, we know that your committee is going to make a reduction. In our judgment a reduction can be made. But word has been passed down through the various agencies of the Government that they must stand on the budget estimates as submitted by the Director of the Budget and the President of the United States. Now," they said to me, "Senator, providing you will not disclose our identity we can show you where reductions can be made in the budget that will not be harmful to our particular agency."

Mr. President, I admit that the problem of cutting expenditures is a very difficult one. But it is no more difficult than the problem which is faced by the American people in having to dig up taxes to support their Federal Government, to support their State governments, and to support their local governments.

Mr. President, we are rapidly coming to the jumping-off place. The Senate, as a responsible body, which I believe the Senate of the United States to be, is faced with two alternatives. We can either find ourselves in a position where we will not have sufficient revenues to balance the budget, in which case we can levy new taxes, and that is a considerable responsibility when the levying of new taxes may tend to undermine business confidence in this country. Or we can go on another spree of deficit financing, and if we do that we may jeopardize the solvency of the Federal Government itself.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator has suggested that we might increase taxes. True, we might increase the rates, but I suggest that in a declining economy that may not mean an increase in revenue.

Mr. KNOWLAND. To the contrary, it may mean a decrease in revenue. I quite agree with the able Senator from Colorado, former chairman of the Finance Committee. There have been a number of instances in the country's history when an increase in tax rates has actually resulted in a decrease in revenue, and other instances when a decrease in the tax rate has actually resulted in an increase in the Federal revenue.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, that we are faced with a problem, and under our responsibilities as Senators of the United States we had better begin now with the first of the major appropriation bills that will come to a vote on the floor of the Senate, to make what is a modest reduction in the over-all cost.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask the Senator for an interpretation of the fashion in which his amendment will operate. Does it mean to apply a 95 percent overall limitation to the total appropriation, or is it an automatic 95 percent limitation on each individual item?

Mr. KNOWLAND. No, it is meant to apply a 95 percent limitation to the overall funds allotted to the Departments, agencies and corporations concerned.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So that the same option remains in the management of the agency to exercise its own best judgment in making this housekeeping reduction?

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is the judgment of the junior Senator from California, and the intention under the amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. But the amendment does not include the limitation that the head of an agency may not make a greater reduction than 20 percent in any division.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from California that I am thoroughly in sympathy with his desire to effect economies. With respect to these two particular agencies, I was a member of the subcommittee. I examined them very carefully. I did not see how we could cut the Post Office Department, when it is estimated that even with the funds allowed them in the bill, they will still have a deficit. I did not see how we could cut the Treasury Department on the evidence which was before us, without taking something away from our strategic stockpiling program, and reducing the number of new internal revenue agents.

The Senator refers to supply bills which have passed the House, carrying appropriations of $4,000,000,000 more than the budget of last year. I remind him that there are three deficiency bills, totaling more than $2,000,000,000, which we must add to what was appropriated last year, before we finish the current fiscal year.

Mr. KNOWLAND. We also had deficiency bills a year ago, which were included in the year-to-year comparison.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I desire to inquire with reference to the legal effect of the amendment in case it should be adopted. My inquiry is somewhat along the line of that made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The Senator from California answered the Senator from Michigan by saying that it was his purpose in offering the amendment to make it applicable to the single total appropriation to the Post Office Department, and the single gross total appropriation to the Treasury Department. However, I invite the Senator's attention to the language of the amendment, and then I shall make my inquiry. The proviso is as follows:

Provided further, That not to exceed 95 percent of the funds provided by any appropriation made by this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, shall be expended or obligated by the department, agency, or corporation to which such appropriation is made.

The language is "the funds provided by any appropriation made by this act." The mechanics of making the appropriation raise the question which is bothering me. For example, on page 26 of the bill, under the heading "Retired pay" is a sum appropriated to provide retired pay for commissioned officers, enlisted personnel, and other members of the former Life Saving Service. That amount, whatever it may be, is a fixed amount. The Government owes it to those people as retirement pay under appropriate law. Unfortunately, the figure of $13,134,000 stands out as an individual, separate appropriation for a specific purpose. I cannot understand how the reduction can be made on an over-all basis, and at the same time not apply to this item, which is an appropriation in the bill. If there is a way to do it, I am in sympathy with the approach that is made. While I shall vote against the Senator's amendment with reference to this bill—and I shall discuss that question in a moment—I am in sympathy not only with the approach that is made, but with the thing sought to be done. With reference to any but straight service appropriations, such as this one is, I think I shall go along time after time with the attempt to do what is suggested. I cannot do it here. Frankly, in this instance I do not see how it could be done. Can the Senator enlighten me as to the modus operandi?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the able Senator from Oregon that it was the intent of the junior Senator from California to provide by this means that the department head, the agency head, or the Government corporation head, should have his funds limited so that he could neither expend nor obligate the funds provided in the bill to an extent greater than 95 percent of the total amount of the appropriation. As a practical matter, I believe that the department head would of necessity have to apply such a reduction pretty generally throughout his entire department. So to that extent I agree with the Senator from Oregon that as a practical matter, the department head or the agency head would very likely have to go through the department and make reductions which, in the aggregate, would amount to 5 percent of the various items in the bill.

Mr. CORDON. Then, as I understand, it is the Senator's view with respect to this item—and I take this item because I want a concrete example—or any item such as the retired pay item, which we may assume for the purpose of this argument to be fixed by statute, that 5 percent of that amount would have to be taken from some other item or items in the bill.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I believe that would have to be done in order to follow out the congressional intent. In other words, the total allocation of funds for the particular department could not exceed 95 percent of the amount appropriated.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the report on this bill, the amount reported to the Senate is $3,113,068,503.93. If the Senator's amendment should prevail, it would mean that the various agencies in the Treasury and Post Office Departments, the Export-Import Bank, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, would be required to dispose in some manner of practically $150,000,000 in the rearrangement for the entire agency, so far as the functioning of that particular agency is concerned. Am I correct?

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, instead of the Congress of the United States saying how the $150,000,000 reduction should be applied, it is proposed to delegate the authority to three or four individuals who head those agencies to deal with the $150,000,000.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Within the over-all limitation which the Congress establishes.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that. Even with that statement, we cannot get away from the fact that the Congress is giving to a few men at the head of the various agencies the over-all power to deal with $150,000,000 as they see fit. In other words, they would have the full discretionary power to eliminate the $150,000,000 in any way they might think would be to the best interest of the agency, and we would have no check whatsoever over that action.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the able Senator from Illinois that so far as the junior Senator from California is concerned, if it can lead to some economy in the Federal Government, the junior Senator from California, within the total amounts allowed by the Congress—which, after all, fundamentally holds the purse strings—is perfectly willing to give additional power to the executive branch for the purpose of effecting some economies. Unless we are willing to do that, I do not see how we are ever going to bring the Government within due bounds.

At the present time I believe that many responsible Members of the Congress feel that we have almost started a chain reaction, in which expenditures of the Federal Government are getting out of hand. Unless we can have a cooperative attitude as between the Congress and the executive departments, so that both branches of the Government will be looking for at least some modest economy in the Federal Government, it seems to me that we are opening up a Pandora's box. We may find a bankrupt Government on our hands.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not altogether disagree with my able friend from California. The only point I rise to make is the one which I have already made, and I repeat it. The Congress of the United States would be delegating a vast amount of authority, it seems to me. In other words, instead of our own committees and staffs of experts determining where the $150,000,000 reduction should be made, we would delegate to one individual, or three or four individuals, the sole power and authority to deal with the $150,000,000. That is a tremendous power; but the Senator from California says he does not care, so long as $150,000,000 is saved.

But the Senator from Illinois does care, for this reason: I should hate to see some prejudicial person—and I am afraid that persons of that sort are to be found in almost any of the departments of the Government—cripple important phases of activity in one or more of the departments, as a result of the power which such a person might have if he could control the expenditure of $150,000,000. For instance, it might be that some important function of the Post Office Department would be crippled, and, instead, another agency of the Government might be permitted to mushroom or expand beyond all reason.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Illinois, I say that of course it was the hope of those who offered the amendment which was voted on just prior to the offering of this one that any drastic reduction would be avoided in any segment of the budget by limiting the reductions to be made to between 5 percent and 20 percent. But the Senate turned down that amendment, by refusing to suspend the rule.

Now we are trying to reach this problem in another way. I should have preferred the other method, which is close to us. However, as Grover Cleveland once said, we have a condition, not a theory, confronting us. Mr. President, is the Senate going to recognize that fact before the adjournment is taken on July 31, or whenever it may be taken? Are we going to vote new taxes, or are we going to take the position that we are not concerned about deficit financing? Certainly we shall have to make a choice as between them. Instead of waiting until all the appropriation bills have been passed, when it will be too late to take action of the sort we now propose, we are trying to bring this matter forcibly to the attention of the Senate and the Nation, so that a modest reduction can be made at this time.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. CORDON. With respect to the argument which may be made that the amendment would place too much power in the hands of any one of the departments, since the amendment would give the power to make a 5-percent reduction in Government expenditures, I should like to call attention to the fact that under the Accounting Act of 1921, the Chief Executive may refuse to spend any of the money provided by appropriation bills, if he wishes to do so. The fact that the appropriation has been made does not carry with it any mandate to spend the money.

As I have said, I shall vote against the Senator's amendment——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California yielded for a question; not for a statement.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon was asking me whether I knew that what he referred to was correct. I say I do know it is correct, and as the able Senator from Oregon knows, that power was used just a few years ago to completely suspend operations in certain flood-control and reclamation projects throughout the country. So, Mr. President, despite the fact that the Congress appropriated the money, one man—namely, the President of the United States—on his own authority suspended the operations which had been clearly outlined under the expression of congressional intent.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. CORDON. May I say to the Senator that in my own time, and taking such time as may be necessary, I shall endeavor to cover the matters which I believe could have been more clearly covered by permitting at this time a short statement to be made or a little colloquy to be had with the Senator from California.

Mr. O'MAHONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. Has the Senator from California yielded the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has, and the Chair has recognized the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks about the pending amendment. I rise because I happen to be chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee to which has been assigned the task of passing upon the appropriation bill for the independent offices.

I feel that an amendment of this kind is merely an invitation to the members of the subcommittee to disregard their responsibilities. That fact is illustrated very clearly, I think, by the bill now before the Senate.

In the first place, the amendment the junior Senator from California has offered provides, in very simple language, that—

> Not to exceed 95 percent of the funds provided by any appropriation made by this act * * * shall be expended.

There is a direct and explicit order that every appropriation item in this bill shall be cut by 5 percent.

The Senator from California says that was not his intent. Certainly I respect his statement. He says he intended only to require and to direct that the head of every department affected cut the appropriation for his department 5 percent, and exercise his discretion in that connection. However, that is not the mandate which the Senator has now asked the Senate to make. The amendment would require that—

> Not to exceed 95 percent of the funds provided by any appropriation made by this act * * * shall be expended.

Mr. President, it happens that there are—I have inquired of the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill—some 59 items of appropriation in the portion of the bill which refers to the Post Office Department. Of those 59 items, the Senate Committee on Appropriations felt that the amounts provided by the House of Representatives for 30 of them were too low. So the Senate Appropriations Committee, having met in official session and having listened to the evidence of witnesses, recommended to this body that 30 of the 59 appropriation items be increased in amount. Some of those items have been increased in amount more than 5 percent; some, less than 5 percent; and every one of those recommendations was formally approved by the Senate on this floor.

So the proposal now before us is not only that we shall reverse the action of the Appropriations Committee, which I think was diligent in its consideration of this bill, but also that we shall reverse the action which we ourselves already have taken upon this floor.

There can be no doubt that that is the effect of the proposal; and I should like to give one or two illustrations to make clear precisely what would happen if the amendment were adopted.

I turn at random to page 31 of the bill. There, under the heading "Office of the Chief Inspector," we find, in line 11, an item of appropriation for the personal services of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions and 800 inspectors. This is the appropriation which will make it possible for the postal inspectors of the Post Office Department to inspect the operations of the Post Office Department throughout the country. Having served in the Post Office Department as First Assistant Postmaster General, I know how important it is in the public interest that the postal inspectors shall carry on their work.

When the House of Representatives considered this item, it agreed to an appropriation of $4,750,000 to pay for the personal services of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions and 800 inspectors. Your committee, having listened to evidence on these matters, came to the conclusion that that appropriation would be too low, and it voted to increase the appropriation to $4,810,000. That is to say, it added $60,000 to the appropriation. Now it is proposed to take off 5 percent, not only of what the Committee on Appropriations recommended, but of the item which the Senate itself approved. So we are asked to turn around and go back. If we take 5 percent off $4,810,000, we shall be taking off considerably more than the increase which the Senate has allowed. I happen to know that, unless this item is very different from every other item in the bill, the amounts allowed by the Bureau of the Budget were less than the sums which were requested by the Post Office Department.

One would think, listening to the debate, that nobody charged with responsibility was doing anything to cut the expenses of the Federal Government. That is not true. The record is plain. When the departments and agencies submitted their requests to the Bureau of the Budget, they asked for sums much larger than those which were allowed by the Budget. That evidence was brought out this morning before the Subcommittee on Independent Offices, when the Federal Communications Commission was there. In response to my inquiry as to how much the Commission had requested from the Bureau of the Budget, I learned, and the record now is there, that the Bureau of the Budget cut the estimate for the Federal Communications Commission far below that which the Commission felt was necessary in order to enable it to carry on its operations, to meet the public demand. That is the case all through the Government agencies. The President pared the appropriations in the first instance, and then when bills went before the House committee, the House committee on every single bill cut the appropriation below the Budget; or so I am informed. That certainly was the case with respect to appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, was it not, I ask the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. The appropriations for the Treasury Department and for the Post Office Department, as recommended by the subcommittee and by the full committee, are less than the amounts approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So, Mr. President, we have the clear record that the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate itself have cut the appropriations below the sums recommended by the Budget Bureau, which had previously recommended appropriations below those which the Government agencies and departments desired to have.

So the record is clear. This is not a case of wasteful spending. It is a case of the careful scrutiny of civilian appropriations, first by the President and the Bureau of the Budget, then by the Committee on Appropriations in the House, and now, by the Appropriations Committee in the Senate. I know from my experience, from my knowledge of the members of the committee, from my knowledge of the distinguished and able Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that the greatest care is taken to prevent excessive appropriations. The Senator from Tennessee has established a reputation in this country and in this body over a large number of years, and his reputation is one of holding expenditures down.

It is easy enough to broadcast charges that Federal funds are being wasted. The fact is they are not being wasted. The fact is that the increased expenditures which are being undertaken at this time are due to the fact that the United States finds itself in a position of world leadership, increased expenditures for the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the United States Air Force, and increased expenditures to carry on our international peace program. Those are the expenditures which are raising the outlay of the Federal Government beyond the estimated revenues, and not the performance of the civilian departments and agencies of the Government.

The Treasury Department and the Post Office Department are particularly good examples of Government agencies which bring in revenue, which serve the people. The Treasury Department is increasing the revenue which the Government may obtain to balance its budget, by collections of taxes. Leave the 5-percent across-the-board reduction, Mr. President, and we would cut down the ability of the Department of the Treasury and of the Bureau of Internal Revenue to collect the money owing to the Government, with which it can hope to balance the budget. Reduce the appropriations for the Post Office Department 5 percent, and we cut down the service the people of the United States can get from the Post Office Department.

Just a few days ago I had occasion to make inquiry of the Post Office Department with respect to the patronage of the postal system. I discovered from a comparison of the postal receipts in the 12 largest cities of the United States for the first 3 months of this year, with the receipts for the first 3 months of last year, that postal receipts are approximately $15,000,000 more than they were a year ago. I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the comparison between the first 3 months of 1948 and the first 3 months of 1949 for these 12 cities be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

	First 3 months of—
	1948	1949
New York	$36,343,690	$41,424,000
Chicago	24,166,381	27,224,000
Philadelphia	8,364,191	9,382,367
Los Angeles	7,456,902	8,333,055
Washington	4,181,615	4,752,242
Boston	6,844,433	7,666,596
Detroit	5,746,592	6,324,345
St. Louis	4,869,408	5,677,088
San Francisco	4,554,642	5,684,600
Brooklyn	4,741,720	5,151,283
Cleveland	4,252,110	4,814,883
Kansas City	3,751,367	4,591,890
Total	115,271,207	131,223,038

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Postal receipts are increasing because the people of the United States are calling upon the Post Office Department for service. Just glance through the appropriation bill. Here are clerks in the inspection service. The appropriation which came from the House for that service was $1,325,000. The Senate has increased it to $1,333,000. If we now impose a 5-percent cut upon that item, Mr. President, we are saying, "We repudiate not only our own judgment when we approved the amendment, but we are repudiating also the judgment of the subcommittee which recommended the increase, and the judgment of the full committee which approved it."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not also true that in addition to the various items having been worked on for months and approved by the Bureau of the Budget, they then went to the House committee, which heard evidence and considered the items in detail, and when the bill came to the Senate the committee took it up item by item, and heard the testimony of innumerable witnesses. I have forgotten how many there were on this bill, but on one of the appropriation bills I think we heard more than 200 witnesses. The Appropriations Committee has gone over it with the most meticulous care. After that is done, after all the work of the Bureau of the Budget, of the House committee, and of the subcommittee and of the Senate Appropriations Committee, it is proposed to throw it away, and a guess is made that there should be a reduction of 5 percent on all items, irrespective of their merits, irrespective of the needs of the various departments; thereby virtually destroying the Appropriations Committees of both the House and the Senate?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is a repudiation of the work of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to conclude, if the Senator will permit me. I shall then yield the floor to him. There are involved in the bill so many items that we could take all afternoon discussing them; but I do not think that is necessary. I should like, however, to have the Members of the Senate realize what would happen in the Post Office Department. Here is an item of $15,000,000 for the personal services of assistant postmasters at first- and second-class offices throughout the country—$15,000,000. It was not increased by the subcommittee; it was not increased by the full committee. It is now before the Senate exactly as passed by the House, but with the suggestion of a 5-percent reduction in the amount. Mr. President, I know, and every other Senator who is in touch with the postal service in his own State knows, that the assistant postmasters throughout the United States are not adequately compensated for the services which they have been rendering.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to ask the able Senator from Wyoming if he is familiar with the testimony which was presented to the Armed Services Committee of the Senate not only by former President Hoover, who estimated that approximately from $1,500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 would be saved in the National Defense Establishment by eliminating duplications and overlappings, but also by former Secretary of the Army, Mr. Royall, who in his testimony before the same committee estimated that upward of $1,000,000,000 could have been saved each year for the past several years if duplications and overlappings had been eliminated in the National Defense Establishment.

In view of that testimony, I should like to ask the able Senator from Wyoming if he believes that in the current budget of from $42,000,000,000 to $45,000,000,000 which is before the Congress of the United States, it is not possible to make some reductions.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have no doubt it is possible to make some reductions, but I say it is impossible to make a sane reduction in the manner which is proposed by the Senator from California.

I am very happy that he made reference to the report of former President Hoover. I invite the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that President Truman appointed former President Hoover to do that job, and he is backing him up. He has repeatedly called upon the Congress to give him the authority which former President Hoover recommends, to reorganize the executive branch of the Government for the purpose of eliminating overlapping in order to reduce expenditures. So I say to the Senator from California that when he cites the recommendations of former President Hoover, he is citing also the fact that the President of the United States himself is trying to reduce expenditures.

Let me say with respect to the armed services that the President of the United States recommended the unification of the armed services. Those of us who were serving on either the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs, before unification, are well aware that there were expenditures which could have been and should have been reduced, and it was for that purpose that the President recommended unification. Unification was initiated, but it was a tremendous task. I understand that the Armed Services Committee has been very much impressed by the recommendations of the President and of former President Hoover, and it is now considering, if it has not already acted, submitting a bill to the Senate carrying out most, if not all, of the recommendations made by the Hoover Commission.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have not read all the Hoover Commission's reports. I should like to inquire if any Senator has found in any report a recommendation by the Hoover Commission that there should be a 5-percent cut or a 10-percent cut imposed on any department. I venture to say it cannot be found in any Hoover recommendation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There was no such recommendation. The recommendations go to the fundamentals.

The point I am trying to make is simply that a meat-ax slash of appropriations is an unscientific and unwise method to attempt to follow. If the Senate now wants to reverse itself with respect to these items, the thing to do is to send the bill back to the committee with instructions to revise it. That is the orderly procedure. If it should be done in the manner suggested by the amendment, it would produce more waste, by far, than would be produced if the bill were passed item by item.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to make one observation on the Senator's time.

The bill which was before the Senate last week, known as the Labor Department-Federal Security bill, provided a test of the 5-percent decrease. Being in the hospital at that time, but watching the proceedings here very closely, I discovered—I think I am correct in this statement—that on the floor the Senate increased the heart appropriation, the cancer appropriation, and the venereal disease appropriation approximately $13,490,000. There were sufficient votes to do it, and there was no question about it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I, for one, voted against that increase.

Mr. LUCAS. Senators marched right up the hill and did that. The moment the suggestion of a 5-percent reduction came along, some of the same Senators who supported the increased appropriations for the items which I have mentioned, marched down the hill and supported the amendment to reduce the appropriations 5 percent. It was rather paradoxical. As the Senator so ably stated a moment ago, the Senate passed upon the question, and, in the next breath, did just the opposite and made a meat-ax cut.

In my opinion, no scientific reduction can be made by the head of a department with whom has been lodged the authority for making such reductions. As I said a moment ago in the colloquy with the able Senator from California, it seems to me that the delegation of this type of power to a few bureaucrats, if we want to call them that, or a few leaders in various Government agencies, to do what they please with $150,000,000 is a bad legislative policy to establish, because I venture to say that as a result many individuals will be prejudiced and will lose their rights. If Congress decides to make a reduction of this kind it should have before it all the facts, and it should have the staff to assemble them. Until we have the kind of staff which the able Senator from Nebraska was discussing earlier in the afternoon, the Senate should not do what is attempted to be done at this time—repudiate the Committee on Appropriations by making an arbitrary cut, when none of us can tell just where the cut will be made. If we are going to make such a cut, we might as well make it 10 or 15 percent, or any other amount.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Here is another example, I will say to the Senator from Illinois. It is the appropriation for clerks in the first- and second-class post offices throughout the country. There is not a State in the Union that is not affected by this appropriation. Six hundred and twenty-five million dollars was the amount allowed by the House. The Senate committee felt that amount was too low, because the Post Office Department, by evidence, proved to the satisfaction of the committee that increased appropriations were necessary to carry on that work. The Senate committee recommended that the appropriation be $633,000,000, or an increase of $18,000,000. A 5-percent decrease of $633,000,000 will cut off $31,000,000 from that appropriation for the pay of clerks of first-, second-, and third-class post offices throughout the United States, and it will almost destroy the ability of the post offices to render the service which is necessary under the present increasing demand.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. When the Labor-Federal Security bill was before the Senate the amendments offered on the floor, I believe, by the senior Senator from Florida Mr. [PEPPER], or several Senators, not only added $13,490,000 in cash to the bill, but added $19,375,000, in round figures, for contract authorizations, making a total of $32,865,000 added on the floor of the Senate. As the Senator said a while ago, he voted against that, as I did, and it should have been defeated. Without any facts before us, that addition was made, and no attempt was made to interfere with that. But an attempt was made to send the whole bill back, every item in it, every item the committee had studied with such great care, with instructions that a 5-percent cut be made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator is eminently correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Senator is aware of the fact that the Coast Guard after the war was returned from the Navy to the Treasury, and Congress passed a law authorizing a certain strength for the Coast Guard.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not a fact that the House bill did not provide for the authorized strength of the Coast Guard, and that the committee added only enough to bring the Coast Guard up to the strength Congress had previously authorized? Yet that was a substantial addition to what was in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. The item appears on page 25. The House appropriated $74,500,000 to carry out the law, which is 14 United States Code, page 147, and the Senate committee increased the amount to $77,445,000. A 5-percent cut there will take it below the addition made by the Senate and below the figure of the House.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We provided for 12 or 14 urgently needed new stations, and how could the construction be handled on 95 percent of the appropriation?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I merely wish to say to the Senator from Virginia that the 5-percent cut in the Coast Guard would cause a loss in military personnel of 100 commissioned officers, 11 warrant officers, and 1,110 enlisted men.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not true, Mr. President, that our committee was very sympathetic to the request of the Coast Guard to authorize training for Coast Guard Reserve officers, which was not in the bill as it passed the House, but that we did not dare to provide for that in this bill because we knew that this very fight was coming on, and that we cut the appropriation so as to take care of only the most essential items that should be provided for?

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct.

I wish to make one further short observation. The Treasury Department was cut by the Budget Bureau $17,000,000 and by the Senate committee $51,000,000 below the estimates of the Budget Bureau. The Post Office Department was cut by the Bureau of the Budget $45,000,000 and by the Senate committee, $11,000,000 below the estimates of the Bureau. So the pending bill is below the budget estimates. This issue has been raised on the floor; the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who is present, knows that before the subcommittee considering the Treasury and Post Office Department appropriations no attempt was made, on either side of the aisle, to reduce the expenditures 1 dime. In the full committee, meeting last Friday, I believe it was, or whenever it was, not one member of the committee moved to cut any of the expenditures.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA LIBRARIES

The distinguished Senator from Michigan came in later in the day and suggested that he was going to make a motion for a 5-percent cut. So I took the trouble to write the Secretary of the Treasury, and I took the matter up with the Postmaster General, and the record speaks for itself, for on pages 5955 and 5956 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD it is shown just what would happen if this 5-percent cut were made, because there are many items, as the Senate well knows, which cannot be cut.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. In a moment I shall yield. It would practically eliminate the additional income-tax collectors, making it difficult to get income-tax money owing to the Government. It would seriously impair the Coast Guard strength. In addition to that, it would seriously impair the execution of the Stock-Piling Act, recommended by the Armed Services Committee, which is now in the control of the Treasury Department.

I do not intend to say anything more, but I shall be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he seriously believes that there is any department head who would come before the Committee on Appropriations and recommend substantial reductions below the budget estimates. Does the Senator know of any department where that is likely to happen?

Mr. MAYBANK. I have served on the Committee on Appropriations for many years, except for the 2 years of the Eightieth Congress, and I suggest that the department heads would not come forward and make such a recommendation any more than would the head of a city government or county government or State government, with which I have had some experience. I would not rely upon a department head to tell me about the appropriations. I make it my business to look into these matters, and we cut estimates regardless of what is asked.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I believe the able Senator is familiar with the fact that in 1934 the total expenditures of the Federal Government amounted to $6,745,000,000, and in 1940, the year before the opening of World War II, they amounted to some $9,305,000,000. Does the able Senator from South Carolina think that we can ever cut the budget, which amounts, roughly, to $42,000,000,000, back into some controllable shape, unless either the Senate or the House of Representatives starts now to make some reductions?

Mr. MAYBANK. I have thorough knowledge of what the budget was in 1934, and what it was before the war. I realize that during the war we created a debt of some $265,000,000,000. I realize that 34 cents out of every dollar goes to the national defense, 13 cents, interest on the public debt, 13 cents to veterans' programs, and 16 cents to international problems. I know that the only place where we can cut is in the foreign aid, the Army and Navy, and security. I for one believe there might be some cut, but I would never consent to a cut that would endanger our security at this time. I say to the Senator from California that if he will check the records of the cost of government, and all the newspaper stories we see every day about the increase in our government costs, he will find that the old line agencies of government have decreased in expenditures. Yesterday morning there was reported, through the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the agricultural appropriation bill, handled in the subcommittee presided over by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. In that bill less is appropriated for agriculture than before the war. Am I correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. The old agencies have been cut, of course. We are going to have to balance the budget. I believe in economy. I believe in balancing the budget. I voted for the Taft-Russell amendment to cut foreign aid 10 percent, and I shall vote that way again in the Committee on Appropriations. Certainly some foreign aid, and certainly some other things, can be cut, and there can be some consolidations, as recommended by former President Hoover. But I think it is manifestly unfair to take the Treasury Department or the Post Office Department as the place to attempt to make cuts. Increases have been made in the Post Office Department expenditures since World War II, in salary raises voted for unanimously by all Senators on both sides of the aisle, incorporated in Public Law 900. We are going to give further raises, but where are we going to secure the money to pay for them? We have provided raises in the Post Office Department and in the Treasury Department, we have reclassified the Civil Service, we have voted pensions, and so on and so forth. Certainly we have got to pay those raises and those pensions. There is only one way by which we can finally bring about a cut, and that is to win the cold war, secure the peace, so America may return to its normal way of life; so we will not be obliged to spend great sums of money for stock-piling materials, so we will not be obliged to spend 37 cents out of every dollar on the Army and Navy. As the Senator knows, there is a continuing law which authorizes the Treasury to pay the interest on the Government bonds held by the people of the country. The interest on Government bonds must be paid.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield and then I will not bother him further?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator mentioned the national security and the importance of the European program to the national security. Does the Senator from South Carolina agree with me that unless we can keep a solvent Federal Government, and unless we can keep a sound national economy we will not be able to preserve our national security or we will not be able to continue our foreign-aid program? Therefore is it not incumbent on each one of us to take such action as is necessary to keep a balanced Federal budget?

Mr. MAYBANK. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from California. I go even further than he does. I think the continued soundness of the dollar, the only sound currency in the world today, is a potent weapon in the hands of the people of the United States. If our dollar is kept sound it will mean as much to us as guns and battleships. I do not hesitate to make that statement.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have heard it said, "O Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" It has been my observation since I have been in the Senate that generally great prodigality and profligacy have been practiced under the name of economy. I think the attempt now being made is another illustration of that, although I do not believe that is what is desired by the sponsor of the amendment.

It has already been pointed out that one of the direct effects of the amendment would be—and it has occurred in the past—to cut down the number of agents collecting public revenues when they were collecting three or four times as much as their salaries and their expenses cost the Government of the United States. That is not economy. That is prodigality. That is profligacy, Mr. President, not wisdom.

It has been pointed out here with respect to the Post Office Department that there would be a deficit of over $400,000,000 even if all the funds carried in the bill were appropriated and expended. What economy is accomplished by telling the Post Office Department it must spend 5 percent less than we appropriated without any order to the Department to cut out any services they render? That will mean the Department will simply incur a greater deficit probably than would otherwise exist. That, Mr. President, is not economy and that is not wisdom.

There are some who think we should save public money at the expense of public law. There have always been those who did not see the advantages of flood control and river and harbor improvements and more funds for research, even for the saving of human lives, even when we save more man-days of work and turn out more wealth. That kind of so-called economy is the most extravagant sort of profligacy and waste. I do not stand for that kind of economy either in effect or in design. Of course, I know it is not the design of the able sponsor of the amendment, but I must respectfully submit that the evidence seems to show that that is the inevitable effect of the proposal now before us.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida, where we are going to cut, and at the same time abide by the law, when 80 percent of the appropriations made for the Post Office Department go to personnel, the salaries of which we have regulated by statute? We have told the Post Office Department how much to pay each employee. Then 15 percent goes for travel. How are we going to cut the travel? That leaves only 5 percent in the appropriation for the Post Office Department for all contractual relationships and other matters connected with the operation of the Post Office Department. I should like to know where it is meant to make the cut in the Post Office Department?

It has been very clearly brought out that the Post Office Department will operate under a deficit of $403,000,000. That is the last statement on the subject made by the Post Office Department. The truth of the matter is that if we pass the bill the Post Office Department will come back to Congress for a deficiency appropriation next year, and if we make a cut of 5 percent, as provided by the amendment, it will mean that the Post Office will come back for a greater deficiency appropriation than it otherwise would. Is that not true?

Mr. PEPPER. The Post Office Department will come back again asking for a deficiency appropriation just as it came back this year asking for a deficiency appropriation because of the inadequate appropriations of last year.

Mr. President, I confess that I have grave doubt as to whether the amendment is actually valid. I am not raising a parliamentary question, but I have been advised by the Parliamentarian that this was a novel approach to the problem. Perhaps the able Senator from California has in mind precedents which the Parliamentarian did not immediately recall. But what would be done by the amendment? In the bill we would appropriate the money, and then under the amendment we would tell the Post Office Department that it cannot spend 5 percent of the amount appropriated. If we are going to do such a thing, why not simply cut 5 percent off of what we appropriate? It seems to me that whether the amendment is technically correct or not, in principle it is a legislative invasion of Executive authority. It is the duty of the Executive to see that the laws are properly enforced. If anyone is to give orders to the executive employees it should be the President of the United States, the Chief Executive of the Nation.

Now we appropriate the money to the department, put the money in the hands of the department, and say in all the language of the bill except the very last tail-end of it that "the money is yours," and at the very end it is proposed to insert the very able Senator's amendment, namely:

Provided further, That not to exceed 95 percent of the fund provided by any appropriation made by this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, shall be expended or obligated by the department, agency, or corporation to which such appropriation is made.

So in all the language of the bill we appropriate the money to the department, until we come down to the end of the last paragraph on the last page, just before we quit, where we say what the bill may be called, and then we say "but you cannot spend 5 percent; you cannot obligate yourself to spend 5 percent of it." That seems to me to be a peculiar way to legislate or appropriate.

If the amendment is adopted today, I presume it would be a precedent for the future.

It seems to me that the only way to legislate wisely is to legislate intelligently, knowing what we are doing. If Congress wants to cut out something, well and good. But as the able majority leader has said, in this bill we give the heads of executive agencies, "bureaucrats" in the words of many, an arbitrary authority to cut out $150,000,000 appropriated by the Congress of the United States without saying to them where they shall cut it. If we are going to do such a thing, why not appropriate the whole sum to them and say, "Use this money as wisely as you can. Save as much as you can. Save at least 5 percent. Or save 10 percent." In other words, Congress is abdicating its authority and its duty to legislate by telling the executive heads to save $150,000,000 without laying down any standards or principles as to where it shall be saved.

Mr. President, do we want to cut out, for example, the movement of the mails in flood times? Suppose the Post Office Department were to say, "Very well, we will cut out all money which we would otherwise spend to move the mails in flood times." Does Congress intend that to be done? I think we would be responsible for it if the department were to do so under a carte blanche authority.

I must say I am reminded of the advice given the young lawyer by the old. As will be remembered, Mr. President, the young lawyer asked the old one what to do if he were weak on the facts. "Oh," he said, "son, bear down on the law." The young lawyer said, "Suppose you are weak on the law?" The older lawyer said, "Bear down on the facts." The younger lawyer asked, "Suppose you are weak on both the law and the facts?" The older lawyer replied, "Just flimflam like hell."

The Bureau of the Budget has not been able to find a way to make the reduction which is proposed. Congress has not been able to find a way to do it. Now, with a scatter-gun load in the dark, it is proposed to flimflam, as it were, through the executive heads, cutting here, there, and everywhere that they may arbitrarily determine to cut. It seems to me that it is not wise for Congress to follow such procedure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is proposed that it be done without any evidence, without any real information, but merely upon the basis of a guess that it might be well to cut 5 percent, in utter disregard of the facts which have been produced before the committee. Excluding myself, I will say that the Committee on Appropriations is one of the best committees I have ever known.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me to disagree with him, the error of his assumption lies in the exclusion of himself. Like Abou ben Adhem, he should head the list.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is proposed that the reduction be made without knowing the facts, and without knowing what these four officers of the Government might do. If that is intelligent legislation, I am a very unintelligent man.

Mr. PEPPER. It is legislating in the manner in which certain doctors treat their patients. In every case they give the patient a pill if he feels that he ought to have some medicine.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. The Senator will agree with me, I believe, that the Post Office Department is what might be called a wholly public-service agency. It serves the public in the dissemination of mail and in the delivery of parcel post. Its acts are governed by various laws of Congress regulating the rate of postage on mail, as well as the subsidies to air lines, which the Post Office Department pays, and over which it has no control. Does not the Senator believe that Congress would be more fair with the people and with the Post Office Department if, instead of trying to make a blanket cut, it should honestly say, "Some branch of this service does not pay its way. We are going to be honest with the public and increase the rates for its services in order that it may pay its way." Does not the Senator agree that that would be the honest way to do it, rather than to say, "We are going to cut your service 5 percent"?

Mr. PEPPER. Undoubtedly that is the fair and proper way to legislate.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Following up the statement which the Senator from Florida made a few moments ago, when he said that it was easy merely to prescribe a pill, it is true that in the departments it would be much easier not to take on more employees than it would be to cut them off. That being so, I should like to ask the Senator, after I finish reading a portion of the report, to tell me what he believes might happen in the Treasury Department to this particular item:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

For the fiscal year 1950 the committee recommends an appropriation of $232,768,000, the budget estimate. This amount exceeds the House allowance by $12,268,000. The committee is of the opinion that the 7,019 additional field positions requested be allowed by the committee, 5,787 of which are enforcement officer positions, to enable the Bureau to more effectively ferret out tax evaders which, in turn, will lead to the collection of millions of dollars additional revenue. Testimony indicates that present front-line enforcement officers averaged per person additional revenue of $52,708 for 1946, $73,805 for 1947, $89,271 for 1948, and for the first 7 months of fiscal year 1949 $50,066. It is estimated that by the fiscal year 1951 the additional enforcement personnel provided will collect at least $425,000,000 additional revenue annually.

What would happen to this particular appropriation if the proposed cut were put into effect?

Mr. PEPPER. The able Senator effectively illustrates what I tried first to say, that we are committing prodigality under the guise of economy. Thus far this year those workers have collected in public revenue about $50,000 apiece. I suppose the salary and expenses of those workers will not total much more than $5,000 each. They collected almost $10 for every dollar spent by the Government. That is what I call economy—spending $1 to get $10—especially when it is collected from those who are evading the payment of taxes or defrauding the Government. That is the kind of economy I want to support, because I think it is productive and not wasteful.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. In the light of the figures stated, knowing, as was brought out before the committee, that we have only enough field personnel to check about 2 percent of the income-tax returns, even so far as the correction of additions is concerned, are we not putting a premium on tax evasion?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. Are we not imposing a penalty on the honest taxpayer?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. If we could collect all the taxes due the Government, we could unquestionably increase the total amount of income-tax revenue.

Mr. PEPPER. When it becomes public knowledge that only one out of every several thousand income-tax returns can possibly be checked, of course the people are going to take a chance. That is a better chance than betting on the horses, or at the roulette table, or shooting dice. One has a better chance to win in that sort of a gamble than in any of the gambling games on which the people spend billions of dollars. Why not gamble with the Government, since they know that the so-called economy-minded Members of the Congress are probably going to protect them against having to pay their taxes?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In connection with the question of Federal revenue collection, does not the Senator know that what the agents do, in effect, is to make spot checks in any event? This question was before the Senate Appropriations Committee a year ago, when I was a member of that committee. I joined with the committee in providing additional funds; but at the time the testimony was being taken the Treasury representatives freely admitted that they were probably getting the top-bracket evaders. If we were to double the number of agents, we would not ipso facto double the amount of income of the Federal Government. To make the same argument that is being made by the Senator from Florida, we might as well add four times as many agents, on the theory that we would get four times as much revenue. However, as a practical matter that is not possible. We encounter the law of diminishing returns.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; but we have not nearly reached that point, yet.

Let me say one word in conclusion. I do not wish to delay the Senate longer. There is a trend among our brethren on the other side of the aisle generally—and this example is obviously a part of that trend—toward reducing public expenditures. I wish to hold up one honest finger of warning. The greatest danger facing the country today is a precipitous deflation which would hurt our revenue and our prosperity more than almost anything else we could do. We talk about public confidence, and the delicacy of business confidence. The best way to frighten business is for the Government to take the lead down the dangerous trail of deflation. Let the banks start tightening credit because they are beginning to be afraid. Let every factory, every retailer, every wholesaler, and every jobber start reducing inventories, and what will happen? The effect reaches back to the farm and the factory. It means laying off workers. It means a slowing down of the circulation of our money. It means a decline in employment, in national income, and in the value of the national production. I am far more afraid of that than I am of the detriment which would come to our country as a result of a failure to make such 5-percent cuts. They are symptomatic, Mr. President, of a condition that is really dangerous to the economy and public revenue of our country.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to ask my able friend, the Senator from Florida, whether under the circumstances with which the Government of the United States and the Congress are faced, he favors the $4,000,000,000 of new taxes recommended by the President, or whether he favors having the Government embark upon a deficit-spending program; or, if he does not favor either of them, how would he solve this problem which is facing the Government of the United States?

Mr. PEPPER. I would do exactly what the President of the United States has recommended. I know of nothing before the Congress which would be so much in the public interest as for us to adopt every whit and iota of the program recommended by the President, including all that it would cost. Then if we did not have sufficient revenue for that purpose, we should raise it by taxes levied on a very prosperous national economy, an economy which transcends in its reach every prosperity peak we have ever known before in peacetime.

Mr. President, the most important demand upon the Congress today is to retain the employment of the 60,000,000 persons who are working in our country, to retain the high value of our national products, and to retain the present high level of the national economy.

Again I go back to the basic economic principle that if we keep our high national income where it is, and retain the high productivity of the factories and farms of the United States, we shall be able to pay the $4,000,000,000 of additional taxes a great deal easier than we would be able to pay the taxes now levied, which no one proposes to repeal, from a shrunken national income which we shall inevitably have if we permit the inflationary trend to develop still further.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I ask the Senator whether he believes the Congress should adopt the President's program and should levy the taxes recommended by the President.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In other words, under the theory of the Senator from Florida, the Congress should sign a blank check——

Mr. PEPPER. Oh, no——

Mr. KNOWLAND. And should abdicate its functions——

Mr. PEPPER. Oh, no.

Mr. KNOWLAND. And should say to the President of the United States, "Regardless of what you recommend, regardless of how much of a tax burden you wish to place on the American people, regardless of how much you wish to add to the public debt or to the costs of the Government, we shall give you a blank check, and you can fill it out in whatever amount you think is needed."

Mr. PEPPER. Oh, no; Mr. President, I must insist that my able friend, the Senator from California, has not correctly interpreted what I said.

I said that I think the Congress should adopt the recommendations which have been made by the President. That is what I said. I think the President's recommendations are good. I did not say that we should give the President an arbitrary mandate or authority to exercise capricious power to impose his program upon the Nation. I simply say that, under the Constitution, the President has made recommendations to the Congress; and I believe they are good recommendations, and I believe that the public interest will best be served if the Congress will adopt those recommendations as an affirmative program, including those for the raising of additional revenue, to the extent that that is required in order to carry out the program recommended by the President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from California asked whether Senators would favor having the Congress abdicate its powers and turn them over to the President. Is it not true that under the amendment of the Senator from California, which now is before the Senate, the Congress would abdicate its powers to the extent stated in the amendment, and would turn them over to four officers of the Government who are not even named?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Tennessee is entirely correct.

Yet I wonder how the able sponsor of the amendment would feel if we turned it around, and had it provide that the departments concerned would be given appropriations to the extent of 90 percent of the amounts now carried in the bill, and also would be given an additional $150,000,000, to be distributed in whatever way they might like to have it distributed.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Does not the Senator from Florida agree that the situation as outlined by the able chairman of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], is not in fact an abdication of congressional power, but, to the contrary, constitutes an action of the Congress in setting the outside limitations as to the funds which may be expended? As a matter of fact, in every appropriation we make, do we not do precisely that, because we do not get down to the last detailed figure as to the expenditures which will be made; but they are made within certain bracket limitations, in any event.

As the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] pointed out earlier today, under existing law, the President of the United States alone can suspend the expenditure of any funds under the appropriations which are made by the Congress.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes. But I dare say if the President of the United States were to issue such an order, he would first have been advised by the Bureau of the Budget; he would not simply issue a blanket directive of that sort. I imagine he would first have gone into a thorough examination of whatever he proposed to eliminate.

Mr. President, before I yield the floor, let me say that although the Senators who are members of the Appropriations Committee are more familiar with the appropriation practices than I am, yet, as the Senators who are members of the committee—including the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee—already have pointed out, I am sure the appropriation requests go from the department or agency personnel to the heads of the respective departments or agencies, and then go to the Bureau of the Budget; and then, after the Bureau of the Budget submits its recommendations to the President, and after the President submits them to the Congress, the appropriate spokesmen of the departments or agencies come to the congressional Appropriations Committees, where scrutiny may be had as to any details, or where at least inquiry may be made by the members of the committees. Of course, no such thoroughness is provided by this amendment.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Two questions interest me. One is whether the President sets limits on the budgetary requests which may be made by the various departments, in advance of the preparation and presentation of the appropriation bills.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator mean to inquire whether the Chief Executive does that?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I have no doubt that he does. Of course, the Bureau of the Budget determines whether it will approve the requests which are presented to it by the departments and agencies.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think that point has been discussed with reference to the armed services. I think there is no question that that practice prevails. In that case, an arbitrary limit of $15,000,000,000 was imposed, and the armed forces had to bring their requests within that limitation. Such an approach might be called a meat-ax approach. In other words, an over-all limit is imposed, and the various departments concerned must keep their requests within that limit.

Mr. PEPPER. But of course that is done by the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is correct. However, that development does not initiate at the grass roots. In that case, we do not begin at the grass roots, and inquire as to what is needed. To the contrary, the departments are told that they must limit their requests to certain total amounts; and so the departments and bureaus must cut their cloth accordingly.

That is what I consider to be an approach other than a purely scientific or technical one. It is related to the overall budget, which must have some kind of a top limit.

Mr. PEPPER. But I am sure the able Senator from Maine would not impute to the President a willingness to lay down such a directive or ceiling without previous careful scrutiny of the subject, which even would include a detailed examination of it.

Mr. BREWSTER. I find it very difficult to believe that the Senator is serious in such a suggestion, as even the talents of the President of the United States—and we would all agree he is a very capable man—would not be equal to any such detailed examination.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; but the able Senator will recall the title of a book written by a distinguished member of the press, the President Is Many Men.

Mr. BREWSTER. Right. Now, somebody—and I take it it is the Bureau of the Budget; that is where it should be—makes up the over-all allocations for the various departments. Before I come to the second question I have, let me say that, as I understood, the defense appropriation started at $28,000,000,000, it got down to $22,000,000,000, then $17,000,000,000, and the President finally said, "It cannot be over $15,000,000,000."

Coming to the other question, I wonder whether the Senator is familiar with the method which was employed in the early days of the budget, under President Coolidge, by which we restored financial solvency in the country following World War I.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt, it did not last long. It did not last long after President Coolidge restored it, in that time. I mean it was on the way to an unhappy conclusion.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator from Florida would not call attention to what happened to the Budget after his party took over. But at any rate, during the period following World War I, President Coolidge was then operating the Budget—and I have never heard anybody question his thrift—with General Lord, who was then Director of the Budget, following General Dawes. There was then imposed an arbitrary limit, following the appropriation, in the form of a notification to each department that a 10 percent cut would be required. That was set aside at the start of the fiscal year, and the remainder divided in four equal parts. In any quarter, a department could spend but one-quarter of 90 percent. If a department went over that in any period it had to come before the Budget to justify it.

President Truman made an arbitrary cut of some $2,000,000,000 2 years ago in our defense appropriation following the closing of the Congress and by that means saved a great deal of money.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not see anything basically wrong about that. If the amendment were to provide that only 95 percent of this money shall be spent, unless the President or the Bureau of the Budget can be satisfied that the whole amount is needed, that would not be so bad; but that is not the approach here.

Mr. BREWSTER. What I was about to say was this: I assume President Coolidge, whose reputation for thrift and economy was certainly equal to that of President Truman, both of whom were reared in very modest homes and understood the value of a dollar, followed, in conjunction with General Lord, Director of the Budget Bureau, all the techniques of which the Senator speaks, of setting an over-all limit; and yet it was found then that the only way we could ever curb the burgeoning bureaucracy with which we are now threatened with being inundated, if I mix my metaphors, was by the automatic 10-percent cut, knowing that the bureaus and the departments were the only ones that could effectively and efficiently carry that out, and that they would never do it unless they were compelled.

I gather from what the Senator has said that if the President or the Director of the Budget should impose a cut, he would think it was all right. I suggest the Congress is equally responsible for the appropriations, and I think it should be equally permitted to use this weapon of imposing a restriction such as the Senator from California has, in my judgment, so prudently suggested.

Mr. PEPPER. But, Mr. President, the Senator, able student that he is and careful logician, knows that the Senator from California is not providing that the 5-percent cut may not stand, provided the departments come back later and show the Congress that the 5 percent is needed.

It is laid down as a flat prohibition beyond which the departments cannot obligate themselves.

Mr. BREWSTER. The interesting point is that, in the first place, President Coolidge used a 10-percent cut, and it was by that means that the surpluses were built up, which reduced the public debt by some 30 percent during those immediate years. I should have preferred a 10-percent cut here, or, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] suggested, 15 percent; but the 5 percent is in my judgment a very modest and a very well justified start in the direction of the path that we ultimately must follow.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if a cut is to be made in the dark, I do not see why a cut of 25 percent is not made. That would result in a greater saving of course than a cut of 5 percent.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Holland	Murray
Anderson	Humphrey	Myers
Baldwin	Hunt	Neely
Brewster	Ives	O'Conor
Bricker	Jenner	O'Mahoney
Bridges	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Butler	Johnson, Tex	Reed
Byrd	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson
Cain	Kefauver	Russell
Chapman	Kem	Saltonstall
Connally	Kilgore	Smith, Maine
Cordon	Knowland	Sparkman
Donnell	Langer	Stennis
Downey	Long	Taft
Ecton	Lucas	Taylor
Ellender	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Ferguson	McClellan	Tobey
Flanders	McFarland	Tydings
Fulbright	McGrath	Vandenberg
George	McKellar	Watkins
Gillette	McMahon	Wherry
Green	Magnuson	Wiley
Gurney	Malone	Williams
Hayden	Martin	Withers
Hendrickson	Maybank	Young
Hickenlooper	Millikin
Hoey	Mundt

By order of the Senate, the following announcement is made after each quorum call:

The members of the Committee on Foreign Relations have been granted permission to be absent from the sessions of the Senate while the Committee on Foreign Relations was conducting hearings on the North Atlantic Pact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I desire to perfect my amendment by inserting in the third line, where it reads "not to exceed ninety-five per centum of the funds," the words "aggregate of the"; to strike out, at the end of that line, the word "any" and to add after the word "appropriation" in the next line and the word "appropriation" in the last line an "s" to make it plural rather than singular.

It is a very short amendment, and, with the permission of the Senate, I should like to read it as perfected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is advised that after the yeas and nays have been ordered, the amendment can be modified only by unanimous consent.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to perfect the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator if he knows, as acting minority leader, of any further amendments?

Mr. KNOWLAND. So far as I know, there are no other amendments to be offered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator believe we can get a vote on the bill very soon?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I am very hopeful of it.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from California modifying his amendment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KNOWLAND. My amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 49, line 19, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following: Provided further, That not to exceed 95 percent of the aggregate of the funds provided by appropriations made by this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950 shall be expended or obligated by the department, agency, or corporation to which such appropriations are made."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in not objecting to the Senator perfecting his amendment, I do not want it to be understood that I am not opposed to the original amendment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the junior Senator from California thoroughly understands that the Senator from South Carolina was not accepting my amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. There may be other Senators who might not think so. I hope the amendment, as modified, will be defeated.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators who have just entered the Chamber, I will say that certain questions were raised by the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] when he asked me as to my interpretation of the amendment which I have offered. By the perfection of the amendment, by adding the word "aggregate," it is meant to cover the point to which the able Senator from Michigan referred, so that, at least so far as the author of the amendment is concerned, it is his belief that the new language will make it clear that department heads can work within the aggregate funds, provided they do not expend more than 95 percent of the total appropriation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. In order to make it crystal clear, under title I the 5-percent reduction would come from the total of the Treasury Department of $1,045,184,403.93. Is that correct?

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator is correct. The same thing would apply to title II and also with regard to the other two agencies.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator's amendment provides for an aggregate cut of 5 percent of the total amount; is that correct?

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct.

Mr. AIKEN. That means 5 percent of the funds allowed for internal-revenue payments?

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; 5 percent of the total amount allowed to the department. It would not apply as a mandatory matter to the individual payments, but to the aggregate total allowed to the department, agency, or corporation.

Mr. AIKEN. What is the total amount that would be affected?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the Senator from Michigan gave the figure a moment ago as $1,045,184,403.93.

Mr. FERGUSON. That figure appears at the bottom of page 9 of the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. It does not refer to any repayment or any trust-fund payment or anything of that nature at all, does it?

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from California, as modified, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I shall not delay the vote long. I had occasion to discuss this matter in a brief colloquy with the author of the amendment, and said at that time that I desired to explain the position I find most reluctantly I must take with reference to his amendment.

First, let me say that I am in sympathy with what the amendment seeks to do. I believe the approach, generally, is sound. I believe that if we are ever to bring about reasonable reduction in departmental appropriations, aggregating in each instance as they do, hundreds of millions, and in some instances billions of dollars, we cannot do it other than by a percentage reduction method, and at the same time get the fullest possible value out of the money that is appropriated.

It is humanly impossible, Mr. President, for the Members of the Committee on Appropriations, though they work every day and every night all through the year, to gather the information with reference to specific activities and a reasonable cost of performing them, which is essential in order to make an accurate computation of the amount to be appropriated for each such activity. It simply cannot be done.

The Appropriations Committees of necessity must turn for their information to the departments which are the spending agencies. Those departments are composed of human beings. If they are faithful servants, seeking in good faith to do the thing they are called upon to do, they of necessity become prejudiced in their views in favor of the thing they do, and they seek to do it as well not only as they can do it, but as well as they feel it can be done.

They have had practical experience in attempting to get the funds necessary to do what they have to do. They find they must go first to the President's Bureau of the Budget, an independent agency, so far as they are concerned. Experience has taught them that that Bureau is very apt to cut the amount of their estimate. It is but human nature for them not to cut the estimate before they submit it to the Bureau. They increase it, as you or I would. That is the way it works.

When the estimates finally leave the Bureau of the Budget and come to the Committees on Appropriations, they will again have a careful scrutiny, and the officials of the Bureau know that. They are practical men. Then the Bureau itself, although it is staffed by a great number of specialists who are endeavoring to do a good job, is incapable of covering the whole field. The result is that no one who handles the estimates, save those in the departments themselves, is able to allocate a reduction in amounts in such a way as to do the greatest good, and at the same time not interfere with essential functions. So I say that I believe the percentage reduction approach is sound.

In this instance, Mr. President, I must depart from what I would prefer to do. I would prefer to go along with this kind of an amendment. But I have served on the Subcommittee on Treasury and Post Office Appropriations 3 years and a fraction. For 2 years I served as chairman of the subcommittee itself. During that time our committee, working with such staff as we were able to gather together, some of them very expert men, were able to find places where savings could be effected and were able to realize from the findings brought to us that there were other places where savings could be effected, if there was a will to do it.

Through the work of the Committee on Appropriations studies were initiated by independent agencies to increase efficiency in the Treasury Department, particularly in the Bureau of Customs, and so on. The reports which were made are now being activated, if I may use that term, or put into effect, by the Department itself. It is yet too early to know the extent to which they will be effective. I still am naive enough to believe that there will be some really beneficial results from that work.

In the Treasury Department there are numerous funds over which neither that department nor the Congress, save by substantive law, can have any control whatever. That is true also in the Post Office Department as to certain funds. The post office bill carries, and I believe has always carried, a special provision granting general authority to incur a deficit, if that be necessary in order that the mails be carried.

Because the two departments are service departments, because there has been a constant, sustained, and continuing effort on the part of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe in good faith by both departments, to increase the efficiency and lower the over-all costs of the two departments, I am constrained, much as I regret it, to cast my vote against the amendment, as it applies to these two major service departments of the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], on behalf of himself, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McMAHON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If at liberty to vote I would vote "yea." I, therefore, withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] is absent on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] are absent on official business.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is absent because of illness.

The Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico would vote "nay" and the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea."

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea," and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY]. If present and voting the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay" and the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea."

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea," and the Senator from Idaho would vote "nay."

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Alabama would vote "nay," and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay" and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea."

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON] is paired on this vote with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM]. If present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut would vote "yea" and the Senator from North Carolina would vote "nay."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay," and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART]. If present and voting, the Senator from New York would vote "nay," and the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] is absent by leave of the Senate and is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ]. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness and is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] is absent by leave of the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR]. If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is detained on official business and is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. If present and voting the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] would vote "yea," and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] is detained on official business and is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND]. If present and voting the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] is detained on official business and is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] would vote "nay," and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] would vote "yea."

So Mr. KNOWLAND'S amendment offered on behalf of himself, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. FERGUSON, and Mr. WHERRY, was rejected.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Just as the Chair announced the result of the vote two or three Senators came onto the floor of the Senate and addressed the Chair. Of course, I realize that the announcement had already been made. But is it the opinion of the Chair that the votes of those Senators should be registered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot entertain the vote of a Senator who comes into the Chamber after the result has been announced, or who requests his name to be counted after the announcement has been made as to the result of the vote. That is especially prohibited by the rules.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I now move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back to the Senate with amendments providing for a reduction in the bill, as reported to the Senate, including committee amendments, of a 5 percent reduction of the total amounts, either by specific amendments or by limitations on total amounts to be expended.

Mr. MAYBANK. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida is recognized. The Senator from New Hampshire no longer claims the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. In my own right then, Mr. President, I will say that I should like to know just what is the meaning of the motion. A motion was made the other day by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] which may or may not be similar to the pending motion, which I understand would operate in a way that nobody intended it should at the time the motion was made. In other words, when the Senate passed the Labor-Federal Security bill, and the Ferguson-Bridges amendments failed to prevail, then the Senator from Ohio made a motion to recommit the bill to the Appropriations Committee with what I understood to be instructions to reduce by 5 percent the bill as it passed the Senate.

Later I was informed that the Parliamentarian had held that the parliamentary effect of the motion of the Senator from Ohio was to strip the bill of every amendment added in the Senate, to strip the bill of every amendment added by the committee, in committee, and then cut 5 percent from the House bill. I heard Senator after Senator who voted for the motion say that he never intended any such result. So I think we ought to understand exactly what the legal effect of this motion is. No doubt it will have some bearing upon what was really intended by the Senator from Ohio when he made the motion the other day. That is the reason I thought it proper at this time for the Senate to know upon what it is voting.

Mr. BRIDGES. In answer to the Senator from Florida, if the Senator will listen carefully to the motion which I have made, it will clarify the situation. I will say to the Senator that in supporting the motion to which the Senator refers, I assumed in voting for it that it was to cut 5 percent from the bill as it stood in the Senate, with the Senate amendments.

Mr. PEPPER. Then the Senator had no intention of stripping the bill which was subjected to the motion of the Senator from Ohio of all the Senate amendments, and all the amendments added by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from New Hampshire does not intend to strip anyone. [Laughter.] What the Senator from New Hampshire intends to do by this motion is to cover the very point raised by the Senator from Florida. Let me read the motion again:

> I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back to the Senate with amendments providing for a reduction in the bill, as reported to the Senate, including committee amendments——

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator stop at that point? The language "as reported to the Senate, including committee amendments" would strike out everything the Senate has added.

Mr. BRIDGES. In this particular instance I do not think the Senate has added anything. With respect to the previous bill, the language would have to be "as it now stands." But with respect to this particular bill, the Senate has not added anything. I am protecting the committee amendments.

Mr. TAFT rose.

Mr. PEPPER. I see the Senator from Ohio on his feet. I merely wish to make clear the significance of the motion. I am indebted to the Senator from New Hampshire for making clear exactly what he intends to do.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that nothing was added by the Senate except the committee amendments which were adopted by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. PEPPER. But the actual effect is the same, because the Senate adopted the amendments reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say further that if the bill were in the same condition as the Federal Security and Labor bill, this motion would have to be altered. As it is, it now protects the committee amendments, as differentiated from the previous motion. But if this were the Federal Security and Labor bill, and we were attempting to do the same thing, this language would have to be amended to read "as the bill now stands."

Mr. PEPPER. As I understand the Senator, he would amend his motion so as to strike out what the Senate did to the bill as it came from the committee.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. With reference to the statement made by the Senator from Florida, the motion which I made on April 28 was a motion to recommit with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate with amendments providing for a reduction equivalent to that provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], which amendment was ruled out of order. It seems to me very clear that if the majority of the Senate wishes to make a reduction, we ought to find a way by which the desire of the majority can be carried into effect. My purpose was to instruct the committee to bring the bill back with exactly the same result that would have occurred if the Bridges-Ferguson amendment had been attached to the bill. Therefore, I had no intention whatever to change either the committee amendments or the amendments offered by the Senator from Florida relating to cancer and heart disease. My purpose was to try to find a way to carry out the effect of the 5-percent amendment which had been offered, for which there was a majority vote, but which had been ruled out of order.

Of course, the parliamentary effect may have been to nullify those amendments. However, the committee also had the power to bring the bill back with those amendments in it again. Therefore the intention of that motion was simply to make a cut in the bill as it had been completed up to that moment by Senate action. That was the intention of the Senator from Ohio. I think the intention is clear if the entire statement is read. Whatever the parliamentary rules might or might not be, I do not think they affect the intention of the Senator from Ohio or change the effect of the adoption of that motion by the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. In other words, the Senator from Ohio was trying to effectuate a saving equal to 5 percent of the amount of the bill which the Senate passed.

Mr. TAFT. Exactly; and, just as the Bridges-Ferguson amendment would not in any way have changed the Senator's amendments with respect to heart disease and cancer, so it certainly was not the intention of my motion to make any such change.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will advise Senators that when a bill is recommitted to the committee from which it emanates, such action nullifies all amendments that have been agreed to on the floor of the Senate, and the bill goes back to the committee—if it happens to be a House bill—in the same shape in which it came to the Senate from the House, regardless of the intention of any Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that the committee, complying with the intention of the Senate, as indicated by the motion, can report the bill back adopting or recommending as committee amendments, amendments which it formerly recommended, and also amendments which the Senate itself had specifically approved?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee might do that; but the committee would have to act upon the amendments in committee as if no action had previously been taken.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it not within the power of the Senate to control the action of its committees by its own directive? Let me predicate a case, if the Chair will allow me an observation in support of the inquiry. Suppose the Senate had, by motion appropriately made and carried, directed its Committee on Appropriations to eliminate a certain item on page 6. Suppose the bill had been recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to eliminate that item. Would not the legal parliamentary effect be not to strip the bill of every amendment, other than on page 6, which had been added? Would not that be an instruction by the Senate to its subordinate body, the committee, to do what the Senate willed be done?

In this case the context of the record is clear. What the Senator from Michigan and the Senater from New Hampshire were seeking to achieve was a 5-percent over-all cut. They intended that cut to apply not only to what the Senate did, but to the bill as finally passed by the Congress. They intended that there should be a reduction of 5 percent. They did not intend the 5-percent cut to apply merely to one item in the bill.

Again today the Senator from Ohio has clearly indicated what he stated in the record at the time. He merely wanted the bill to come back with a gross saving of 5 percent in the bill as it passed the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire has today reaffirmed the same principle. I am raising the parliamentary question, Is not the Senate the superior body, which has control of the action of its committees? If the intention of the Senate is clear, could there be any parliamentary result to the contrary?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate can instruct its committees as it sees fit. It may make an exception of any amendment which has been agreed to on the floor. However, if it does not make an exception of any amendment agreed to on the floor, the parliamentary effect of recommittal is to nullify all amendments agreed to on the floor. In the recommittal of the bill the other day no exception was made of any amendment. The committee has a perfect right to act upon its own judgment; but in the opinion of the Chair, there is no automatic exception with regard to any amendment agreed to in the Senate prior to recommittal of the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree with the distinguished Vice President that a motion to recommit without instructions would have exactly the effect stated by the Vice President. But does the Vice President agree with me that the motion made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio carried instructions that the committee report the bill with reductions in the appropriations in the amount of the savings specified? Inasmuch as those instructions were stated in the motion, I ask whether under those instructions the bill would take the course the distinguished Vice President has said it would take in regard to nullifying the committee amendments and the amendments added on the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is only academically before the Senate; but the Chair is inclined to state rather an ex cathedra opinion.

However, the motion, as made, did not make specific exemption in the case of any amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the distinguished Vice President now hold that in order to have such exception made, an instruction to that effect would have to be given to the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If any committee amendment is agreed to in a form different from that carried in the bill as reported to the floor of the Senate, the Chair is of the opinion that instructions should be given as to that. Otherwise, the action of the Senate on amendments is nullified by the adoption of a motion to recommit.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, let me call attention to the terms of the motion. They were that the bill be recommitted, and thereafter be reported to the Senate with amendments providing for a reduction of appropriations equivalent to that provided by the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Michigan. It seems to me that the intention was perfectly clear, namely, to do exactly what that amendment would have done. That amendment would not have wiped out the Pepper amendments or any of the other amendments.

Of course, from a parliamentary standpoint, I think it is clear that when the bill is recommitted, all amendments made to the bill are wiped out, for in that case the bill is returned to the committee, and thereafter the committee will report the bill once more to the Senate, and no doubt thereafter it would be necessary for the committee to have all committee amendments approved again. No doubt that is the rule.

However, it seems to me that the language of the motion was clear as to its intent, which was simply to have the committee again report the bill to the Senate, but carrying provision for the same kind of reduction of appropriations which would have been required if the amendment of the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from New Hampshire had been adopted.

Mr. AIKEN obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Vermont; and he is not required to yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I understand that if the bill is recommitted, when the committee again reports the bill to the Senate it will be subject to amendment, just as it was in the first place, when first reported to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, in examining the bill, I find that out of some $2,000,000,000 of appropriations for the postal service, approximately $1,500,000,000—or 75 percent of the total amount of appropriations carried by the bill—would be used to pay the salaries of postmasters, post office clerks, clerks in the third-class post offices, city mail carriers, RFD carriers, star route carriers, and railway mail clerks. It seems to me that the postal clerks, RFD carriers, city carriers, and the other post office personnel are not now overpaid. I do not believe that at this time they can stand a cut in their salaries or in the case of the RFD carriers, a cut in the payments allowed to them for using their cars in the postal service. In fact, bills now pending in the Congress look toward increasing the pay received by such persons.

However, the bill carries approximately $500,000,000 of appropriations for other expenses of the Post Office Department; and as to that amount, I think savings may be made.

I am willing to have the bill recommitted, in an effort to see whether the committee can cut $100,000,000 out of that $500,000,000, by means of making appropriate cuts, other than cuts in the appropriations for the pay of postal personnel.

However, if the motion to recommit is adopted, and if the bill subsequently is reported by the committee with provision for the making of cuts from the pay of the postal clerks, rural free delivery carriers, or any of the other postal personnel of that type, I shall not only feel free to vote against amendments providing for such cuts, but I actually intend to do so.

It is only with that understanding that I shall vote to recommit the bill, so as to see whether the committee can make some reductions in the $500,000,000 of appropriations for other purposes carried by the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to recommit the bill with instructions. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McMAHON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM]. If he were present, I understand he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] are absent on official business.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is absent because of illness.

The Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico would vote "nay," and the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea."

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea," and the Senator from Idaho would vote "nay."

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Alabama would vote "nay," and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay," and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea."

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] is paired on this vote with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM]. If present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut would vote "yea," and the Senator from North Carolina would vote "nay."

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If present and voting, the Senator from Oklahoma would vote "nay," and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea."

If present and voting the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is necessarily absent, and is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. If present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] would note "nay."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] is absent by leave of the Senate, and is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ]. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], would vote "yea" and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness, and is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] is absent by leave of the Senate, and is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR]. If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] would vote "yea," and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] would vote "nay."

So Mr. BRIDGES' motion to recommit with instructions was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill H. R. 3083 was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. CORDON, Mr. REED, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief announcement for the benefit of all Senators. After the conclusion of the consideration of H. R. 3704, which is now the unfinished business, the Senate will then proceed to consider Calendar 213, Senate bill 526, introduced by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] and other Senators, which is a bill to provide for the reorganization of the Government agencies, and for other purposes.

LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL—RECONSIDERATION OF MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Can the majority leader say whether the chairman of the Appropriations Committee intends to bring up tomorrow the motion made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] to reconsider the vote by which House bill 3333, the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. LUCAS. In answer to the inquiry propounded by the able minority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations be permitted to answer the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I did not make the motion. The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island made the motion, and I understand that he expects to bring it up some time tomorrow afternoon. I shall let the Senator speak for himself.

Mr. GREEN. I am not prepared to make a definite statement.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the distinguished majority leader will yield further——

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I feel it is a very important motion, and if it is the intention to bring it up, I think an announcement a little in advance would be appreciated by all Members of the Senate. I trust the majority leader will work that out.

Mr. LUCAS. I certainly agree.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator cannot yield for a parliamentary inquiry without unanimous consent.

Mr. LUCAS. I merely want to say I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that when the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, and the mover of the motion, the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, finally conclude upon the day they desire to bring it up, I shall notify the Senator from Nebraska immediately.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope that will be done.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the understanding now that it might be taken up tomorrow?

Mr. McKELLAR. It might be.

Mr. WHERRY. That would not allow very much time after the giving of notice.

Mr. LUCAS. So far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to let it go over.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say that I have conferred with the author of the motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 3333 was recommitted, and with other Senators, and it will be satisfactory if a vote be had on Monday.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. LUCAS. With that understanding, we shall vote on the motion to reconsider at some time during next Monday's session.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS, 1950—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAYBANK. No motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the Treasury and Post Office bill was just passed, nor was a motion made to lay on the table. Free conferees were suggested to be appointed by the Chair. I understand they were appointed. What is the parliamentary situation in connection with the Treasury and Post Office bill that was just passed? Can a motion be made to reconsider it tomorrow?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion can be made within 2 days to reconsider any bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I make that motion now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator moves to reconsider the vote by which the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill was passed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Is the motion in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina has a right to enter the motion.

Mr. TAFT. He has a right to enter the motion, but otherwise it is not in order during consideration of the pending District of Columbia revenue bill. Is not that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is true.

Mr. MAYBANK. I make the motion now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator enters the motion now to reconsider.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the motion be laid on the table.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that action on the motion would prevent the bill from going to conference. The Senator can only enter the motion; he cannot make the motion at this time. Therefore a motion to lay the motion on the table is not in order.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter the motion if it cannot be acted upon. I withdraw the entry of the motion.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, May 12, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 11 (legislative day of April 11), 1949:

DEPUTY UNITED STATES SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE IN EUROPE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Father Charles J. D. Corcoran, O. P., Dominican House of Studies, offered the following prayer:

Dear God, we, the leaders of thy people so bounteously blessed, prostrate our minds and hearts before Thee. Thou hast made us all to know Thee, to love Thee, and to serve Thee in this world, that we may be happy with Thee forever in heaven. Enlighten our minds and move our hearts to follow that way of life ourselves and to prescribe it for Thy people.

Teach us to walk in the footsteps of Moses, the first great lawgiver of Thy people. We have emerged from a bath of blood far worse than the trials of Egypt. We are treading the desolate path to the promised land of peace. Let not the sins of Thy people prolong our exile in the desert. Increase our faith, strengthen our confidence in Thy all-powerful help, make our past sufferings efficacious for future peace.

O God, Thou hast made us the foster fathers of Thy children. Move us to pray for them every day, so that our laws may become a living spirit in their hearts. Give to our citizens the grace that listening they may hear Thy voice in our laws. Move them to follow the wisdom, which do Thou inspire in our deliberations. Bless our beloved Nation with peace and prosperity forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BOARD OF VISITORS, COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

MAY 11, 1949.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am informed by Representative CLARK W. THOMPSON, of Texas, that he will be unable to attend the meeting of the Board of Visitors of the Coast Guard Academy to be held on May 13 and 14 in New London, Conn. I wish to appoint Hon. PHIL J. WELCH, of Missouri, to attend this meeting in Mr. THOMPSON's place.

Thanking you and with kindest personal regards, I am

Yours very sincerely,
S. O. BLAND, Chairman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FOGARTY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a magazine article.

Mr. TAURIELLO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on Representative LANHAM published in the Buffalo Evening News.

Mr. ADDONIZIO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

ANTIDEFAMATION LEAGUE

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, the Appendix of the RECORD for Monday indicates that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] referred in this language to one of our finest American organizations, one that is doing a tremendous job to advance democracy in this country.

His reference, which I quote, is "The Antidefamation League, a Communist outfit, that has for its object the persecuting of white gentile Americans."

The chairman of that organization is none other than the Hon. Meier Steinbrink, a former Republican leader of the county of Kings, and for many years past a most respected and respectable member of the New York State Supreme Court. He was twice nominated to that high office by both major political parties. Ten of your colleagues in this Congress are members, many of us having been affiliated with it during most of our adult lives.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

Let me quote to you from the official literature of the Antidefamation League what its purpose is:

It is to advance proper understanding among American groups and preserve and translate into greater effectiveness the ideals of American democracy.

The Antidefamation League is dedicated to the preservation and enrichment of America's democratic legacy. It believes that America is a great nation with a great destiny. It believes that those gaps and shortcomings in our performance as a nation that prevent us from fully achieving the ideals of freedom which motivated the founding fathers must—and will—be overcome. The Antidefamation League seeks by education and the force of public opinion to promote better human relations among all Americans.

It is an integral part of the world-famous B'nai B'rith with a history of patriotic service to the United States going back to pre-Civil War days. It has received citations of commendation from the American Red Cross, the United States Army, the United States Navy, and the President of the United States, as well as from many others whose Americanism cannot be questioned.

The instant attack is unwarranted and baseless. It can originate only from intolerant, bigoted thinking.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HUBER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. RIBICOFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Francis S. Murphy.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include certain statements and extracts.

Mr. McSWEENEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from a young boy from his district, Don Rogers, relative to the proposed national medical program.

Mr. THOMPSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain correspondence.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. MERROW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include a resolution from the Rockingham County Medical Association, and also a resolution of the New Hampshire State Legislature.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Wisconsin State Journal.

Mr. COLE of New York (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence.

Mr. HARVEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. WILLIAM L. PFEIFFER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. RIEHLMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Hon. FRANCES BOLTON, of Ohio, on May 7, 1949, in Syracuse, and also a telegram sent by Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., on that occasion.

Mr. BEALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the Washington Post.

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an original poem on the State of Iowa.

Mr. MARCANTONIO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter written to the New York Post.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take the time to reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER], but I know what I am talking about.

I expect to introduce a resolution to have this so-called Antidefamation League investigated. When we turn the pitiless sunlight of merciless publicity onto that subversive organization, the House will be astounded and the American people will be shocked.

But, Mr. Speaker, I just want to talk a moment about veterans' legislation.

This morning the Committee on Veterans' Affairs turned down my program and adopted one which will shut out six out of every seven World War I veterans who reach the age of 65 years. The bill will be brought up under the general rules of the House, and every opportunity will be afforded to offer amendments.

Under the bill, as it was written, World War I veterans would have been paid, by the year 2000, a total of $14,782,000,000.

Under the amendment adopted this morning, on a roll call, they will be paid, up to and including the year 2000, $2,027,000,000, or less than one-seventh of the amount, which they would have received under my original bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

ANTIDEFAMATION LEAGUE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot let the occasion go by without commenting on the canard that the gentleman from Mississippi was guilty of when he called the Antidefamation League subversive.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand that those words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words objected to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot let the occasion go by without commenting on the canard that the gentleman from Mississippi was guilty of when he called the Antidefamation League subversive.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. There are too many "left-handed" compliments being passed around this House all the time on both sides.

The word "canard" to me conveys the idea that a man has told a falsehood. Therefore, if anybody desires to move to strike it from the RECORD—without objection, the word "canard" will be stricken from the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. RANKIN. I object, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 376 Members have answered to their names; a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is not going to proceed any further under the 1-minute rule. In view of that I will withdraw my motion.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2682) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock-Piling Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2682, with Mr. GORE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] had 26 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] had 23 minutes remaining. Before the Committee rose, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] had been recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan at this time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, just before the Committee rose last night, I had made the statement that this bill would not be before us today were it not for the misstatements made by the President in the campaign last fell.

The Commodity Credit Corporation was set up back in 1933 as an independent agency of the Federal Government, incorporated under a Delaware charter, with very broad powers, and authority almost without limitation in the agricultural field. The life of the Corporation was determined by the Congress. Periodically we continued the Commodity Credit Corporation as a Delaware corporation until last year, when under the Corporation Act the life of the Corporation would have expired had we not rechartered it as a Federal corporation, which was done. That removed all limit of time in which it should function. In other words, we made it a permanent agency of the Government within the Department of Agriculture.

We provided a board of five directors, three of whom would be from the Department of Agriculture and two appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate who are not connected with the Department of Agriculture. Under questioning this year Mr. Brannan said that the Board had been functioning very nicely, that the two independent members had cooperated splendidly, that there had been no interference whatsoever with the work of the Board.

Many of us think of the Commodity Credit Corporation as an agency which has solely to do with the support of farm prices. We lose sight of the fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation has other purposes than the support of farm prices. The activities of the Corporation may be grouped into the following major categories: The price-support program, a supply program, a foreign-purchase program, a commodity-export program, a loan program for agricultural conservation purposes, and a subsidy program. Much of their wartime activity is now being liquidated, if it has not been quite liquidated: so, you see, the Corporation has other duties and functions than to support farm prices, and it was for that reason that we did not think last year that it was good business on the part of the Government to turn over to one individual, whether he be an esteemed member of the Cabinet, or even the President himself, the administration of $4,750,000,000 without restraint. Under the bill which we have before us today, in setting up this new Board, in providing that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have supervision and direction of the Commodity Credit Corporation—and all of the other members of the Board being appointed from the Department of Agriculture—we, of course, would in fact be turning over to the Secretary of Agriculture the administration of $4,750,000,000 to do with as he pleased so long as he confined himself to the very particular purposes of the Commodity Credit Corporation. That is one of the major controversies in the bill. I do not believe that the President of the United States during the war, I do not believe that President Roosevelt during the war, ever had the authority to manipulate without standards and without restraint as much money as you seek to make available to the Secretary of Agriculture in this bill. This is one very fundamental and basic objection to the bill.

The other objection to the bill has to do with the availability of storage facilities and the authority under this bill to socialize the warehousing, storage, and elevator industry in the United States. The President, in Dexter, Iowa, on September 18, 1948, made some pretty bitter statements which were not predicated upon fact; so I, having in mind that we surely did not want to charge the President with being intellectually dishonest in his campaign, questioned Mr. Brannan in respect to whether the President had ever been advised during the campaign that the Department of Agriculture through the Commodity Credit Corporation had been disposing of surplus grain storage facilities; whether on the very day that the President made the statement he did at Dexter, Iowa, on September 18, 1948, in which he charged that the price of farm commodities was going down because the very bad Eightieth Congress had not made them available. I asked Mr. Brannan if the President of the United States had been advised that on that very day the Commodity Credit Corporation was disposing of surplus grain facilities. And to the President's credit, Mr. Brannan said he did not remember ever having discussed the matter with the President. So that eliminates all criticism of the President of the United States as being intellectually dishonest in respect to this storage matter.

The statements of the President in that speech, however, were not correct because under the Commodity Credit Corporation charter the Commodity Credit Corporation is not prevented from furnishing storage to farmers, and, secondly, the Commodity Credit Corporation in the past did not furnish any storage facilities to farmers except they did sell storage bins to farmers after the Commodity Credit Corporation determined that such storage bins were in excess of its needs.

Mr. Chairman, these are the facts as elicited from Mr. Brannan's testimony before our committee:

On May 31, 1948, the Commodity Credit Corporation had an inventory of 20,742 grain bins. On February 28, 1949, the Commodity Credit Corporation had an inventory of 17,783 grain bins. Between May 31, 1948, and February 28, 1949, the Commodity Credit Corporation had disposed of 2,959 grain bins with a total capacity of about 8,078,070 bushels.

It is interesting to note the dates on which these bins were disposed of, and I want to call attention to the fact, as I read these figures, how rapidly the disposal of these bins sloughed off to nothing after the President made the statement he did on September 18 at Dexter, Iowa.

During June and July, 1948, they disposed of 1,220 bins; in August and September, 1948, they disposed of 871 bins; in October and November—most of them in October—they disposed of 771 bins and after that up to the present time they have disposed of only 97 grain bins.

Of course, after the President charged that the Eightieth Congress had made it impossible for them to get grain storage facilities it was inconsistent with that position for the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue to sell grain storage facilities although it had been their policy for a year or so before that to do just that very thing. As a matter of fact, in the last few years a small percentage of bins had been rented, mostly to elevators; some space had been rented to farmers. The Commodity Credit Corporation has been following the policy of disposing of grain bins for some time.

At one time the Commodity Credit Corporation owned 62,929 grain bins against its May 31, 1948, inventory of 20,742. Up to that time they had gotten rid of about 42,000 steel grain bins. You may add to that 78,437 wooden grain bins, or a total capacity for about 300,000,000 bushels of grain. All of these wooden bins, the 78,000, have been disposed of, and all but 20,000 of the steel bins had been disposed of before May 31, 1948. So,

So that eliminates all criticism of the President of the United States as being intellectually dishonest in respect to this storage matter.

The statements of the President in that speech, however, were not correct because under the Commodity Credit Corporation charter the Commodity Credit Corporation is not prevented from furnishing storage to farmers, and, secondly, the Commodity Credit Corporation in the past did not furnish any storage facilities to farmers except they did sell storage bins to farmers after the Commodity Credit Corporation determined that such storage bins were in excess of its needs.

Mr. Chairman, these are the facts as elicited from Mr. Brannan's testimony before our committee:

On May 31, 1948, the Commodity Credit Corporation had an inventory of 20,742 grain bins. On February 28, 1949, the Commodity Credit Corporation had an inventory of 17,783 grain bins. Between May 31, 1948, and February 28, 1949, the Commodity Credit Corporation had disposed of 2,959 grain bins with a total capacity of about 8,078,070 bushels.

It is interesting to note the dates on which these bins were disposed of, and I want to call attention to the fact, as I read these figures, how rapidly the disposal of these bins sloughed off to nothing after the President made the statement he did on September 18 at Dexter, Iowa.

During June and July, 1948, they disposed of 1,220 bins; in August and September, 1948, they disposed of 871 bins; in October and November—most of them in October—they disposed of 771 bins and after that up to the present time they have disposed of only 97 grain bins.

Of course, after the President charged that the Eightieth Congress had made it impossible for them to get grain storage facilities it was inconsistent with that position for the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue to sell grain storage facilities although it had been their policy for a year or so before that to do just that very thing. As a matter of fact, in the last few years a small percentage of bins had been rented, mostly to elevators; some space had been rented to farmers. The Commodity Credit Corporation has been following the policy of disposing of grain bins for some time.

At one time the Commodity Credit Corporation owned 62,929 grain bins against its May 31, 1948, inventory of 20,742. Up to that time they had gotten rid of about 42,000 steel grain bins. You may add to that 78,437 wooden grain bins, or a total capacity for about 300,000,000 bushels of grain. All of these wooden bins, the 78,000, have been disposed of, and all but 20,000 of the steel bins had been disposed of before May 31, 1948. So, we can put it this way, that all of the wooden bins have been disposed of, and that out of the 62,929 steel bins they only have remaining 17,783.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARIES

All of the bins have been disposed of in the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Ohio, Kansas, and Nebraska. Do you recognize any of those States as reasonably large growers of grain? Of course, you do. I repeat, that it has been the policy of the Commodity Credit Corporation to dispose of surplus grain storage facilities for years, and at the very time that the President was charging that he did not have grain storage facilities enough, the Commodity Credit Corporation was selling surplus grain bins.

Now let us take a look at the act which we passed. I might say the reason why the Commodity Credit Corporation was not authorized to acquire real estate was for the same reason that I am arguing against sections of this bill which would authorize them to do it. Under the bill which we have here today, if it is adopted, the Commodity Credit Corporation or the Secretary of Agriculture, if you will turn it over to him, will have the authority to use any part which he has left of $4,750,000,000 to buy every warehouse, every elevator, every other kind of storage facility in the United States. You turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to socialize the grain storage and warehousing industry in the United States.

Those are things last year which we were fighting against, but we did not curtail in any manner the authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue to make and enter into and carry out such contracts or agreements as are necessary in the conduct of its business. We did not prohibit, as a matter of fact, we specifically provided that the Commodity Credit Corporation may contract for the use, in accordance with the usual customs of trade and commerce, of plants and facilities for the physical handling, storage, processing, servicing, and transportation of agricultural commodities subject to its control.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. Before the gentleman gets into a discussion of the other features, I want to emphasize one point. If the present proposal is defeated, then what actually happens is that the bill passed last year remains in full force and effect; in other words, there will be no end or abolition of the Commodity Credit Corporation, but it will merely continue to operate under the corporate act passed last year instead of this new one now before the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is absolutely correct. It will not prohibit the Commodity Credit Corporation from doing anything that it ever has done up to the present time. I want to call your attention also to the act of last year, if I may, that there was an exception to the prohibition against the acquiring or leasing of real estate. They may rent offices and renew leases as they have heretofore, so they may still continue their functions. But, we sought to compel them, and they should be compelled, to use ordinary trade channels in the storage of grain.

The point here is that the Commodity Credit Corporation was never set up to store grain except that grain on which they had made a loan. They had never been set up and they never should be set up to go into competition with private elevators and private warehousemen in the storage of grain or any other commodity. That is what we sought to prevent, and I hope we shall continue that as a policy. Otherwise, you make it possible to socialize this very important segment of our industry, and I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that if you give the United States Government the authority to socialize the storage, transportation, and processing of grain and these other commodities, you will have effectively given the Government the authority to socialize the agricultural industry, as a most important segment of our entire economy. If you socialize agriculture, then it will follow only naturally, of course, that the other segments of our economy will fall in line. It would be a very simple thing to do.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that the bill we passed last year gave the Commodity Credit Corporation the authority to acquire land and real estate?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I said they would not have it. They had the authority to continue the facilities they had and to continue the leasing of those facilities they had. There was nothing which would have prevented them from continuing or renewing the leases they had on existing facilities.

Mr. JENSEN. Does not the gentleman feel that it is necessary in order to carry on this program that the Commodity Credit Corporation should have some authority to purchase some of the land on which these facilities are placed?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not without some restriction. They never have done it.

This is the point. Let us understand this. They had every authority in the world, the broadest authority in the world up to June 29 of last year to buy any amount of property if they wanted to buy it, with $4,750,000,000 to do it. They never have bought these facilities, and they know it. They have leased them. They have entered into contracts with them, and they got along splendidly until a political issue was made of this. This bill is predicated on political expediency and nothing else.

Mr. JENSEN. They did have authority to lease real estate?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and we did not take away from them the authority to continue those leases.

Mr. JENSEN. That is the answer I wanted.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that at the very time it was being charged against the Eightieth Congress by the President that we had failed to provide storage facilities for grain the Commodity Credit Corporation was disposing of storage facilities it had?

Mr. WOLCOTT. They disposed of only about 800 bins after he made that statement, but up to that time, between June 1 and the time he made the statement, they had disposed of over 2,000 last year. Altogether they disposed of 2,959, with storage capacity of 8,078,000 bushels, after, you understand, the 1948 act was passed, which had been the policy for years before that date.

Mr. HALLECK. I heard the gentleman say, and I think very fairly, that in view of the fact that Secretary Brannan had not discussed the matter with the then candidate, the gentleman holds that he was not intellectually dishonest in what he said. However, speaking for myself, it looks to me as if he was being very careless with the facts to make the sort of charge that was there made in view of the circumstances.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman have any figures to show how much was paid for these grain bins that were sold to private interests?
